IMPEACHMENT BY THE U. S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. The manner of impeachment in this country is by a written charge and accusation made by the House of Representatives to the Senate. The Senate alone can try impeachment. The persons liable are the President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the federal government. The offenses charged must consist of "treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors" (Const., art. ii., sec. 4). No person can be convicted without the concurrence of two thirds of the members. The only occasion upon which a President has been impeached was the case of President Andrew Johnson, upon the removal by the latter of Mr. Stanton, Secretary of War, contrary (as was alleged) to the provisions of the Tenure of Office Act. The resolution for impeachment was adopted by the House February 24, 1868. Articles were presented on the 29th, and adopted March 2: Messrs. Stevens, of Pennsylvania; Butler, of Massachusetts; Bingham, of Ohio; Boutwell, of Massachusetts; Wilson, of Iowa; Williams, of Pennsylvania, and Logan, of Illinois, were chosen managers for the prosecution. On March 5, the Senate was organized as a court, Chief Justice Chase presiding. On the 23d the President appeared by his counsel, Messrs. Curtis, Evarts, Groesbeck, Nelson, and Stanbery. The trial closed May 26 with the acquittal of the President. The vote on the 2d and 11th charge was, "guilty," 35; not guilty, 19. The transference of one vote from the latter to the former list would have given the requisite two thirds in favor of conviction.

IMPERIAL GUARD of France was created by Napoleon from the Guard of the Convention, the Directory, and the Consulate, when he became emperor in 1804. It consisted at first of 9775 men, but was afterward enlarged. It was subdivided in 1809 into the Old and Young Guard. In Jan., 1814, it numbered 102,706. It was dissolved by Louis XVIII. in 1815, but revived by Napoleon III. in 1854. It took part in the Crimean War in 1855.

IMPOSTORS. The names and pretensions of religious, political, and other impostors would fill a volume; they have been of every country, of every age. The following are among the most extraordinary: Aldebert, a Gaul, who in 743 pretended he had a letter from the Redeemer, which fell from heaven at Jerusalem; he seduced multitudes to follow him into woods and forests, and to live in imitation of John the Baptist. He was condemned by a council at Rome in 745.

Mohammed promulgated his creed, 604. See Mohammedanism.

Gonzalvo Martin, a Spaniard, pretended to be the angel Michael in 1359; he was burnt by the Inquisition in Spain in 1360.

George David, son of a waterman at Ghent, styled himself the Son of God, sent into the world to adopt children worthy of heaven: he denied the resurrection, preached against marriage, in favor of a community of women, and taught that the body only could be defiled by sin; he had many followers; died at Basle, 1556, promising to rise again in three years.

Otrefeh, a monk, pretended to be Demetrius, the son of Ivan, czar of Muscovy, whom the usurper Boris had put to death; he maintained that another child had been substituted in his place: he was supported by the arms of Poland; his success astonished the Russians, who invited him to the throne, and delivered into his hands Feodor, the reigning czar, and all his family; his imposture being discovered, he was assassinated in his palace, 1606.

Sabbata Levi, a Jew of Smyrna, amused the Turks and Jews a long time at Constantinople and other places by personating our Savior, 1666.

IMPOSTORS EXTRAORDINARY IN BRITISH HISTORY.

A man pretending to be the Messiah, and a woman assuming to be the Virgin Mary, were burnt, 1222.

In 1487, Lambert Simnel, tutored by Richard Simon, a priest, supported by the Duke of Burgundy, personated the Earl of Warwick. Simnel's army was defeated by Henry VII., and he was made a scullion in the king's kitchen.

For Perkin Warbeck's imposture in 1492, see Warbeck. Elizabeth Barton, styled the Holy Maid of Kent, spirited up to hinder the Reformation by pretending to inspirations from heaven, foretelling that the king would have an early and violent death if he divorced Catharine of Spain and married Anne Boleyn. She and her confederates were hanged at Tyburn, 1534.

In 1553 (first year of Mary's reign after her marriage with Philip of Spain), Elizabeth Croft, a girl 18 years of age, was secreted in a wall, and with a whistle, made for the purpose, uttered many seditious speeches against the queen and the prince, and also against the mass and confession, for which she did penance. William Hacket, a fanatic, personated our Savior, and was executed for blasphemy, 1591.

Valentine Greatrix, an Irish impostor, who pretended to cure all diseases by stroking the patient: his imposture deceived the credulous, and occasioned very warm disputes in Ireland and England about 1666. Boyle and Flamsteed believed in him.

Dr. Titus Oates. See Oates.

Robert Young, a prisoner in Newgate, forged the hands of the Earls of Marlborough, Salisbury, and other nobility to a pretended association for restoring King James: the lords were imprisoned, but the imposture being detected, Young was fined £1000, and put in the pillory, 1692. Afterward hanged for coining. Three French refugees pretend to be prophets, and raise tumults; convicted as impostors, Nov., 1707.

Mary Tofts, of Godalming, by pretending she bred rabbits within her, so imposed upon many persons (among others, Mr. St. Andre, surgeon to the king) that they espoused her cause, 1726.

The Cock-lane ghost imposture, by William Parsons, his wife, and daughter, 1762. See Cock-lane Ghost. Joanna Southcote, who proclaimed her conception of the Messiah, and had a multitude of followers; she died Dec. 27, 1814.

W. Thom. See Thomites.

Joseph Smith. See Mormonites.

IMPRESSMENT OF SEAMEN, affirmed by Sir M. Foster to be of ancient practice. The statute 2 Rich. II. speaks of impressment as a matter well known, 1378. The first commission for it was issued 29 Edw. III., 1355. Pressing, either for the sea or land service, declared to be illegal by the British Parliament, Dec., 1641. Impressment was not resorted to in the Russian War, 1854-5.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT. See Arrests, Debtors, and Ferrars's Arrest.

IMPROPRIATION (applying ecclesiastical property to lay purposes). On the suppression of abbeyes in 1539, their incomes from the great tithes were distributed among his courtiers by Henry VIII.; and their successors constitute 7597 lay impropriators.

INCENDIARIES. The punishment for arson was death by the Saxon laws and Gothic constitutions. In the reign of Edward I. incendiaries were burnt to death. This crime was made high treason by statute 8 Hen. VI., 1429; and it was denied benefit of clergy, 21 Hen. VIII., 1528. Great incendiary fires commenced in and about Kent in August, 1830, and in Suffolk and other counties since. The punishment of death was remitted, except in special cases, in 1827. The acts relating to arson were amended in 1837 and 1844.

INCH. See Standard. The length was defined in 1824 by the declaration by act of Parliament that 39·13029 inches is the length of a seconds pendulum in the latitude of London, vibrating in vacuo at the sea level, at the temperature of 62° Fahrenheit.

INCOME TAX. In 1512, the English Parliament granted a subsidy of two fifteenths from the commons, and two tenths from the clergy, to enable the king to enter on a war with France.—Rapin. In 1798, Mr. Pitt proposed and carried, amid great opposition, increased taxes "as an aid for the prosecution of the war" with France. On Jan. 9, 1799, this act was repealed, and graduated duties on income proposed, beginning with £60 per annum. On Aug. 11, 1803, was passed the "property tax," which levied a rate of 5 per cent. on all incomes above £150, and lower rates on smaller incomes. In 1805 it was increased to 6½ per cent., and in 1806 was raised to 10 per cent., embracing the dividends at the bank. It produced

In 1800.....£5,716,572	In 1806.....£11,500,000
1804.....4,650,000	1808.....16,748,985
1805.....5,937,500	1815.....14,978,557

The tax produced from lands, houses, etc., £8,657,937; from funded and stock properties, £2,885,505; the profits and gains of trade, £3,831,088; and salaries and pensions, £1,174,456. Repealed March, 1816.

Sir Robert Peel's Bill imposing the present tax at a rate of 7d. in the pound (£2 18s. 4d. per cent.) per ann., to subsist for three years, passed June 22, 1842. It produced about £5,350,000 a year, and enabled Sir Robert Peel to repeal about £12,000,000 of indirect taxes.

Renewed for three years in March, 1845; and March, 1848.*

Continued for one year in 1851 and 1852.

The tax of 7d. limited to seven years (till 1860); to be gradually reduced in amount; but all incomes from £100 to £150 made liable to 5d. in the pound for all that period: the tax also extended to Ireland, June, 1853.

* Large meetings assembled in Trafalgar Square, London, March 6, 7, 1848 (for the ostensible purpose of opposing the Income Tax); rioting ensued, which was soon quelled.

In consequence of the Crimean War, the rate was doubled, 1854, 14d.

2d. more added to the tax on incomes above £150, and 1½d. on those between £100 and £150; the former being 1s. 4d., the latter 1½d. in the pound, 1855.

The former assessment reduced to 7d., the latter to 5d., 1857.

Both become 5d., 1858.

The former raised to 9d., the latter to 6½d.; and the tax on incomes derived from lands, tenements, etc., raised from 3½d. to 5½d. for England, and from 2½d. to 4d. for Scotland and Ireland, July, 1859.

The assessment on incomes raised—to to those above £100 to 7d.; to those above £150 to 10d.

[The object of the increase was to provide for a deficiency occasioned by extra expenditure for defending the country, April, 1860.]

A committee to inquire into the working of the income tax appointed, Feb. 14, 1861.

Reduction of the last assessment from 7d. to 6d., and from 10d. to 9d. for three quarters of the financial year 1861-2.

The rates of 6d. and 9d. to continue, April, 1862.

The rate of 7d. on all chargeable incomes; 3½d. on farms, etc., in England; and 2½d. in Scotland and Ireland. Incomes under £100 a year exempted; those above £100 and under £200 allowed an abatement of £60, June 8, 1863.

The rate of 6d. on chargeable incomes, with some exemptions and abatement, May 13, 1864.

The rate of 4d. on chargeable incomes, with same exemptions and abatement, May, 1865.

INCOME TAX IN THE UNITED STATES. In the United States the annual income of every person, when exceeding $600 and not exceeding $10,000, over and above rent actually paid for homestead, shall pay a duty on the excess over $600, 5 per cent.; exceeding $10,000, on excess over $600, 5 per cent.; income from United States securities, 1½ per cent. All persons are obliged to make a return of their incomes to the treasurer. Any failure to pay the income tax at the time appointed adds 5 per cent. to the tax. In 1866 the tax was levied only on the excess over $1,000.

INCUMBERED ESTATES. See Encumbered Estates.

INCURABLES. The Royal Hospital for incurables, founded by Dr. Andrew Reed, at Carshalton, in Surrey, in 1850, has since been removed to the village of Putney.

INDEMNITY BILL, by which the minister of the crown, or the government generally, is relieved from the responsibility of measures adopted in extreme and urgent cases, without the previous sanction of Parliament. One was passed April 19, 1801; another to indemnify ministers against their acts during the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act was carried in the Commons (principal divisions, 190 to 64), and in the Lords (93 to 27), March 10, 1813. In 1848 and 1857, bills of indemnity were passed for the suspension of the Bank Charter Act by the ministry. See Oblivion. An indemnity bill is passed at the end of every session of Parliament for persons who transgress through ignorance of the law. The practice began in 1715.

INDEPENDENTS, or CONGREGATIONALISTS, hold that each church or congregation is independent of all others, and may govern itself in religious matters. They say there is no absolute occasion for synods or councils, whose resolutions may be taken to be wise and prudent advice, but not as decisions to be peremptorily obeyed; they affirm that one church may advise or reprove another, but has no authority to excommunicate or censure. Robert Brown preached these views in 1585, but, after 32 imprisonments, he eventually conformed to the Established Church. A church was formed in London in 1593, when there were 20,000 Independents. They were driven by persecution to Holland, where they formed several churches; that at Leyden was under Mr. Robinson, often regarded as the author of Independency. In 1616 Henry Jacobs returned to England and founded a meeting-house. Cromwell, who was himself of their views, obtained them toleration, in opposition to the Presbyterians. The Independents published an epitome of their faith, drawn up at a conference at the Savoy in 1658; and the Congregational Union of England and Wales, formed in 1831, published their "Declaration of Faith, Order, and Discipline" in 1833. In 1851 they had 3244 chapels for 1,067,760 persons in England and Wales. See Worship. The first Independents in Scotland were the Glascow, which see. The first Independent church in America was founded by John Robinson at Plymouth, New England, in 1620.

INDEX EXPURGATORIUS, a catalogue of the books prohibited by the Church of Rome, first made by the Inquisitors, and approved by the Council of Trent, 1559. The Index of heretical books, by which the reading of the Scriptures was forbidden (with certain exceptions) to the laity, was confirmed by a bull of Pope Clement VIII. in 1595. Most of the celebrated works of France, Spain, Germany, and England are prohibited. On June 25, 1864, Hugo's "Les Misérables" and many other books were added to the number. Several books were inserted in it in Jan., 1866.

INDIA or HINDOSTAN. The Hindoo histories ascribe their origin to a period ages before the ordinary chronologies. A race of kings is mentioned as reigning 2300 B.C., and Buddhism is said to have been introduced 956 B.C. Many ancient nations, particularly the Tyrians and Egyptians, carried on much commerce with India. It was conquered by Darius Hystaspes, who formed an Indian satrapy in 512 B.C.; and by Alexander, 327 B.C., and subsequently the intercourse between India and the Roman Empire was much increased. The authentic history of Hindostan is reckoned to commence with the conquests of Mahmud Ghazni, A.D. 1004.—Rennell. See Bengal, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, and Oude for farther details.* For the new route to India, see Waghorn.

[The Mogul Empire now became merely nominal, distinct and independent sovereignties being formed by numerous petty princes. The emperors were of no political consequence from this period. In 1761, Shah Alum II., attacking the English, was defeated at Patna. In 1764, after the battle of Buxar, he was thrown upon the protection of the English, who established him at Allahabad. After the victory at Delhi in 1803, Gen. Lake restored the aged monarch to a nominal sovereignty, which descended at his death to his son, Akbar Shah. Akbar died in 1837, and was succeeded by the last King of Delhi (his son), who received a pension of about £125,000 per annum. He joined the mutiny in 1857; was tried in 1858, and transported to Rangoon; died there Nov 11, 1862.]

* British India extends from 8° to 34° N. lat., and from 70° to 90° E. long. (exclusive of the Burmese additions). The population is about 50 millions; that of the whole peninsula about 176 millions. Cotton was planted in 1829, and the tea-plant in 1834. Railways and the electric telegraph are being rapidly constructed, and canals for irrigation. See Ganges Canal. The Indian revenue in the year 1854-5 was £20,371,450. The expenditure, £22,915,160. In 1858-9, the revenue was £36,060,788; expenditure, £49,642,359.

* On the introduction of the improved (Enfield) musket in the Indian army, greased cartridges had been brought from England. These were objected to by the native soldiers, and the issue of them was immediately discontinued by orders in Jan. 1857. A mutinous spirit, however, gradually arose in the Bengal native army. In March several regiments were disbanded, followed by others, till in June the army had lost by disbandment and desertion about 30,000 men. On April 5, a Sepoy, and on April 20, a jemadar, or native lieutenant, were executed. At the end of May 34 regiments were lost. In April, 85 of the 3d Bengal native cavalry at Meerut refused to use their cartridges. On May 9 they were committed to jail. On Sunday, the 10th, a mutiny in the native troops broke out; they fired on their officers, killing Col. Finnis and others. They then released their comrades, massacred many Europeans, and fired the public buildings. The European troops rallied and drove them from their cantonments. The mutineers then fled to Delhi, which see.

† At the end of June the native troops at the following places were in open mutiny: Meerut, Delhi, Ferozapore, Allyghur, Roorkie, Miran, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Narnowabad, Narnowach, Hansi, Hussar, Jhansi, Mehidpore, Jullundur, Azimghur, Futteghur, Jaunpore, Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Allahabad. At the stations printed in italics, European women and children were massacred.—The Relief Fund for the sufferers in India was commenced Aug. 25, 1857. The queen, Louis Napoleon, and the sultan gave each £1000. In Nov., 1857, £380,749 had been collected; in Nov., 1858, £433,620. In Dec., 1861, £140,000 had been distributed to sufferers in India; and £100,000 to those at home; £246,069 remained for the benefit of widows and orphans. A fast was observed on Oct. 7.

Sir John Macpherson.....	Feb. 1, 1785
Sir John Shore (afterward Lord Teignmouth), Oct. 23, 1793

* Several of these appointments are those of governors general provisionally, having been first in rank in the council, and holding office on the resignation of the governors general, or pending their arrival and assumption of the government; as, for instance, Sir Alured Clarke, Sir George Hilario Barlow, Hon. William Butterworth Bayley, William Wilberforce Bird, etc. The appointments of governors general were, of course, of earlier date than their assumption of office.

* Lord Palmerston brought in a bill for the purpose on Feb. 12, which was accepted by the House on Feb. 18. He resigned on the following day, and the bill dropped. A similar bill was introduced by Mr. Disraeli on March 12; but many of its details being objected to, it was withdrawn. On Lord John Russell's proposition, the House proceeded to consider the matter by way of resolutions; on June 17, Lord Stanley brought in the above-mentioned bill, being the third on the subject introduced during the session.

INDIANA, a Western state of North America, was settled in 1730, and admitted into the Union Dec. 11, 1816.

INDIANS. The American Indians or aborigines are diminishing in numbers before the march of civilization. The whole number within the domain of the United States in 1853 was estimated at 400,764, distributed as follows: Eastward of the Mississippi, 17,000; in Minnesota, and along the frontiers of the Western states and Texas (mostly emigrants from the East), 110,000; on the Plains and among the Rocky Mountains, 63,000; in Texas, 29,000; New Mexico, 45,000; in California, 100,000; Utah, 12,000; Oregon and Washington, 23,000. The following are some of the principal events in Indian history, as connected with European settlements:

War between Indians and whites in Oregon and Washington; Indians subdued.....1856

The Indians were very weak after the war which closed in 1857, and were glad to accept and observe peace. Colorado and Kansas were rapidly settled during this era of peace, railroads were extended toward the Plains, and telegraph and express lines were established across them. At last, having two or three regiments of Territorial troops organized and in the service of the government, doing garrison duty at the various forts in the Territory, the people of Colorado, anxious to possess the land on which the Indians were located, began hostilities against them. On April 11, 1864, a band of friendly Cheyennes were accused of stealing cattle, and, though they denied the charge, and explained that the Kiowas had committed the outrage, the Colorado troops attempted, in obedience to orders from their captain, to disarm the Indians. The latter resisted, and in the fight which ensued the Colorado men were worsted. Colonel Chivington, then commanding, as an officer of United States Volunteers, the District of Colorado, gave orders to his various subordinates to commence a regular series of operations against the Indians. In obedience to these orders, Major Downing attacked and destroyed an Indian camp near Fort Dodge, killing forty men, women, and children. The Indians at once attempted to bring about an understanding, expressing themselves anxious for peace, and making efforts to secure it. Left Hand, a chief of the Cheyennes, and Little Raven, a chief of the Arapahoes, with their bands, made their appearance simultaneously before Fort Larned and Fort Lyon, and made overtures of peace. Little Raven was kindly received at Fort Lyon by Major Wynkoop, commanding at that point, who told him that Colonel Chivington was at Fort Dodge, and would settle the terms of peace with Left Hand. But that chief, on approaching Fort Larned, was fired upon by orders of Colonel Chivington and compelled to fly for safety. When Little Raven heard of this affair he abandoned his camp in front of Fort Lyon, and, moving north on the Smoky Hill Overland Route, began to depredate on the trains and committed several outrages, in which the rest of the Arapahoe and all the Cheyenne tribes refused to engage, and which all condemned. Subsequently Lieutenant Ayres encountered a band of peaceful Indians near Fort Larned; invited their chief into his camp, shot him, and then attacked the band, killing many. The Indians did not abandon their attempts at securing a peace, though they seemed to have lost all hope of success. They had confidence in Major Wynkoop and Colonel Colley, their agent; these officers had been steadfastly friendly to them, and 2000 of the two tribes, under the principal chief of the Cheyennes, Black Kettle, made application on Sept. 10, 1864, to them to bring about a council at which peace might be concluded. Major Wynkoop met the Indians near Fort Lyon, told them he had no power to conclude a peace, but promised the tribe the protection of the United States while the principal chiefs went with him to Denver City and conferred with Governor Evans. This protection the tribes finally accepted; they pitched their camp near Fort Lyon, while Black Kettle and other chiefs called on the governor. They were referred by him to Colonel Chivington, who decided that he could not make peace without consulting his superiors. He advised the Indians to return to Fort Lyon, remain there under Major Wynkoop's protection while he consulted with the commander of the department. Accepting his assurances of safety, they returned to Fort Lyon, and remained in camp under the care of Major Wynkoop. This officer was soon relieved by Major Anthony, under orders from Colonel Chivington, and he repeated every assurance of protection. Here the Indians remained in camp for two months, protected and fed by Major Anthony. In the mean time Colonel Chivington had collected about 1000 men from various forts in the Territory, and on Nov. 28, 1864, made his appearance at Fort Lyon. At daylight on the next morning, against the entreaties and protests of Major Anthony, he marched out of Fort Lyon, attacked the Indian camp, and put (as he claims) over 500 men, women, and children to the sword under circumstances of great cruelty. From this time forward all efforts at conciliation were abandoned. The Indians began their depredations in earnest; an alliance of the five principal tribes of the Plains, the Comanches and Kiowas of Arkansas, the Cheyennes and Arapahoos of Colorado, and the Sioux and their numerous adherents of Nebraska and Dakota, was formed, and the war began in earnest. The routes to the West were continually interrupted, and hundreds of emigrants fell victims to the vengeance of the Indians. At last the "Chivington massacre" was avenged by the slaughter on Dec. 21, 1866, of a portion of the garrison of Fort Philip Kearney. Then the government began to take steps for the protection of its troops and the overland routes and railroads, and the present expeditions of Generals Hancock and Sully were planned. General Hancock has, with apparent indecision, been engaged in holding councils with the Indians, but while doing so has gradually placed his forces on the Upper Arkansas River, and thus interposed between and separated the Comanches and Kiowas from their allies, the Cheyennes and Arapahoos. The forces moving along the Platte River have succeeded in interposing in the same manner between the Sioux and Cheyennes and Arapahoos; and thus the allied Indians are debarred from concentration, and indeed from co-operative action. The Sioux and Crows, and the other tribes of the North, have actively engaged the whites of Montana, Dakota, and Nebraska, and have committed many depredations on the Platte River route and the Union Pacific Railroad; but the Cheyennes, Arapahoos, Kiowas, and Comanches appear to be subjugated into inactivity.

With regard to the United States Civil War in 1861, the Choctaws joined the Confederates, who permitted two Choctaw delegates to sit in Congress; the first being Sampson Folsom and Eastman Loman; but the principal chief of the Cherokees, on May 4, 1861, issued a proclamation of neutrality, which was maintained with great difficulty.

INDICTION, a cycle of tributes orderly disposed for fifteen years, not known before the time of Constantine. The first examples in the Theodosian Code are of the reign of Constantius, who died 361.—In memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Maxentius, 8 Cal. Oct., 312, the Council of Nice ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, but by the Indiction, which has its epocha 313, Jan. 1. It was first used by the Latin Church in 342.

INDIGO. Its real nature was so little known in Europe that it was classed among minerals, as appears by letters-patent for erecting works to obtain it from mines in the principality of Halberstadt, dated Dec. 23, 1705; yet what Vitruvius and Pliny called indicum is supposed to have been our indigo.—Beckmann. The first mention of indigo occurs in English statutes in 1581. Its cultivation was begun in Carolina in 1747. The quantity imported into Great Britain in 1840 was 5,831,269 lbs.; in 1845, 10,127,488 lbs.; in 1850, 70,482 cwt.; in 1859, 63,237 cwt.; in 1861, 83,109 cwt.; in 1864, 76,214 cwt. The use of coal-tar dyes will no doubt lessen the consumption of indigo. See Aniline.

INDIUM, a metal discovered in the arsenical pyrites of Freiberg by F. Reich and T. Richter in 1863. Its name is due to its giving an indigo blue ray in its spectrum.

INDUCTION of electric currents, discovered by Faraday, and announced in his "Experimental Researches," published in 1831-2. Ruhmkorff's magneto-electric induction coil was constructed in 1850.

INDULGENCES for the pardon of sin, commenced by Leo III. about 800, were granted in the 11th century by Gregory VII., and by Urban II. and others in the 12th century as rewards to the Crusaders. Clement V. was the first pope who made public sale of indulgences, 1313. In 1517, Leo X. published general indulgences throughout Europe, and the resistance to them led to the Reformation.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS ACT, 21 & 22 Vict., c. 48 (1857), was enacted to make better provision for the care and education of vagrant, destitute, and disorderly children. Another act was passed 1861. Forty-seven of these schools had been certified under these acts up to Sept. 29, 1864.

INFANTICIDE, FEMALE, was very prevalent in barbarous countries. Lord Macartney stated that 20,000 infants were killed annually; it is now gradually decreasing in India. On Nov. 12, 1851, Mr. Raikes induced the Chohan chiefs to agree to resolutions against it, and a great meeting in the Punjab was held for the same purpose, Nov. 14, 1853.

INFANTRY, the modern term for foot soldiers, much improved during the wars of Charles V. and Francis I. in the 16th century. The British army comprised 99 regiments of regular infantry in 1858, when the Canadians raised a regiment which is termed the 100th. The number, now 109, includes the Indian army.

INFANT SCHOOLS began in London in 1818.

INFERNAL MACHINE. See France, 1800-1835; and Baltic, note.

INFIRMARIES. Ancient Rome had no houses for the cure of the sick. Diseased persons were carried to the Temple of Æsculapius for cure, as Christians were taken to churches. Institutions for the accommodation of travelers, the indigent, and sick, and the first infirmaries, or hospitals, were built close to cathedrals and monasteries. The Emperor Louis II. caused infirmaries situated on mountains to be visited, 855. In Jerusalem the knights and brothers attended on the sick. There were hospitals for the sick at Constantinople in the 11th century. The oldest mention of physicians and surgeons established in infirmaries occurs in 1437.—Beckmann. See Hospitals.

INFUSORIA. See Animalcules.

INGOUR, a river rising in the Caucasus and falling into the Black Sea. Omer Pasha, marching to the relief of Kars, crossed this river on Nov. 6, 1855, with 10,000 men, and attacked the Russians, 12,000 strong, who, after a struggle, retreated with the loss of 400 men. The Turks had 68 killed and 242 wounded. Kars, however, was not saved.

INK. The ancient black inks were composed of soot and ivory-black, and Vitruvius and Pliny mention lamp-black; but they had inks of various colors, as red, gold, silver, and purple. Red ink was made of vermilion and gum. INDIA INK was brought from China, and must have been in use by the people of the East from the earliest ages, most of the artificial Chinese productions being of very great antiquity. It is usually brought to Europe in small quadrangular cakes, and is composed of a fine black and animal glue.—Beckmann. INVISIBLE OR SYMPATHETIC INKS, fluids which, when written with, will remain invisible until after a certain operation, were known at early periods. Ovid (A.D. 2) teaches young women to deceive their guardians by writing to their lovers with new milk, and afterward making the writing legible with ashes or soot. Receipts for preparing invisible ink were given by Peter Borel in 1653, and by Le Mort in 1669.—Beckmann.

INKERMANN (Crimea). The Russian army (about 40,000) having received re-enforcements, and being encouraged by the presence of the grand-dukes Michael and Nicholas, attacked the British (8000) near the old fort of Inkermann before daybreak, Nov. 5, 1854. The latter kept their opponents at bay for six hours till the arrival of 6000 French. The Russians were then driven back, leaving behind 9000 killed and wounded. The loss of the Allies was 462 killed, 1952 wounded, and 191 missing. Sir George Cathcart, and Generals Strangways, Goldie, and Torrens, were among the slain. On Nov. 15, 1855, an explosion of about 100,000 lbs. of gunpowder occurred near Inkermann, and caused great loss of life.

INLAND REVENUE OFFICE was constituted in Feb., 1849. It comprises the excise, stamps, and taxes.

INNS OF COURT, London, were established at different periods, in some degree as colleges for teaching the law. The Temple was founded, and the Church built by the Knights Templars, 32 Hen. II., 1185. The Inner and Middle Temple were made Inns of law in the reign of Edw. III., about 1340; the Outer not until the reign of Elizabeth, about 1560.—Stow's Survey. The following inns were founded, viz.:

INOCULATION. See Small-pox. Lady Mary Wortley Montagu introduced inoculation from small-pox to England from Turkey. In 1718 she had her own son inoculated at Adrianople with perfect success; and she was allowed to have it tried, for the first time in England, on seven condemned criminals, 7 Geo. I., 1721. In 1722 two of the royal family were inoculated. The practice was preached against by many of the bishops and other clergy from that period until 1760. Dr. Mead practiced inoculation very successfully up to 1754, and Dr. Dimsdale, of London, inoculated Catharine II., empress of Russia, in 1768. Of 5964 who were inoculated in 1797-99, only three died. Inoculation was forbidden by law in 1840. Dr. Zabdiel Boylston introduced inoculation in the United States at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1721. His own son, six years old, and two servants, were his first patients. He was successful. Other physicians made his experiments a cause for defaming his character. The practice was forbidden by the authorities, and the common people became so excited that at one time they paraded the streets with halters, declaring their intention of hanging him. He triumphed, his practice became popular, and on going to England in 1725 he was honored with a membership in the Royal Society. Vaccine inoculation was introduced by Dr. Jenner, Jan. 21, 1799; he had discovered its virtue in 1796, and had been making experiments during the intermediate three years. A hospital for inoculation was erected in 1746. See Sheep.

INQUISITION, or HOLY OFFICE. Previous to Constantine (306), heresy and spiritual offenses were punished by excommunication only; but shortly after his death capital punishments were added, and inquisitors were appointed by Theodosius, 382. Priscillian was put to death about 385. Justinian decreed the doctrine of the four holy synods as to the Holy Scriptures and their canons to be observed as laws, 529; hence the penal code against heretics. About 800 the power of the Western bishops was enlarged, and courts were established for trying and punishing spiritual offenders, even with death. In the 12th century many heresies arose, and during the crusades against the Albigenses, Gregory IX., in 1233, established by rules the inquisitorial missions sent out by Innocent III. some years previously, and committed them into the hands of the Dominicans. Pietro da Verona, the first inquisitor who burnt heretics, was assassinated by an accused gonfalonier, April 6, 1252, and was afterward canonized.

The Holy Office was reinstituted in Spain by Ferdinand and Isabella. 1480
Nearly 3000 persons burnt in Andalusia, and 17,000 suffer other penalties. 1481
"Instructions" of the new tribunal promulgated, Nov. 29, 1484

New articles were added. 1488 and 1498
The establishment of the Inquisition was resisted in Naples, and only introduced into other parts of Italy with jealous limitations by the temporal power. 1540-7

New ordinances in 81 articles compiled by the inquisitor general, Valdez. 1561
Carnesecchi executed at Rome, 1567, and Galileo compelled to abjure his opinions. 1634
The tribunal abolished in Tuscany and Lombardy, 1787
Never firmly established in France; totally abolished by Henry IV. by the Edict of Nantes, 1598.
Louis XIV. revoked the edict, but refused to introduce the Inquisition, 1685. Suppressed in Spain by Napoleon, Dec. 4, 1808, and by the Cortes. Feb. 12, 1813

Finally abolished by the Cortes. 1820

[Llorente states that in 236 years the total amount in Spain of persons put to death by the Inquisition was about 32,000; 291,000 were subjected to other punishments. The last person burnt was at Seville, Nov. 7, 1781, being a woman accused of making a contract with the devil.]

INSANITY. See Lunatics.

INSOLVENCY. The first insolvent act was passed in 1649, but it was of limited operation; a number of acts of more extensive operation were passed at various periods, and particularly in the reign of George III. The benefit of the act known as the Great Insolvent Act was taken in England by 50,733 insolvents from the time of its passing in 1814 to March, 1827, a period of thirteen years. Since then the acts relating to insolvency have been several times amended. Persons not traders, or, being traders, whose debts are less than £300, might petition the Court of Bankruptcy, and propose compositions, and have pro tem. protection from all process against their persons and property, by 6 Vict., c. 116 (1842). In 1861, by the New Bankruptcy Act, the business of the Insolvent Debtors'

Court was transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy; and a number of imprisoned debtors were released in Nov., 1861. In May, 1837, a commercial crisis occurred in the U. S. Failures to the amount of more than $100,000,000 occurred. Banks generally suspended specie payment. A general bankrupt law was passed by Congress, Aug. 9, 1841. Another crisis occurred in 1857. The banks throughout the U. S. suspended specie payment, but soon resumed. During the Civil War of 1861-4 the banks suspended specie payment, which they have not yet resumed (1869).

INSTITUTE OF FRANCE. On Oct. 25, 1795, all the Royal Academies, viz., the French Academy, the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres, that of the Mathematical and Physical Sciences, of the Fine Arts, and of the Moral and Political Sciences, were combined in one body, under the title of "Institut National," afterward Royal, and now Imperial.

INTENDMENT OF CRIMES. In cases of treason, wounding, burglary, etc., where intention proved was made as punishable as crime completed by 7 Geo. II., 1734. The rigor of this act was modified by Sir Robert Peel's revision of the statutes 4-10 Geo. IV., 1823-29.

INTERDICT, or ECCLESIASTICAL CENSURE, seldom decreed in Europe till the time of Gregory VII., 1073, but often afterward. When a prince was excommunicated, all his subjects retaining their allegiance were excommunicated also, and the clergy were forbidden to perform any part of divine service, or any clerical duties, save the baptism of infants, and taking the confessions of dying penitents. In 1170, Pope Alexander put all England under an interdict; and when King John was excommunicated in 1208, the kingdom lay under a papal interdict for six years. England was put under an interdict on Henry VIII. shaking off the pope's supremacy, 1535; and Pope Sixtus V. published a crusade against Queen Elizabeth of England in 1588. See Excommunication.

INTEREST. The word was first used in an act of Parliament of the 21st James I., 1623, wherein it was made to signify a lawful increase by way of compensation for the use of money lent. The rate fixed by the act was £8 for the use of £100 for a year, in place of usury at £10 before taken. The Commonwealth lowered the rate to £6 in 1650; and by an act of the 13th of Queen Anne, 1713, it was reduced to £5. The restraint being found prejudicial to commerce, it was totally removed by 17 & 18 Vict., c. 90 (1854). Interest on money in the U. S. varies in the different states. The usual amount is 7 per cent. There are stringent usury laws, but these are evaded, and as high as 3 or 4 per cent. a month has been asked and obtained.

INTERIM OF AUGSBURG, a decree issued by the Emperor Charles V. in 1548, with the view of attempting to reconcile the Catholics and Protestants, in which it entirely failed. It was revoked in 1552. The term Interim has been applied to other decrees and treaties.

INTERNATIONAL. See Copyright and Exhibition.

INUNDATIONS. The following are among the most remarkable:

An inundation of the sea in Lincolnshire laid under water many thousand acres, A.D. 245.—Camden. Another in Cheshire, by which 5000 persons and an innumerable quantity of cattle perished, 353.

An inundation at Glasgow, which drowned more than 400 families, 768.—Fordun.

The Tweed overflowed its banks, and laid waste the country for 30 miles round, 836.

An inundation on the English coasts demolished a number of sea-port towns, 1014.

Earl Godwin's lands, exceeding 4000 acres, overflowed by the sea, and an immense sand-bank formed on the coast of Kent, now known by the name of the Godwin Sands, 1100.—Camden.

Flanders inundated by the sea, and the town and harbor of Ostend totally immersed, 1108. More than 300 houses overwhelmed at Winchelsea by an inundation of the sea, 1280.

At the Texel, which first raised the commerce of Amsterdam, 1400.

The sea broke in at Dort, and drowned 72 villages and 100,000 people (see Dort), April 17, 1446.

The Severn overflowed during ten days, and carried away men, women, and children in their beds, and covered the tops of many mountains; the waters settled upon the lands, and were called the Great Waters for 100 years after, 1 Richard III., 1483.—Holinshead. Again 4 James I., 1607, the waters rose above the tops of the houses, and above 100 persons perished in Somersetshire and Gloucestershire.—Burns.

A general inundation by the failure of the dikes in Holland, 1530; the number of drowned said to have been 400,000.

At Catalonia, where 50,000 persons perished, 1617. An inundation in Yorkshire, when a rock opened, and poured out water to the height of a church steeple, 1636. Vide Phil. Trans.

Part of Zealand overflowed, 1300 inhabitants were drowned, and incredible damage was done at Hamburg, 1717.

At Madrid, several of the Spanish nobility and other persons of distinction perished, 1723.—Du Fresnoy. In Yorkshire, a dreadful inundation, called Ripon Flood, 1771.

In Navarre, where 2000 persons lost their lives by the torrents from the mountains, Sept., 1787.

Inundation of the Lifey, which did immense damage in Dublin, Nov. 12, 1787. Again, Dec. 2 and 3, 1802.

Lorca, a city of Mercia, in Spain, destroyed by the bursting of a reservoir, which inundated more than 20 leagues, and killed 1000 persons, besides cattle, April 14, 1802.

At Pesth, near Presburg, the overflow of the Danube, by which 24 villages and their inhabitants were swept away, April, 1811.

In the vicinity of Salop, by the bursting of a cloud during a storm, many persons and much stock perished, May, 1811.

Dreadful inundation in Hungary, Austria, and Poland in the summer of 1813.

Overflow of the Danube; a Turkish corps of 2000 men, on a small island near Widdin, surprised, and met instant death, Sept. 14, 1813.

In Silesia, 6000 inhabitants perished, and the ruin of the French army under Macdonald was accelerated by the floods; also in Poland 4000 lives were supposed to have been lost, same year.

At Strabane, Ireland, by the melting of the snow on the surrounding mountains, most destructive floods were occasioned, Jan. 2, 1816.

In Germany, the Vistula overflowed; many villages were laid under water, and great loss of life and property was sustained, March 21, 1816.

In England 5000 acres were deluged in the Fen countries, in June, 1819.

Inundation at Dantzic, occasioned by the Vistula breaking through some of its dikes, by which 10,000 head of cattle and 4000 houses were destroyed, and numerous lives lost, April 9, 1829.

The "Moray Floods," Aug. 9, 1829, when the Spey and Findhorn rose in some places 50 feet above their ordinary level, and caused great destruction of property. Many lives were lost, and whole families who took refuge on elevated places were with difficulty rescued.—Sir T. D. Lauder.

At Vienna, the dwellings of 50,000 of its inhabitants laid under water, Feb., 1830.

10,000 houses swept away, and about 1000 persons perished, at Canton, in China, in consequence of an inundation occasioned by incessant rains. Equal or greater calamity was produced by the same cause in other parts of China, Oct., 1833.

Awful inundation in France: the Saone poured its waters into the Rhone, broke through its banks, and covered 60,000 acres; Lyons was inundated; in Avignon 100 houses were swept away; 218 houses were carried away at La Guillotière; and upward of 300 at Vaise, Marseilles, and Nismes; the Saone had not attained such a height for 238 years, Oct. 31 to Nov. 4, 1840.

Lamentable inundation at Brentford and the surrounding country; several lives lost, and immense property destroyed, Jan. 16, 1841.

Disastrous inundation in the centre, west, and south-west of France; numerous bridges, with the Orleans and Vierzon viaduct, swept away; the latter had cost 6,000,000 of francs. The damage done exceeded £4,000,000 sterling. The Loire rose twenty feet in one night, Oct. 22, 1846.

Inundation of the Mississippi at New Orleans; 160 squares and 1600 houses flooded, May 12, 1849.

INVERNESS (N.W. Scotland), a city of the Picts up to 843. It was taken by Edward I.; retaken by Bruce, 1313; burnt by the Lord of the Isles, 1411; taken by Cromwell, 1649; and by Prince Charles Edward in 1746. He was defeated at Culloden, about five miles from Inverness, April 16, 1746.

INVESTITURE OF ECCLESIASTICS was a cause of discord between the pope and temporal sovereigns in the Middle Ages, and led to actual war between Gregory VII. and the Emperor Henry IV., 1075-1085. The pope endeavored to deprive the sovereign of the right of nominating bishops and abbots, and of investing them with the cross and ring. Henry V. gave up the right, 1111.

INVINCIBLE ARMADA, OR SPANISH ARMADA. See Armada.

INVOCATION OF THE VIRGIN AND SAINTS. The practice of the Romish Church of invoking the intercession of saints with God, particularly the prayers to the Virgin, has been traced to the time of Gregory the Great, 593.—Ashe. The Eastern Church began (in the 5th century) by calling upon the dead, and demanding their suffrage as present in the divine offices; and the Western Church frequently canonized persons the wickedness of whose lives gave them no title to any such honor.

IODINE (from the Greek iodēs, violet-like) was discovered by M. De Courtois, a manufacturer of saltpetre at Paris in 1812, and investigated by M. Clement, 1813. On the application of heat it rises in the form of a dense violet-colored vapor, easily evaporates, and melts at 220 degrees: it changes vegetable blues to yellow, and a seven thousandth part converts water to a deep yellow color, and starch into a purple.

IONA. One of the Hebrides. In 563 St. Columba and his disciples founded a monastery here, which flourished till the 8th century, when it was ravaged by the Norsemen. Other religious bodies afterward were formed, and the isle was long esteemed exceedingly sacred.

IONIA (in Asia Minor). About 1040 B.C. the Iones, a Pelagic race, emigrated from Greece, and settled here and on the adjoining islands. They built Ephesus, Smyrna, and other noble cities. They were conquered by the great Cyrus about 548 B.C.; revolted in 504, but were again subdued. After the victories of Cimon, Ionia became independent, and remained so till 387, when it was once more subjected to Persia. It formed part of the dominions of Alexander and his successors; was annexed to the Roman Empire, and conquered by the Turks.—Ionia was renowned for poets, historians, and philosophers.

IONIAN ISLANDS (on W. coast of Greece). Corfu, the capital, Cephalonia, Zante, Ithaca, Santa Maura, Cerigo, and Paxo. They were colonized by the Iones, and partook of the fortunes of the Greek people; were subject to Naples in the 13th century, and in the 14th to Venice. Population in 1862, 234,123.

IONIC ORDER OF ARCHITECTURE, an improvement on the Doric, was invented by the Ionians about 1350 B.C.—Vitruvius. Its distinguishing characters are the slenderness and flutings of its columns, and the volutes of rams' horns that adorn the capital.

IONIC SECT OF PHILOSOPHERS, founded by Thales of Miletus 570 B.C., distinguished for its abstruse speculations under his successors and pupils, Anaximander, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, and Archelaus, the master of Socrates. They held that water was the origin of all things.

IOWA, a Western state of North America, was organized as a territory June 12, 1838, and admitted into the Union Dec. 28, 1846. Capital, Des Moines.

IPSUS (Phrygia), BATTLE OF, 301 B.C., by which Seleucus was confirmed in his kingdom by the defeat and death of Antigonus, king of Asia. The latter led into the field an army of about 70,000 foot and 10,000 horse, with 75 elephants. The former had 64,000 infantry, besides 10,500 horse, 400 elephants, and 120 armed chariots.—Putarch.

IPSWICH (Suffolk), the Saxon Gippcswic, was ravaged by the Danes, 991. Wolsey was born here, 1471; founded a school in 1525. The port was greatly improved by the erection of wet docks, 1837-42. The railway to London was opened June 25, 1846.

IRELAND is said to have been first colonized by Phenicians. Some assert that the Partholani landed in Ireland about 2048 B.C.; that the descent of the Damnonii was made about 1463 B.C.; and that this was followed by the descent of Heber and Heremon, Milesian princes, from Galicia, in Spain, who conquered Ireland, and gave to its throne a race of 171 kings. Ireland was not attacked by the Romans or Saxons. The population, by the census of 1861, was 5,764,543.

* Payers in Irish workhouses in 1849, 690,000; in 1857, 65,000.

Notes in circulation in 1849, £3,850,400; in 1857, £7,150,000.

Bullion in Irish banks in 1849, £1,635,000; in 1857, £2,492,000.

† The list of Irish sovereigns, printed in previous editions, has been omitted to make room for authentic matter. The Irish writers carry their succession of kings very high, as high as even before the Flood. The learned antiquary, Thomas Jones, of the Scots' College of Paris, expressed his wonder that "the learned men of the Irish nation have not, like those of other nations, yet published the valuable remains of their ancient history whole and entire, with just translations, in order to separate what is fabulous, and only grounded on the traditions of their poets and bards, from what is certain history." "O'Flaherty, Keating, Toland, Kennedy, and other modern Irish historians, have rendered all uncertain, by deducing their history from the Deluge with as much assurance as they deliver the transactions of Ireland from St. Patrick's time."—Anderson. The "Annals of the Four Masters," edited by Dr. Donovan, were published in Irish and English in 1848.

‡ Lord justices and deputies, and latterly LORDS LIEUTENANT. It has been several times proposed to abolish the viceroyalty of Ireland, but without success. The last time, March 23, 1858.

1852. Archibald William, earl of Eglinton, Feb. 28.
 1853. Edward Granville, earl of St. Germain's, Jan.
 1855. George, earl of Carlisle, March.
 1858. Archibald, earl of Eglinton, again, Feb., resigned.
 1859. George, earl of Carlisle, again, June; died Dec. 5, 1864.
 1864. John, lord Wodehouse, Nov. 1.

IRELAND FORGERIES. In 1796 W. H. Ireland made public the Shakspeare manuscripts which he had forged, and deceived many critics. The play, Vortigern, was performed at Drury Lane Theatre on April 2, 1796. He shortly after acknowledged the forgery, and published his "Confessions" in 1805. He died in 1835.

IRIDIUM AND OSMIUM. In 1804 Tennant discovered these two rare metals in the ore of platinum, in which, in 1845, Claus discovered a third, Ruthenium.

IRON was found on Mount Ida by the Dactyles, owing to the forest having been burnt by lightning, 1432 B.C.—Arumetian Marbles. [1407, Hales; 1283, Clin-ton.] The Greeks ascribed the discovery of iron to themselves, and referred glass to the Phenicians. Moses relates that iron was wrought by Tubal-Cain. Iron furnaces among the Romans were unprovided with bellows, but were placed on eminences, with the grate in the direction of the prevailing winds. Swedish iron is very celebrated, and Dannemora is the greatest mine of Sweden.

Belgium was an early seat of the iron manufacture; coal said to have been employed at Marche-les-dames, 1340.

Iron-mills used for slitting iron into bars for smiths, by Godfrey Bochs, 1590.

Tinning of iron introduced from Bohemia, 1681. Till about 1730 iron ores were smelted entirely with wood charcoal, which did not wholly give way to coal and coke till 1788.

The operation termed puddling, and other very great improvements in the manufacture, invented by Mr. Henry Cort, between 1781 and 1826, who did not reap the due reward of his ingenuity.

Mr. Henry Bessemer made known his method of manufacturing iron and steel, which is considered to possess many advantages, 1856.

Strike of the puddlers and lock-out of the masters in Staffordshire, Northumberland, etc., lasted during March, April, and May, 1865.

In 1855, 3,217,154 tons of pig iron were produced; in 1857, 3,659,447 tons; in 1864, 4,767,951 tons.

IRON CROWN (of Italy) is of gold, having inside a ring of iron, said to have been forged from the nails of Christ's cross, and was made by order of Theodelinde for her husband, Agilulf, king of the Longobards, 591. She presented it (to be kept) to the church at Monza. Charlemagne was crowned with this crown, and after him all the emperors who were kings of Lombardy; Napoleon I. at Milan, on May 26, 1805, put it on his head, saying "Dieu me l'a donnée; gare à qui y touchera" (God has given it to me; woe to him who shall touch it). He founded the order of the Iron Crown, which still continues. The crown was removed from Monza to Mantua by the Austrians on April 23, 1859.

IRON MASK, THE MAN WITH THE.* A mysterious

* Some conjecture this person to have been an Armenian patriarch forcibly carried from Constantinople (who died ten years before the mask); others that he was the Count de Vermandois, son of Louis XIV., although he was reported to have perished in the camp before Dixmude. More believe him to have been the celebrated Duke of Beaufort, whose head is recorded to have been taken off before Candia; while still more assert that he was the unfortunate James, duke of Monmouth, who—in the imagination of the Londoners at least—was executed on Tower Hill. There are two better conjectures: he was said to have been either a son of Anne of Austria, queen of Louis XIII., his father being the Cardinal Mazarin (to whom that dowager-queen was privately married), or the Duke of Buckingham; or to have been the twin brother of Louis XIV., whose birth was concealed to prevent the civil dissensions in France which it might one day have caused. The last conjecture was received by Voltaire and many others. It has been more recently conjectured that Fouquet, an eminent statesman in the time of Louis XIV., was the Masque de Fer; and a Count Matthioli, secretary of state to Charles III., duke of Mantua, is supposed by M. Delort, in a later publication, to have been the victim. The Right Hon. Agar Ellis (afterward Lord Dover), in an interesting narrative, prisoner in France, wearing a mask and closely confined, under M. de St. Mars, at Pignerol, Sainte Marguerite, and afterward at the Bastille. He was of noble mien, and was treated with profound respect; but his keepers had orders to dispatch him if he uncovered. M. de St. Mars himself always placed the dishes on his table, and stood in his presence. He died Nov. 19, 1703.

IRON-PLATED SHIPS. See under Navy of England and United States, 1862.

IRUN (a frontier village of Spain). On the 16th of May, 1837, the British auxiliary legion under General Evans marched from St. Sebastian to attack Irun (held by the Carlists), which, after a desperate resistance, was carried by assault, May 17.

IRVINGITES, or the followers of the Rev. Edward Irving, who now call themselves the "Holy Catholic Apostolic Church." They use a Liturgy (framed in 1842, and enlarged 1853), and have Church officers named apostles, angels, prophets, etc. In 1852 lighted candles were placed on the magnificent altar, and burning of incense during prayers was prescribed. The Gothic church in Gordon Square was solemnly opened Jan. 1, 1854. It is said that all who join the Church offer it a tenth of their income. They had 30 chapels in England in 1851.

ISAURIA (a province in Asia Minor) was retaken from the Saracens by the Emperor Leo III., who founded the Isaurian dynasty, which ended with Constantine VI. in 797.

ISERNIA, S. Italy. Here the Sardinian General Cialdini defeated the Neapolitans, Oct. 17, 1860.

ISLÂM, or ESLÂM, submission to God, the name given to Mohammedanism (which see).

ISLE OF FRANCE. See Mauritius, Man, etc.

ISLES, BISHOPRIC OF. This see contained not only the Hebrides, Hebrides, or Western Isles, but the Isle of Man, which for nearly 400 years had been a separate bishopric. The first bishop of the Isles was Amphibalus, 360. The Isle of Ily was in former ages a place famous for sanctity and learning, and early the seat of a bishop; it was denominated Icolmkill from St. Columba, the companion of St. Patrick, founding a monastery here in the 6th century, which was the parent of above 100 other monasteries in England and Ireland. Since the Revolution (when this bishopric was discontinued) the Isles have been joined to Moray and Ross, or to Ross alone. In 1847, however, Argyll and the Isles were made a seventh post-Revolutionary and distinct bishopric. See Bishops.

ISMAIL (Bessarabia). After a long siege by the Russians, who lost 20,000 men before the place, the town was taken by storm, Dec. 22, 1790; when Suwarow, the most merciless warrior of modern times, put the brave Turkish garrison (30,000 men) to the sword, and delivered up Ismail to pillage, and ordered the massacre of 6000 women. By the treaty of Paris in 1856 Ismail was restored to Turkey. It was ceded to Moldavia in 1856.

ISPAHAN was made the capital of Persia by Abbas the Great in 1590. It ceased to be so in 1796, when Teheran became the capital.

ISRAEL, KINGDOM OF. See Jews.

ISSUS (Asia Minor), the site of Alexander's second great battle with Darius, whose queen and family were captured, Oct., 333 B.C. The Persian army, according to Justin, consisted of 400,000 foot and 100,000 horse; 61,000 of the former and 10,000 of the latter were left dead on the spot, and 40,000 were taken prisoners.

ISTHMIAN GAMES received their name from the Isthmus of Corinth, where they were observed; instituted by Sisyphus, about 1406 B.C., in honor of Melicertes, a sea-god.—Langlet. They were reinstituted in honor of Neptune by Theseus, about 1239 B.C.; and their celebration was held so sacred that even a public calamity did not prevent it. The games were revived by Julian, A.D. 362.

endeavors to prove Matthioli to have been the person. The mask, it seems, was not made of iron, but of black velvet, strengthened with whalebone, and fastened behind the head with a padlock.

* Edward Irving was born Aug. 15, 1792, and was engaged as assistant to Dr. Chalmers, at Glasgow, in 1819. In 1829 he attracted immense crowds of most distinguished persons to his sermons at the Scotch church, Hatton Garden. A new church was built for him in Regent Square in 1817. Soon after he pronounced new doctrines on the human nature of Christ; and the "Utterances of Unknown Tongues," which began in his congregation with a Miss Hall and Mr. Tapin, Oct. 16, 1831, were encouraged by him as of divine inspiration. He was expelled from the Scotch Church, March 15, 1833. His church, "reconstituted with the threefold cord of a sevenfold ministry," was removed to Newman Street. He died Dec. 8, 1834.

ISTRIA was finally subdued by the Romans, 177 B. C. After various changes it came under the rule of Venice in 1378.

ITALY (either from Italus, an early king, or italus, a bull-calf) is called the garden of Europe. The invading Pelasgians from Greece, and the Aborigines (Umbrians, Oscans, and Etruscans) combined, form the renowned Latin race, still possessing the southern part of Europe. The history of Italy is soon absorbed into that of Rome, founded 753 B.C. Previous to the 15th century it was desolated by intestine wars and the interference of the German emperors; since then, Spain, France, and Germany have struggled for the possession of the country, which has been divided among them several times. Spain predominated in Italy during the 16th and 17th centuries, but was compelled to yield to the house of Austria at the beginning of the 18th. The victories of Bonaparte in 1797—S changed the government of Italy, but the Austrian rule was re-established at the peace in 1814. In 1848 the Milanese and Venetians revolted and joined Piedmont, but were subdued by Radetzky. The hostile feeling between Austria and Piedmont gradually increased till war broke out in April, 1859. The Austrians were defeated, and the kingdom of Italy, comprising Piedmont, Sardinia, Lombardy, Tuscany, Modena, Parma, the Romagna, Naples, and Sicily, was re-established, March 17, 1861, by the Italian Parliament (consisting of 443 deputies from 59 provinces). On Oct. 29, 1861, the internal government was reorganized; the 59 provinces were placed under prefects, subject to four directors general. In 1861 the population was 21,728,529.—Estimated revenue, £25,000,000; expenditure, £30,000,000. For details, see Rome and the various Italian cities throughout the volume.

ITINERARIES. The Roman Itinerary was a table of the stages between two important places. The "Itineraria Antonini," embracing the whole Roman Empire, usually ascribed to the Emperor Aurelius Antoninus and his successors, A.D. 138-50, was probably based upon the survey made by order of Julius Cæsar, 44 B.C. The "Itinerarium Hierosolymitanum" was drawn up for the use of the pilgrims about 333.

IVRY (near Evreux, N.W. France). Here Henry IV. totally defeated the League army, March 14, 1590.

IVORY was brought to Solomon from Tarshish about 992 B.C. (1 Kings x., 22). The colossal statues of Jupiter, Minerva, etc., by Phydias, were formed of ivory and gold, B.C. 444.

* The following terms are often used with reference to certain periods in the history of Italian literature and art. 1. Trecento (three hundred), from the birth of Dante (1265) to the death of Boccaccio (1375), which two, with Petrarca, are styled "the triumvirate of the Trecento." 2. Quattrocento (four hundred), from 1375 to the revival of Italian literature by Lorenzo de' Medici in the 15th century. During this period Latin was revived, to the prejudice of Italian. 3. Cinquecento (five hundred), from about 1480 to 1590. A sensuous style of art, founded on the heathen mythology, began to prevail. 4. Seicento (six hundred), from 1590 to 1700. The bad taste which prevailed during this period is ascribed to the influence of the Spaniards and the Jesuits throughout Italy. Scientisti is a term of reproach. The Trecento and Cinquecento were the most flourishing periods.

J.

J was distinguished from I by the Dutch scholars of the 16th century, and introduced into the alphabet by Giles Beys, printer, of Paris, 1550.—Dufresnoy.

JACOBINS, the original name of the Dominicans (which see). The Jacobin Club (first called "Club Breton") consisted of about forty gentlemen and men of letters, who met in the hall of the Jacobin friars, at Paris, in Oct., 1789, to discuss political and other questions. Fraternal societies were instituted in all the principal towns of the kingdom.—Burke. The club was closed Nov. 11, 1794.

JACOBITES, a Christian sect, so called from Jacob Baradaeus, a Syrian, about 541. See Eutychians. The partisans of James II. (Latin, Jacobus II.) were so named after his expulsion from England in 1688.

JACOBUS. A gold coin, so called from King James I. of England, in whose reign it was struck, 1603-25.

JACQUARD LOOM. See Loom.

JACQUERIE, a term applied to bands of revolted peasants: first given to a body of them (headed by one Calloit, called Jacques Bonhomme) which ravaged France during the captivity of King John in 1358.

JAFFA, a sea-port of Syria, celebrated in Scripture as Joppa, whence Jonah embarked (about 862 B.C.), and where Peter raised Tabitha from the dead (A.D. 38); in Mythology, the place whence Perseus delivered Andromeda. Jaffa was taken by the Caliph Omar, A.D. 635; by the Crusaders, 1090; and by Bonaparte, March 7-10, 1799; the French were driven out by the British in June, the same year. Here, according to Sir Robert Wilson, were massacred 3500 prisoners by Bonaparte; but this is doubted. Jaffa suffered by an earthquake in Jan., 1837, when it is said that 13,000 persons were killed.

JAGELLONS, a dynasty which at times reigned over Lithuania, Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia, beginning with Jagellon, duke of Bohemia, 1381. It ended with John II. of Poland in 1668.

JAIL DISTEMPER. See note under Old Bailey Sessions Court.

JAMAICA, a W. India island, discovered by Columbus, May 3, 1494. It was conquered from the Spaniards by Admiral Penn, with land forces commanded by Venables, May 3, 1655. Population in 1861, 13,816 whites; 81,074 colored; 346,374 blacks.

JAMESTOWN, BATTLE AT. Fleeing slowly before Lafayette and Wayne from the interior of Virginia toward the coast, in the summer of 1781 Cornwallis crossed the James River at old Jamestown, to make his way to Portsmouth. As he was about to cross, he was attacked by the Americans under Wayne, and a severe conflict ensued. Wayne struck his blow and fell back to the main army. His loss was considerable, but he seriously damaged the British army.

JANISSARIES (Turkish jeni teheri, new soldiers), an order of infantry in the Turkish army; originally young prisoners trained to arms; were first organized by Orcan about 1330, and remodeled by his son Amurath I. about 1360; their numbers were increased by later sovereigns. In later days they degenerated from their strict discipline, and several times deposed the sultan. Owing to an insurrection of these troops on June 14, 1826, when nearly 3000 of them were killed, the Ottoman army was reorganized, and a firman was issued on June 17 abolishing the Janissaries.

JANSENISTS, persons who embraced the doctrines of Cornelius Jansen, bishop of Ypres, who died in 1638. He was a prelate of piety and morals, but his "Augustinus," a book in which he maintained the Augustinian doctrine of free grace, kindled a fierce controversy on its publication in 1640, and was condemned by a bull of Pope Urban VIII. in 1642. Through the Jesuits, its vehement opponents, Jansenism was condemned by Innocent X. in 1653, and by the bull Unigenitus, issued by Clement XI. in 1713. This bull the French Church rejected. Jansenism still exists at Utrecht and Haarlem. See Port Royalists.

JANUARY derives its name from Janus, an early Roman divinity. January was added to the Roman calendar by Numa, 713 B.C. He placed it about the winter solstice, and made it the first month, because Janus was supposed to preside over the beginning of all business. In 1751 the legal year in England was ordered to begin on Jan. 1 instead of March 25.

JANUS, TEMPLE OF, at Rome, was erected by Romulus, and kept open in time of war, and closed in time of peace. During above 700 years it was shut—under Numa, 714 B.C.; at the close of the first Punic War, 235 B.C.; and under Augustus, 29, and 25 B.C.; during that long period of time the Romans were continually employed in war.

JAPAN, an Asiatic empire, composed of five large and many small islands (Nippon the principal). It was visited by Marco Polo, the Venetian traveler, in the 13th century; and by Mendez Pinto, a Portuguese, about 1535 or 1542, whose countrymen shortly after obtained permission to found a settlement. The Jesuit missionaries who followed made a great number of converts, who sent a deputation to Pope Gregory XIII. in 1582; but a fierce persecution of the Christians began in 1590, aggravated, it is said, by the indiscreet zeal and arrogance of the Jesuits: thousands of the converts suffered death; and in 1639 the Portuguese were utterly expelled from the empire. The Dutch trade with Japan commenced about 1600 under severe restrictions, and has since been frequently suspended. The learned Engelbert Kemper visited Japan in 1690, and published an account of it, with plates. In 1860, an embassy, numbering about 70 persons, was sent by the Tycoon of Jeddo, or supreme ruler of Japan, to the United States, for the purpose of exchanging treaties. They arrived in Washington, D. C., by the way of California and the Isthmus. This was the first embassy ever sent by the Japanese to a Christian nation.

An American expedition, under Commodore Perry, reaches Jeddo, and is favorably received; but remains only a few days. July 8, 1853

Some English, French, and American vessels bombard his forts and his vessels. July 15, 19, 1863

Reparation demanded; £100,000 paid by the government; the Prince of Satsuma resists payment of £25,000, his portion; Admiral Kuper enters the Bay of Kagosima, and is fired upon, whereupon he bombards the town and burns the prince's steamers. Aug. 15, "

He pays the £25,000. Dec. 14, "

The Japanese minister announces that the ports opened by virtue of the treaties will be closed June 24, "

The Japanese government refuse to abide by the treaties; a combined fleet enters the Straits of Simonosaki, Sept. 4, and attacks and destroys the Japanese batteries. Sept. 5, 6, 1864

Major Baldwin and Lieut. Bird murdered, Nov. 20, for which two assassins were executed in Dec., "

The Japanese government are stated to be endeavoring to reduce the power of the nobles, Aug., 1865

JARNAC (W. France). On March 13, 1569, the Duke of Anjou, afterward Henry III. of France, here defeated the Huguenots under Louis, prince of Condé, who was killed in cold blood by Montesquieu. The victor (seventeen years of age), on account of his success here and at Moncontour, was chosen King of Poland.

JASMINE, or JESSAMINE, Jasminum officinale, a native of Persia, etc., was brought hither from Circassia before 1543. The Catalonian jasmine came from the East Indies in 1629, and the yellow Indian jasmine in 1656.

JASSY, the capital of Moldavia, frequently occupied by the Russians; taken by them in 1739 and 1769. A treaty between them and the Turks was signed here Jan. 9, 1792.

JAVA, a large island in the Eastern Archipelago, is said to have been reached by the Portuguese in 1511, and by the Dutch in 1595. The latter, who now possess it, built Batavia, the capital, about 1619. See Batavia. The atrocious massacre of 20,000 of the unarmed natives by the Dutch, sparing neither women nor children, to possess their effects, took place in 1740. The island capitulated to the British, Sept. 13, 1811. The sultan was dethroned by the English, and the hereditary prince raised to the throne, in June, 1813. Java was restored to Holland in 1814. In Aug., 1860, the Swiss soldiers, aided by the natives here, murdered, but were soon reduced, and many suffered death.

JEAN DE LUZ, St. (S. France, near the Pyrenees). Soult's strong position here was taken by General Hill and Marshal Beresford, Nov. 10, 1813.

JEDDA, the port of Mecca, Arabia. On June 15, 1858, the fanatic Mohammedans rose and massacred twenty-six of the Christian inhabitants, among them the English and French consuls and part of their families; but many fled to the shipping. On the delay of justice, Commodore Pullen bombarded the town, July 25 and 26. On Aug. 6 eleven of the assassins were executed; the ringleaders also were afterward executed.

JEDDO, or YEDDO, the capital of Japan, on the island of Nippon, contains about 2,000,000 inhabitants. The emperor's palace is said to have a hall of audience supported by pillars of massive gold, and three towers, each nine stories high, covered with gold plates. On Dec. 23, 1854, and Nov. 11, 1855, severe earthquakes occurred: during the latter, 57 temples, 100,000 houses, and about 30,000 persons were destroyed. See Japan.

JE MAINTIENDRAI, "I will maintain," the motto of the house of Nassau. When William III. came to the throne of England he continued this, but added "the liberties of England and the Protestant religion," at the same time ordering that the old motto of the royal arms, "Dieu et mon droit," should be retained on the great seal, 1689.

JEMAPPES (N. W. Belgium), the site of the first pitched battle gained by the French Republicans (under Dumouriez), in which 40,000 French troops forced 19,000 Austrians, who were entrenched in woods and mountains, defended by redoubts and many cannon, Nov. 6, 1792. The number killed on each side was reckoned at 5000.

JENA AND AGERSTADT (Central Germany), where two battles were fought, Oct. 14, 1806, between the French and Prussians. The French were commanded at Jena by Napoleon, and at Agerstadt by Dawons; the Prussians by Prince Hohenlohe at the former place, and the King of Prussia at the latter. The Prussians were defeated, losing nearly 20,000 killed and wounded, and nearly as many prisoners, and 200 field-pieces; the French lost 14,000 men. Napoleon advanced to Berlin, and issued the Berlin decree (which see).

JENNERIAN INSTITUTION, founded 1803. See Vaccination.

JERSEY. The chief island of the Channel Archipelago (which includes Guernsey, Sark, Alderney, etc.), formerly held by the Romans in the 3d and 4th centuries after Christ—Jersey being termed Cæsarea. The isles were captured by Rollo, and thus became an appanage of the duchy of Normandy, and were united to the crown of England by his descendant, William the Conqueror. The inhabitants of the Channel Islands preferred to remain subjects of King John at the period of the conquest of Normandy by Philip Augustus, and, while retaining the laws, customs, and (until lately) the language of their Continental ancestors, have always remained firm in their allegiance to England. Almost every war with France has been characterized by an attack on Jersey, the most successful of which, under the Baron de Rullecourt, was defeated by the English garrison and Jersey militia, commanded by Major Pierson, Jan. 6, 1781. Mr. J. Bertrand Payne, in his "Armorial of Jersey" and his "Gossiping Guide," has exhaustively treated the general and family history of the island. The population of the isles in 1861 was 91,147.

JERUSALEM, called also SALEM, 1913 B.C. (Gen. xiv., 18). Its king was slain by Joshua, 1451 B.C. It was taken by David 1048 B.C., who dwelt in the fort, calling it the city of David. See Jews.

"JERUSALEM DELIVERED," the great Italian epic, by Tasso, was published in 1580.

JESTER is described as "a witty and jocose person, kept by princes to inform them of their faults, and those of other men, under the disguise of a wag-gish story." Several of our kings, particularly the Tudors, kept jesters. Rayher, the founder of St. Bartholomew's Priory, West Smithfield, London, 1133, is said to have been a court jester and minstrel. There was a jester at court in the reigns of James I. and Charles I., but we hear of no licensed jester afterward.

JESUITS, the society or company of Jesus, was founded by Ignatius Loyola, a page to Ferdinand V. of Spain, subsequently an officer in his army, and afterward canonized. Having been wounded in both legs at the siege of Pampeluna in 1521, he devoted himself to theology, and renounced the military for the ecclesiastical profession. He dedicated his life to the Blessed Virgin as her knight; made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and on his return laid the foundation of his society at Paris, Aug. 16, 1534. He presented its institutes in 1539 to Pope Paul III., who made many objections; but Ignatius adding to the vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience, a fourth of implicit submission to the Holy See, the institution was confirmed by a bull, Sept. 27, 1540; the number of members was not to exceed sixty. That restriction was taken off by another bull, March 14, 1543; and popes Julius III., Pius V., and Gregory XIII. granted great privileges. Francis Xavier, and other missionaries, the first brothers, carried the order to the extremities of the habitable globe, but it met with great opposition in Europe, particularly in Paris. See Paraguay and Jansenists.

JESUIT'S BARK, called by the Spaniards fever-wood; discovered, it is said, by a Jesuit about 1535 (and used by the order). It is taken from the cinchona or chinchona tree. Its virtues were not generally known till 1633, when it cured of fever the lady of the viceroy at Peru. It was sold at one period for its weight in silver, and was introduced into France in 1649; and it is said to have cured Louis XIV. of fever when he was dauphin. It came into general use in 1680, and Sir Hans Sloane introduced it here about 1700. The cinchona plant was largely planted in the Nilgherry Hills, India, in 1861, and is thriving greatly. See Quinine.

JESUS CHRIST, the SAVIOR OF THE WORLD, stated to have been born on Monday, Dec. 25, A.M., 4004, in the year of Rome 753; but this event should be dated four years before the commencement of the common era. See Nativity. The following dates are given by ecclesiastical writers. Christ's baptism by John, and his first ministry, A.D. 30. He celebrated the last Passover and instituted the sacrament on Thursday, April 2, 33; was crucified on Friday, April 3, at three o'clock in the afternoon; arose April 5; ascended to heaven from Mount Olivet on Thursday, May 14; and the Holy Spirit descended on his disciples on Sunday, the day of Pentecost, May 24. The divinity of Christ, denied by the Arians, was affirmed by the Council of Nice, 325.

JEWELRY, worn by most of the early nations. Pliny the Elder says he saw Lollia Paulina (the most beautiful woman of her time, and wife of Caius Caesar, and afterward of Caligula) wearing ornaments which were valued at 4322,916 sterling. Jewels were worn in France by Agnes Sorel in 1454, and extensively encouraged in England about 1655. The standard of gold for jewelry was lowered by Parliament in 1854.

JEWISH ERA. The Jews usually employed the era of the Seleucidae until the 15th century, when a new mode of computing was adopted. They date from the creation, which they consider to have been 3760 years and 3 months before the commencement of our era. To reduce Jewish time to ours, subtract 3761 years.

 JOAN OF ARC, the Maid of Orleans, was born at Domremy. Thr English, under the Duke of Bedford, closely besieging Orleans, Joan of Arc pretended that she had a divine commission to expel them, and Charles VII. entrusted her with the command of the French troops. She raised the siege and entered Orleans with supplies, April 29, 1429; and the English, who were before the place from Oct. 12 preceding, abandoned the enterprise May 8 following. She captured several towns in the possession of the English, whom she defeated in a battle near Patay, June 18, 1429. In her various achievements no unfeminine cruelty ever stained her conduct. She was wounded several times herself, but never shed any blood with her own hands. She was taken at the siege of Compiègne, May 25, 1430; and, to the great disgrace of the English, after a trial, was burnt for a witch at Rouen, May 30, 1431. A statue of Joan of Arc, chiseled by the late Princess Marie of France, was inaugurated at Orleans, Sept. 13, 1851, and the 435th anniversary of its deliverance was celebrated in the same city on May 14, 1865. See Patay, Battle of.

JOCKEY CLUB, instituted in the reign of Charles II., is mentioned in Heber's "Racing Calendar," 1758.

JOHN'S, ST. See Newfoundland, Cambridge, and Oxford.

JOHN'S GATE, ST., St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, London, a fine vestige of monastic building, was the gate of the priory of St. John of Jerusalem (suppressed in 1540), and was the place where the Gentleman's Magazine was first published, March 6, 1731. The house was often visited by Dr. Johnson, Garrick, and their friends.

JOHN DOE AND RICHARD ROE, names well known as standing pledges for the prosecution of suits. In early times real and substantial persons were required to pledge themselves to answer to the crown for an amercement or fine set upon the plaintiff for raising a false accusation, if he brought an action without cause, or failed in it. And in 1285, 13 Edw. I., sheriffs and bailiffs were, before they made deliverance of the distress, to receive pledges for the pursuing the suit, and for the return of the beasts, if return were awarded. But this becoming a matter of form, the fictitious names of Doe and Roe were used until the form was declared to be no longer necessary by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852.

JOHN O'GROAT'S HOUSE, an ancient house formerly situated on Duncan's Bay Head, the most northerly point in Great Britain, deriving its name from John of Groat, or Groot, and his brothers, originally from Holland, said to have settled here about 1489.*

JOURNALS, THE, OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, commenced in 1547, first ordered to be printed in 1752, when £5000 were allowed to Mr. Hardinge for the execution of the work. The journals of the HOUSE OF PEERS (commencing 1509) were ordered to be printed in 1767.

JOURNALS OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS have been kept and published from the first assembling of delegates at Philadelphia in Sept., 1774, to consider the state of the colonies, until the present time.

JUAN FERNANDEZ, an island in the Pacific, named from its discoverer in 1567. Alexander Selkirk, a native of Scotland, was left on shore here by his captain for mutiny in 1705. He lived alone more than four years, till he was discovered by Captain Rogers in 1709. From his narrative De Foe is said to have derived his Adventures of Robinson Crusoe, published in 1719.

JUBILEES. The Jews were commanded to celebrate a jubilee every fifty years, 1491 B.C. (Lev. xxv., 8). Among the Christians a jubilee every century was instituted by Pope Boniface VIII. in the year 1300. In the 16th century it was celebrated every fifty years by command of Pope Clement VI.; and was afterward reduced by Urban VI. to every thirty-third year; and by Sixtus V. to every twenty-fifth year.

 Their commissions made permanent, notwithstanding the demise of the crown (by 1 Geo. III., c. 23). 1761
 Three additional judges appointed, one to each law court, 1784; and again in. 1830
 A new judge took his seat as vice-chancellor, May 5, 1813
 Two new vice-chancellors appointed. 1841
 A third vice-chancellor and two new chancery judges (styled lords justices) appointed. 1851

JUDGES IN THE UNITED STATES. There are eight judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, appointed for life or during good behavior by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There have been, since the beginning of the government, 1789, only six chief justices, namely: John Jay, of New York, appointed in 1789; William Cushing, of Massachusetts, 1796; Oliver Ellsworth, of Connecticut, 1796; John Marshall, of Virginia, 1801; Roger B. Taney, of Maryland, 1836; and Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio, 1864, present chief justice. The judges of the several states are appointed, some by the Legislatures, some by governors and Legislatures, some by the governors alone, and in New York, Pennsylvania, and Mississippi they are chosen by the popular vote for a specified time.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. See Privy Council.

JUDICIAL SEPARATION of married persons may now be decreed by the Divorce Court, established by act of Parliament in 1857. The persons separated may not marry again.

JUGGERNAUT, or "Lord of the World," one of the incarnations of Krishna, is an idol formed of an irregular pyramidal black stone, with two rich diamonds to represent eyes; the nose and mouth are painted vermilion. The number of pilgrims that visit the god is stated at 1,200,000 annually; some are crushed by the wheels of the car (so lately as Aug., 1864); a great many never return; and, to the distance of fifty miles, the way is strewn with human bones. The temple of Juggernaut has existed above 800 years. The state allowance to the temple was suspended by the Indian government in June, 1851.

JUGURTHINE WAR. Jugurtha murdered his cousin Hiempsal, king of Numidia, and usurped his throne, 118 B.C. He gave him a share in the government, but killed him in 112. He then provoked the Romans to war. Cæcilius Metellus was first sent against him, and defeated him in two battles; and Marius brought him in chains to Rome to adorn his triumph, 106 B.C., where he was put to death in 104. This war has been immortalized by the pen of Sallust.

JULIAN PERIOD (invented by Joseph Scaliger about 1583), a term of years produced by the multiplication of the Lunar Cycle 19, Solar Cycle 28, and Roman Indiction 15. It consists of 7980 years, and began 4713 years before our era. It has been employed in computing time to avoid the puzzling ambiguity attendant on reckoning any period antecedent to our era, an advantage which it has in common with the mundane eras used at different times. By subtracting 4713 from the Julian Period, our era is found; if before Christ, subtract the Julian Period from 4714. For Julian Era, see Calendar and Year.

JULIERS, a Prussian province, was made a duchy in 1356; became the subject of contention on the extinction of the ruling family in 1609; was allotted to Neuburg in 1659; seized by the French in 1794; and ceded to Prussia in 1815.

JULY, the seventh, originally fifth, Roman month, named by Marc Antony from Julius, the surname of Cæsar, the dictator of Rome, who was born in it.

JUNE, the sixth month, owes its name to Junius, which some derive from Junio, and others from Juniore, this being for the young, as the month of May was for aged persons. Ovid, in his Fæsti, introduces Juno as claiming this month.

JUNIUS'S LETTERS began in the Public Advertiser, Jan. 21, 1769.*

JUNKER PARTY (Junker, German for young noble), a term applied to the aristocratic party in Prussia, now in power under Otto von Bismarck-Schönhausen, appointed prime minister Oct. 9, 1862. Their political organ is the Kreuz-Zeitung.

JUNO, the planet, discovered by M. Harding, of Lilienthal, near Bremen, Sept. 1, 1804. Its distance from the sun is 254 millions of miles, and it accomplishes its revolutions in four years and 128 days, at the rate of nearly 42,000 miles an hour. Its diameter is estimated by German astronomers at 1424 English miles.

JUNONIA. Festivals in honor of Juno, celebrated at Rome, and instituted 431 B.C.

JUPITER, known as a planet to the Chaldeans, it is said 3000 B.C. The discovery of the satellites is attributed to Simon Mayr (Marius) in 1609, but more generally to Galileo on Jan. 8, 1610. See Planets. JUPITER AMMON's celebrated temple in Libya was visited by Alexander, 332 B.C. Cambyses's army sent against this temple perished miserably, 525 B.C.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY was established in Feb., 1855, and opened with an address by Sir R. Bethell on May 12 following.

JURIES. Trial by jury was introduced into England during the Saxon Heptarchy, mention being made of six Welsh and six Anglo-Saxon freemen appointed to try causes between the English and Welsh men of property, and made responsible, with their whole estates real and personal, for false verdicts.—Lambard. But by most authorities their institution is ascribed to Alfred about 886. In Magna Charta, juries are insisted on as the great bulwark of the people's liberty. When either party is an alien born, the jury shall be one half denizens and the other half aliens, statute 28 Edw. III., 1353. By the common law a prisoner upon indictment or appeal might challenge peremptorily thirty-five, being under three juries; but a lord of Parliament, and a peer of the realm, who is to be tried by his peers, can not challenge any of his peers. An act for the trial by jury in civil cases in Scotland was passed in 1815. An act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to juries in Ireland was passed 4 Will. IV., 1833. The Constitution of 1791 established the trial by jury in France. An imperial decree abolished trial by jury throughout the Austrian Empire, Jan. 15, 1852.†

"JUSTE MILEU" according to Louis Philippe (in 1830), is the only principle of government which can secure the welfare of France.

* They have been ascribed to Mr. Burke, Mr. William Gerard Hamilton, commonly called Single-speech Hamilton, John Wilkes, Mr. Dunning (afterward Lord Ashburton), Sergeant Adair, the Rev. J. Rosenhagen, John Roberts, Charles Lloyd, Samuel Dyer, General Lee, the Duke of Portland, Hugh Boyd, Lord George Sackville, and Sir Philip Francis. The last-named is generally considered to have been the author. Junius said, "I am the depositary of my own secret, and it shall perish with me."

† COERCION OF JURIES.—About the year 927, the plaintiff and defendant used to feed the jury impaneled in their action, and hence arose the common law of denying sustenance to a jury after the hearing of the evidence. A jury may be detained during the pleasure of the judge if they can not agree upon a verdict, and may be confined without meat, drink, or fire, candlelight excepted, till they are unanimous.—Some jurors have been fined for having fruit in their pockets when they were withdrawn to consider of their verdict, though they did not eat it.—Lein. Dyer, 137. A jury at Sudbury not being able to agree, and having been some time under duress, forcibly broke from the court where they were locked up, and went home, Oct. 9, 1791.—Phillips. In Scotland, Guernsey, Jersey, and France, juries decide by a majority; in France, since 1831, a majority of two thirds is required.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE are local magistrates, invested with extensive powers in minor cases, but subject to supersession and punishment by the King's Bench for an abuse of their authority. They were first nominated by William I. in 1076.—Stow. Persons termed conservators of the peace in each county were appointed by 1 Edw. III., c. 2, 1327; and their duties were defined in 1360. The form of a commission of the peace settled by the judges, 23 Eliz., 1580.—Hawkins. See Eyre.

JUSTICES, LORDS, were appointed by English sovereigns to govern during their absence. Two lords justices of the Court of Appeals in Chancery were appointed to give more efficiency to the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery, having rank next after the chief baron of the Exchequer, from Oct. 1, 1851. The Rt. Hon. J. L. Knight-Bruce and Lord Cranworth (afterward lord chancellor) were the first lords justices; the latter was succeeded by Sir G. J. Turner in 1853.

JUSTICIARS. In ancient times the kings of England used to hear and determine causes; but it is declared by law that if the king can not determine every controversy, he, to ease himself, may divide the labor among persons, men of wisdom and fearing God, and out of such to appoint judges. The Saxon kings of England appointed a judge after this manner, who was, in fact, the king's deputy. After the Norman Conquest, the person invested with that power had the style of Capitalis Justiciarius, or Justiciarius Angliæ. These judges continued until the erection of the courts of King's Bench and the Common Pleas. The first justiciars of England were Odo, bishop of Bayeux, and William Fitz-Osborn, in 1067; and the last was Philip Basset, in 1261.

JUSTINIAN CODE (compiled under the direction of the Emperor Justinian I.), wherein was written what may be termed the statute law, scattered through 2000 volumes, reduced to fifty; it was promulgated in 528. To this code of laws Justinian added the Pandects, the Institutes, and Novels. These compilations have since been called, collectively, the body of civil law (Corpus Juris Civilis). A digest was made in 533.—Blair.

JUTE, the fibres of two plants, the chonch and isbund (Corchorus olitorius and corchorus capsularis), since 1830 extensively cultivated in Bengal for making gunny-cloth, etc. Jute has been much manufactured at Dundee as a substitute for flax, tow, etc., and in July, 1862, assertions were made that it could be employed as a substitute for cotton. In 1853, 275,573 cwt., and in 1861, 904,092 cwt., of undressed jute were imported into the United Kingdom.

JUTLAND (Denmark). The Jutes settled in the southern counties of Britain. South Jutland was taken by the Allies in 1813, and restored in 1814.

KADSEAH. See Parsees.

KAFFRARIA, an extensive country in S. Africa, extending from the north of Cape Colony to the south of Guinea. Our war with the natives began in 1798. In 1819, headed by Mokanna, a prophet, they attacked Grahamstown, and were repulsed with much slaughter.

A savage invasion of the Kaffirs or Caffres, in the vicinity of Grahamstown, Cape of Good Hope, was eventually suppressed by the colonial authorities. Oct., 1831

Slighter annoyances to the colonists occurring, Sir Harry Smith, the then governor, proclaimed martial law, and ordered the inhabitants to rise en masse for the defense of the frontier. Dec. 31, 1850

Disastrous operations against the Kaffirs in the Waterkloof followed, and Colonel Fordyce and several officers and men of the 74th regiment were killed. Nov. 6, 1851

Wreck of the Birkenhead with re-enforcements from England (see Wrecks, 1852). Feb. 26, 1852

The hostilities of the Kaffirs having assumed all the features of regular warfare, the governor general, Cathcart, attacked and defeated them. Dec. 20, "

The conditions offered by Cathcart were accepted, and peace was restored. March 9, 1853

KAGOSIMA. See Japan, 1863.

KAINARDJI, Bulgaria. Here a treaty was signed, 1774, between the Turks and Russians, which opened the Black Sea, and gave the Crimea to the latter.

KALAFAT, on the Danube, opposite the fortress of Widin. This place was fortified by the Turks under Omer Pacha when they crossed the river, Oct. 28, 1853. In December, Prince Gortschakoff, with the Russian army, determined to storm their intrenchments. The conflict lasted from Dec. 31 to Jan. 9, 1854, when the Russians were compelled to retire. Among these conflicts one occurred at Citate, Jan. 6. See Citate. Kalafat was invested Jan. 28, and General Schilders attacked it vigorously on April 19, without success, and the blockade was raised April 21.

KALEIDOSCOPE, an optical instrument, which, by an arrangement of mirrors, produces a symmetrical reflection of beautiful images, was invented by Dr. (now Sir David) Brewster, of Edinburgh; it was suggested in 1814, and perfected in 1817. See Debuscope.

KALITSCH (Poland). Here the Russians defeated the Swedes, Nov. 19, 1706, and here the Saxons, under the French General Reynier, were beaten by the Russians under Winzingerode, Feb. 13, 1813.

KALMAR. See Calmar.

KALMUCK. See Tartar.

KALUNGA FORT (E. Indies), attacked unsuccessfully by the Company's forces, and General Gillespie killed, Oct. 31, 1814; and again unsuccessfully, Nov. 25. It was evacuated by the Nepalese Nov. 30, same year.

KAMPTULICON, a substance used for flooring, was discovered by Elijah Galloway in 1843, and manufactured since 1851 by Messrs. Tayler, Harvey, and Co. It is composed of India-rubber and cork, combined by masticating machines.

KAMTSCHATKA, a peninsula, E. coast of Asia, was discovered by Morosco, a Cossack chief, 1690; taken possession of by Russia in 1697; and proved to be a peninsula by Behring in 1728. Four months, commencing at our midsummer, may be considered as the spring, summer, and autumn here, the rest of the year being dreary winter. The amiable Captain Clarke, a companion of Captain Cook, died in sight of Kamtschatka, Aug. 22, 1779, and was buried in the town of St. Peter and Paul, in the peninsula.

KANGAROOS, animals indigenous to Australia (first seen by Captain Cook, June 22, 1770), were bred at San Donato, the estate of Prince Demidoff, in 1853, and since.

KANSAS, a Western state in N. America, was organized as a Territory May 30, 1854; admitted into the Union Jan. 29, 1861; and was left open to slavery in opposition to the Missouri Compromise. See Slavery in America. During the greater part of 1855 this was a scene of anarchy and bloodshed through the efforts of the slavery party to make it a slave state.

KARRACK. See Carrack.

KARS, a town in Asiatic Turkey, renowned for its defense by General (now Sir William) Fenwick Williams, with 15,000 men, and with three months' provisions and three days' ammunition, against the Russian General Mouravieff, with an army of 40,000 infantry and 10,000 cavalry. The siege lasted from June 18 to Nov. 28, 1855. The sufferings of the garrison were very great from cholera and want of food. The Russians made a grand assault on Sept. 29, but were repulsed with the loss of above 6000 men, and the garrison were overcome by famine alone.—Sandwith. Kars was restored to Turkey, Aug., 1856.

* On accepting General Williams's proposal for surrendering, General Mouravieff said: "General Williams, you have made yourself a name in history; and posterity will stand amazed at the endurance, the courage, and the discipline which this siege has called forth in the remains of an army. Let us arrange a capitulation that will satisfy the demands of war without outraging humanity." In 1856 the general was made a baronet, with the title of Sir William Fenwick Williams of Kars, and granted a pension.

KEEPER (LORD) OF THE GREAT SEAL OF ENGLAND differed only from the lord chancellor in that the latter had letters-patent, whereas the lord keeper had none. Richard, a chaplain, was the first keeper under Ranulph, in 1116. The two offices were made one by 5 Eliz., 1562.—Cowell. See Chancellor. The office of lord keeper of the great seal of Scotland was established in 1708, after the Union.

KEEPER OF THE KING'S CONSCIENCE. The early chancellors were priests, and out of their moral control of the king's mind probably grew up the idea of an equity court in contradistinction to the law courts. A bill in Chancery is a petition through the lord chancellor to the king's conscience for remedy in matters for which the king's common law courts afford no redress. The keeper of the king's conscience, therefore, at the present day, is the officer who presides in the Court of Chancery. See Chancellor and Lord Keeper.

KENILWORTH CASTLE (Warwickshire) was built about 1120 by Geoffrey de Clinton, whose grandson sold it to Henry III. It was enlarged and fortified by Simon de Montfort, to whom Henry gave it as a marriage portion with his sister Eleanor.* Queen Elizabeth conferred it on her favorite, Dudley, earl of Leicester. His entertainment of the queen commenced July 19, 1575, and cost the earl daily £1000.

KENNINGTON COMMON (Surrey). The Chartist demonstration, April 10, 1848, took place on the common, which was directed to be laid out as a public pleasure-ground in 1852.

KENSINGTON PALACE was purchased by William III. from Lord Chancellor Finch, who made the road through its park. The gardens were improved by Queens Mary, Anne, and Caroline, who died here. Here died George, prince of Denmark, and George II.; and here Queen Victoria was born, May 24, 1819.†

KENT. See Britain and Holy Maid. Odo, bishop of Bayeux, brother of William the Conqueror, was made Earl of Kent, 1067; and Henry Grey was made Duke of Kent in 1710; he died without male heirs in 1740. Edward, son of George III., was created Duke of Kent in 1799. He was father of Queen Victoria, and died in 1820. See England.

KENTISH FIRE, a term given to the continued cheering common at the Protestant meetings held in Kent about 1828 and 1829, with the view of preventing the passing of the Catholic Relief Bill.

KENTUCKY, a Western state of N. America, admitted 1792. It declared for strict neutrality in the conflict between the North and South in April, 1861, but was invaded by the Southern troops in August. On their refusal to retire, after much correspondence, the Legislature of Kentucky gave in its adhesion to the Union, Nov. 27, 1861. In the campaign that ensued sharp skirmishes took place, and on Jan. 19, 1862, the Confederates under Zollicoffer were defeated and himself killed at Mill Spring, and in March no Confederate soldiers remained in Kentucky. See United States.

KEROSELENE, a new anesthetic, derived from the distillation of coal-tar by Mr. W. B. Merrill, of Boston, U. S., was tried and made known early in 1861.

KERTCH, capital of the ancient kingdom of Bosphorus, late a flourishing town on the Straits of Yenikale, Sea of Azof. It was entered by the Allies (English and French) May 24, 1855; the Russians retired after destroying stores, etc. The place was totally dismantled by the Allies, and the inhabitants removed.

KET'S REBELLION: a revolt in July, 1549, instigated by William Ket, a tanner, of Norfolk. He demanded the abolition of inclosures and the dismissal of evil counselors. The insurgents amounted to 20,000 men, but were quickly defeated by the Earl of Warwick. More than 2000 fell; Ket was tried, and hanged, Aug. 27, 1549.

KETTLE CREEK, BATTLE OF. Early in 1779, a band of Tories, under Col. Boyd, were desolating the upper Carolina frontiers. While on their way, on the Georgia side of the Savannah River, to join the British at Savannah, they were attacked and utterly defeated at Kettle Creek by Col. Pickens on the 14th of Feb., 1779. Boyd lost 70 killed and 75 made prisoners. Pickens lost 38 men.

KEW (Surrey). The palace was successively occupied by the Capel family and Mr. Molyneux; by Frederick, prince of Wales, 1730, and George III. Queen Charlotte died here, Nov. 4, 1818. A new palace, erected by George III., under the direction of Mr. Wyatt, was pulled down in 1827. The gardens contain a very fine collection of plants, and are decorated with ornamental buildings, most of them erected by Sir William Chambers, about 1760.* The meteorological observatory was presented to the British Association in 1842.

KEYS. The invention is ascribed to Theodore of Samos, by Pliny, about 730 B.C.

KHERSON, an ancient Dorian colony (deriving its name from Chersonesus, a peninsula), came under the sway of the great Mithridates about 120 B.C., and afterward of that of Rome, A.D. 30. It continued important, and its possession was long disputed by the Russians and Greeks. It was taken by Vladimir, grand-duke of Russia, in 988, when he and his army received Christian baptism, and he married the emperor's sister Anne, who obtained Kherston as her dowry. The city was destroyed by the Lithuanians; and the Turks found it deserted when they took possession of the Crimea in 1475. What ancient remains the Turks and Tartars had spared, the Russians conveyed away for the construction of Sebastopol. Since the foundation of Odessa in 1792, Kherston has declined. Potemkin, the favorite of Catharine, who died at Jassy in 1791, is buried here, and John Howard, the English philanthropist, who died here Jan. 20, 1790, is buried about three miles from the town, where an obelisk has been erected to his memory.

KHIVA, in Turkistan, Asia, governed by a khan. An expedition sent against it by the Emperor Nicholas of Russia in 1839, perished through the rigor of the climate in 1840.

KHYBER PASS, Afghanistan. See India, 1839, 1842.

KIDDERMINSTER (Worcestershire), renowned for its carpet manufactures, established about 1735.

KIEL, chief town of Holstein, a sea-port, and a member of the Hanseatic League in 1300. The University was founded in 1665. By a treaty between Great Britain, Sweden, and Denmark, signed here Jan. 14, 1814, Norway was ceded to Sweden. Previously the Norwegians had been deserted by the King of Denmark, and had sent a deputation to England, to interest that country in their favor. On the contrary, the English blockaded the ports of Norway, and the Swedes entered by land. The Norwegians fought some brave actions, but they were defeated. The Prince of Denmark quitted Norway, and the Diet elected the King of Sweden to be their king. An extraordinary assembly of the revolted provinces, Schleswig and Holstein, met here Sept. 9, 1850. By a convention between Austria and Prussia, the former is to govern Holstein, but Kiel is to be held by Prussia as a German federal port (Aug., 1865).

KILCULLEN (Kildare). Here a large body of the insurgent Irish defeated the British forces commanded by General Dundas, May 23, 1798. The general, in a subsequent engagement, overthrew the rebels near Kilcullen Bridge, when 300 were slain.

KILDARE (E. Ireland). The Curragh, or race-course here, was once a forest of oaks. Here was the nunnery of St. Bridget, founded by her in the 5th century, and here was a building called the fire-house, where, it is supposed, the nuns kept the inextinguishable fire which existed till the Reformation. The see was one of the earliest episcopal foundations in Ireland; St. Conleth, who died 519, the first prelate. The first Protestant bishop was Thomas Lancaster, in 1550. The see is valued, by an extent returned, 30 Hen. VIII., at £69 11s. 4d. Irish per year. Kildare was united to Dublin in 1846. See Dublin. The insurrection in Kildare, which swelled into the rebellion, commenced May 23, 1798. On that night, Lieut. Gifford, of Dublin, and a number of other gentlemen, were murdered by insurgents. This rebellion was quelled in 1799.

* The botanic gardens contain many magnificent conservatories, etc. Mr. Aiton retired from his office of director of the Botanic Gardens in 1841, after fifty years' service. He was succeeded by Sir William Hooker, at whose recommendation the gardens were opened to the public daily. In 1847 the royal kitchen and forcing gardens were incorporated with the botanic gardens. The collections in the Museum of Economic Botany began with the private collection of Sir William Hooker, given by him in 1847. Under his charge the gardens were greatly improved. He died Aug. 12, 1865, and was succeeded by his son, Dr. Joseph D. Hooker.

* After the battle of Evesham, and defeat and death of Simon de Montfort by Prince Edward (afterward Edward I.), 1265, Montfort's younger son, Simon, shut himself up in Kenilworth Castle, which sustained a siege for six months against the royal forces of Henry III., to whom it at length surrendered. Upon this occasion was issued the "Dietum de Kenilworth," or "Don of Kenilworth," enacting that all who took up arms against the king should pay him the value of their lands for five years.

† In Aug., 1845, by permission of the government, a military band played in Kensington Gardens on Sundays, in presence of about 60,000 persons. The practice was discontinued in 1856, being objected to by many persons; but bands were ordered to play in other parks during the week.

KILFENORA (Clare), a bishopric, said to have been founded by St. Fachnan. Cardinal Paparo, in 1152, rendered it a suffragan see to Cashel; but in 1660 it was annexed to Tuam, and afterward united to Killaloe.

KILKENNY (S. E. Ireland), an English settlement about 1071. The Statutes of Kilkenny enacted, among other things, "That the alliance of the English by marriage with any Irish, the nurture of infants, and gossiping with the Irish, be deemed high treason." And again, "If any man of English race use an Irish name, Irish apparel, or any other guise or fashion of the Irish, his lands shall be seized, and his body imprisoned, till he shall conform to English modes and customs."

KILLALA (Mayo) was invaded by a French force, landing from three frigates, under General Humbert, Aug. 22, 1798. The invaders were joined by the Irish insurgents, and the battles of Castlebar and Coloneoy followed; and the French were defeated at Ballynamuck, Sept. 8, same year.

KILLIECRANKIE (a defile in Perthshire). Here the forces of William III., commanded by General Mackay, were defeated by the adherents of James II., under Graham of Claverhouse, viscount Dundee, who fell in the moment of victory, July 27, 1689.

KILMALLOCK (Limerick). An abbey was founded here by St. Mochoallóg or Molach about 645, and an abbey of Dominicans was built in the 13th century.—Ware. A charter was granted to Kilmallock by Edward VI., and another by Elizabeth in 1584. The town was invested by the Irish forces in 1598, but the siege was raised by the Duke of Ormond. There was much fighting here in 1641 and 1642.

KILSYTH (Central Scotland). Here Montrose defeated the Covenanters, Aug. 15, 1645, and threatened Glasgow.

KINBURN, a fort at the confluence of the rivers Bug and Dnieper, taken by the English and French, Oct. 17, 1855. Three floating French batteries, said to be the invention of the emperor, on the principle of horizontal shell-firing, were very effective. On the 18th the Russians blew up Oczakoff, a fort opposite.

KINDER-GARTEN (children's garden), a system of education devised by Froebel, but practically carried out by Mr. and Mrs. Ronge, in Germany, in 1849, and in England in 1851. The system, founded mainly on self-tuition, and enlivened by toys, games, and singing, is set forth in Ronge's "Kinder-Garten," published in 1858.

KINDRED, TABLE OF, in the Book of Common Prayer, was set forth in 1563.

KING: German König, Latin Rex, Scythian Reis, Spanish Rey, Italian Re, and French Roy, all come from the Hebrew Rosh, chief or head. Nimrod was the first founder of a kingdom, 2245 B.C.—Dufresnoy. Misraim built cities in Egypt, and was the first who assumed the title of king in that division of the earth, 2188 B.C. The "manner of the king" is set forth in 1 Samuel viii., 1112 B.C. Saul was the first King of Israel, 1095 B.C. Most of the Grecian states were governed by kings; and kings were the first rulers in Rome.

King of England.—The style was first used by Egbert, 828; but the title Rex gentis Anglorum, king of the English nation, existed during the Heptarchy. See Britain.

The Emperors of Germany, in order that their eldest sons might be chosen their successors, in their own life-time politically obtained them the title of "King of the Romans." The first emperor so elected was Henry IV. . . . 1055

Richard, brother of Henry III. of England, was induced to go to Germany, where he disbursed vast sums under the promise of being elected next emperor; he was elected "King of the Romans" (but failed in succeeding to the imperial crown). . . . 1256
The style "King of Rome" was revived by Napoleon I., who conferred it on his son upon his birth. . . . March 20, 1811

KING'S BENCH, or QUEEN'S BENCH, COURT OF, obtained its name from the king sometimes sitting here on a high bench, and the judges, to whom the judicature belongs in his absence, on a low bench at his feet. This court in ancient times was called Curia Domini Regis.

KING'S COLLEGES. See Aberdeen and Cambridge. King's College, London, incorporated Aug. 14, 1829, and opened Oct. 8, 1831. It was incorporated with the University of London in 1837. The hospital was founded in 1839.

KING'S EVIL, formerly supposed to be cured by the king's touch; the first being Edward the Confessor, in 1058. In the reign of Charles II., 92,107 persons were touched; and, according to Wiseman, the king's physician, they were nearly all cured! Queen Anne officially announced in the London Gazette, March 12, 1712, her intention to touch publicly. The custom was dropped by George I., 1714.

KING'S MOUNTAIN, BATTLE OF. Major Patrick Ferguson was sent by Cornwallis to embody the loyal militia west of the Broad River, in South Carolina. With 1500 of them he was on his way to join the main army, when, on the 7th of October, 1780, while encamped upon a spur of King's Mountain, he was attacked by 1800 Republican militia under several colonels, and totally defeated. Shelby, Cleveland, and Campbell were the chief leaders of the Republicans. Ferguson was killed, and a small monument marks the spot of his burial. 300 of his men were killed or wounded, and about 800 of them made prisoners, with 1500 stand of arms. The Americans lost only 20 men.

KING'S SPEECH. The first from the throne is said to have been by Henry I., 1107.

KING PHILIP'S WAR. Philip, son of Massasoit, the friend of the Pilgrim Fathers at New Plymouth, New England, was induced by real and imaginary wrongs to make war upon the European settlers in order to exterminate them. His home was at Mount Hope, R. I. He struck his first blow at Swansea on the 4th of July, 1675. The white settlers sprang to arms. Philip ordered other New England tribes to join him, and during the remainder of that year and the spring of 1676, there was alarm and bloodshed in nearly all the more remote New England settlements. The Indians were finally subdued; Philip was chased from one hiding-place to another, and finally, in 1676, he was shot in a swamp by a faithless Indian. His head was carried in triumph to Plymouth, and his little son, the last survivor of his family, was sold for a bond-slave in Bermuda.

KINGSTON, the shire town of Ulster county, New York, was settled by the Dutch and Huguenots. It is memorable in the United States as the place where the first Constitution of the State of New York was framed, in 1777, and the first Legislature was convened under it; also as having been wantonly destroyed by a British marauding expedition up the Hudson in the autumn of the same year.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, was founded in 1693, after the great earthquake in 1692 which destroyed Port Royal, and constituted a city, 1802. An awful fire here ravaged a vast portion of the town, and consumed £500,000 of property, Feb. 8, 1782; another fire in 1843. See Jamaica.

KINGSTON TRIAL. The Duchess of Kingston was arraigned before the Lords in Westminster Hall on a charge of bigamy, having married first Captain Hervey, afterward Earl of Bristol, and next, during his lifetime, Evelyn Pierpoint, duke of Kingston, April 15-22, 1776. She was found guilty, but, on her pleading the privilege of peerage, the punishment of burning in the hand was remitted, and she was discharged on paying the fees of office.

KISSING the hands of great men was a Grecian custom. Kissing was a mode of salutation among the Jews, 1 Samuel x., 1, etc. The "kiss of charity," or "holy kiss," commanded in the Scriptures (Romans xvi., 16, etc.), was observed by the early Christians, and is still recognized by the Greek Church and some others. Kissing the pope's foot began with Adrian I. or Leo III., at the close of the 8th century.

KIT-CAT CLUB, of about thirty noblemen and gentlemen, instituted in 1703 to promote the Protestant succession. Addison, Steele, and Dr. Garth were members. It took its name from Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster.

KITT'S. See Christopher's, St.

KNEELING. The knee was ordered to be bent at the name of Jesus (see Philipp, ii., 2) about the year 1275, by the order of the pope. The ceremony of a vassal kneeling to his lord is said to have begun in the 8th century.

KNIGHTHOOD. The word knight is derived from the Saxon Cniht, a servant (i. e., servant to the king, etc.). The institution of the Roman knights (equites, or horsemen, from equus, a horse) is ascribed to Romulus, about 750 B.C. Knighthood was conferred in England by the priest at the altar, after confession and consecration of the sword, during the Saxon Heptarchy. The first knight made by the sovereign with the sword of state was Athelstane, by Alfred, A.D. 900.—Spelman. The custom of ecclesiastics conferring the honor of knighthood was suppressed in a synod held at Westminster in 1100.—Ashmole's Institutes. All persons having ten pounds yearly income were obliged to be knighted, or pay a fine, 88 Hen. III., 1254.—Sulmon. On the decline of the empire of Charlemagne, all Europe being reduced to a state of anarchy, the proprietor of every manor became a petty sovereign; his mansion was fortified by a moat, and defended by a guard, and called a castle. Excursions were made by one petty lord against another, and the women and treasure were carried off by the conqueror. At length the owners of rich fiefs associated to repress these marauders, to make property secure, and to protect the ladies; binding themselves to these duties by a solemn vow, and the sanction of a religious ceremony. Cervantes's "Don Quixote," a satire on knight-errantry, was published in 1605. See Chivalry, Tournaments.

FEMALE KNIGHTS.—It is said that the first were the women who preserved Tortosa from falling into the hands of the Moors in 1149, by their stout resistance. Large immunities and favors were granted to the women and their descendants. Several female orders appear in the previous list.

KNIGHTS OF GLYN AND KERRY, IN IRELAND.—The heads of two branches of the family of Fitzgerald, who still enjoy the distinctions bestowed on their ancestors by the ancient sovereigns.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE, OR OF PARLIAMENT; summoned by the king's writ and chosen by the freeholders, first summoned by Simon de Montfort in 1254, and in a more formal manner, Jan. 20, 1265. There are writs extant as far back as 11 Edward I., 1283. The knights are still grided with a sword when elected, as the writ prescribes.

KNIVES. In England, Hallamshire has been renowned for its cutlery for five centuries; Chaucer speaks of the "Sheffield thwytel." Stow says that Richard Mathews, on the Fleet Bridge, was the first Englishman who made fine knives, etc.; and that he obtained a prohibition of foreign ones, 1563. Clasp or spring knives became common about 1650, coming originally from Flanders.—Knife-cleaning machines were patented by Mr. George Kent in 1844 and 1852; others have been invented by Masters, Price, etc. See Forks.

KNOW-NOTHINGS, a society which arose in 1853, in the United States of N. America. Their principles were embodied in the following propositions (at New York, 1855). They possessed several newspapers, and had much political influence.

1. The Americans shall rule America.
2. The union of these states.
3. No North, no South, no East, no West.
4. The United States of America—as they are—one and inseparable.
5. No sectarian interferences in our legislation or in the administration of American law.
6. Hostility to the assumptions of the pope, through the bishops, etc., in a republic sanctified by Protestant blood.
7. Thorough reform in the naturalization laws.
8. Free and liberal educational institutions for all sects and classes, with the Bible, God's holy word, as a universal text-book.

A society was formed in 1855 in opposition to the above, called Know Somethings. Both bodies were absorbed into the two parties, Democrats and Republicans, at the presidential election in Nov., 1856.

KNOXVILLE (Tennessee), SEIGE OF. General Burnside, with the Army of the Ohio, occupied Knoxville on the 3d of September, 1863. The Confederate General Buckner, upon his advance, evacuated East Tennessee and joined Bragg at Chattanooga. Early in November, General Longstreet, with 17,000 men, advanced against Knoxville. On the 14th he crossed the Tennessee. Burnside engaged him on the 16th at Campbell's Station and repulsed his attacks, thus gaining time for the concentration of his army in Knoxville. Longstreet advanced and laid siege to the town. He made two furious assaults upon the place (November 18 and 29), in both of which he was repulsed. But, in the mean time, Grant had defeated Bragg at Chattanooga, and Sherman, with 25,000 men, was on the way to relieve Knoxville. Longstreet, compelled to raise the siege, retired up the Holston River, but did not entirely abandon East Tennessee until the next spring, when he again joined Lee in Virginia.

KOHINOOR, or "Mountain of Light." The East India diamond. See Diamonds.

KOLIN or KOLLIN (Bohemia). Here the Austrian General Daun gained a signal victory over Frederick the Great of Prussia, June 18, 1757. In commemoration, the military order of Maria Theresa was instituted by the empress-queen.

KOMORN or COMORN (Hungary), an ancient fortress town, often taken and retaken during the wars with Turkey. Near it the Hungarians defeated the Austrians, July 11, 1849, but surrendered the town, Oct. 1, 1849.

KONIEH (formerly Iconium). Here the Turkish army was defeated by the Pacha of Egypt, after a long sanguinary fight, Dec. 21, 1832. The grand vizier was taken prisoner.

KÖNIGSBERG, the capital of East Prussia, was founded by the Teutonic knights in 1255, and became the residence of the grand master in 1457. It joined the Hanseatic League in 1365. It was ceded to the Elector of Brandenburg in 1657, and here Frederick III. was crowned the first king of Prussia in 1701. It was held by the Russians 1758-64, and by the French in 1907. Here the present king and queen were crowned, Oct. 18, 1861.

KÖNIGSTEIN TUN (Nassau, Germany), most capacious, was built by Frederick Augustus, king of Poland, in 1725. It was made to hold 233,667 gallons of wine; and on the top, which was railed in, was accommodation for twenty persons to regale themselves. The famous tun of St. Bernard's holds 800 tuns. See Heidelberg Tun.

KORAN or ALCORAN (AL-KUR'AN), the sacred book of the Mohammedans, was written about 610, by Mohammed, who asserted that it had been revealed to him by the angel Gabriel in twenty-three years, and published by Abubeker about 635. Its general aim was to unite the professors of idolatry and the Jews and Christians in the worship of one God (whose unity was the chief point inculcated), under certain laws and ceremonies, exacting obedience to Mohammed as the prophet. The leading article of faith preached is compounded of an eternal truth and a necessary fiction, namely, that there is only one God, and that Mohammed is the apostle of God.—Gibbon. The Koran was translated into Latin in 1143; into French 1647; into English, by Sale, 1734; and into other European languages 1763 et seq. It is a rhapsody of 6000 verses, divided into 114 sections. See Mohammedanism, etc.

KOREISH, an Arab tribe which opposed the pretensions of Mohammed, and was defeated by him and his adherents, 630.

KOSZTA AFFAIR. Martin Koszta, a Hungarian refugee, when in the United States in 1850, declared his intention of becoming an American citizen, and went through the preliminary forms. In 1853 he visited Smyrna, and on June 21 was seized by a boat's crew from the Austrian brig Huzzar. By direction of the American minister at Constantinople, Captain Ingraham, of the American sloop St. Louis, demanded his release; but, having heard that the prisoner was to be clandestinely transferred to Trieste, he demanded his surrender by a certain time, and prepared to attack the Austrian vessel on July 2; Koszta was then given up. On August 1 the Austrian government protested against these proceedings in a circular addressed to the European courts, but eventually a compromise was effected, and Koszta returned to the United States.

KRASNOI (Central Russia). Here the French army under Marshal Davoust, prince of Eckmühl, was totally defeated by the Russian army commanded by Prince Kutusoff (who died in 1813).

KREMLIN, a palace at Moscow, built by Demetri, grand-duke of Russia, in 1376. It was burnt down in 1812, and rebuilt in 1816.

KUNNERSDORF, BATTLE OF. See Cunnersdorf.

KUNOBITZA, in the Balkan. Here John Hunniades, the Hungarian, defeated the Turks, Dec. 24, 1443.

KUSTRIN or CRUSTRIN (Prussia), a fortified town, besieged and burnt by the Russians, Aug. 22, 1758; taken by the French in 1806; given up, 1814.

L.

LABORATORY. The Royal Institution laboratory, the first of any importance in London, was established in 1800. In it were made the discoveries of Davy and Faraday. See Royal Institution.

LABRADOR (N. America), discovered by Sebastian Cabot, 1497; visited by Corte Real in 1500; made a Moravian missionary station in 1771.

LABUAN, an Asiatic island N.W. Borneo; occupied by the British in 1846, and given up to Sir James Brooke in 1848. See Borneo.

LABURNUM, called also the golden chain and Cytisus Laburnum, was brought to these countries from Hungary, Austria, etc., about 1576.—Ashe.

LABYRINTH. Four are mentioned: the first, said to have been built by Dædalus, in the island of Crete, to secure the Minotaur, about 1210 B.C.; the second in Egypt, in the isle of Meris, by Psammetichus, king of that place, about 653 B.C.; the other, the third, at Lemnos, remarkable for its sumptuous pillars, which seems to have been a stalactite grotto; and the fourth at Clusium, in Italy, erected by Porsenna, king of Etruria, about 520 B.C.—Pliny. The beauty and art of the labyrinth of Mendes were almost beyond belief; it had 12 halls and 3000 chambers, with pillars, was incrustated with marble, and adorned with sculpture.—Herodotus. The labyrinth of Woodstock is connected with the story of Fair Rosamond. See Rosamond. The Maze, at Hampton Court, was formed at the end of the 16th century.

LACE was of very delicate texture in France and Flanders in 1320. Its importation into England was prohibited in 1483, but it was general in the court costume of Elizabeth's reign. Dresden, Valenciennes, Mechlin, and Brussels have long been famous for their fine lace. An ounce weight of Flanders thread has been frequently sold for four pounds in London; and its value, when manufactured, has been increased to forty pounds, ten times the price of standard gold. A dissipated framework knitter of Nottingham, named Hammond, is said to have invented a mode of applying his stocking-frame to the manufacture of lace from studying the lace on his wife's cap, about 1768.—Macculloch. So many improvements have been made in this manufacture, particularly by Heathcote (1809, 1817, etc.), Morley, and Leaver (1811, etc.), that a piece of lace which about 1809 cost £17, may now be had for 7s. (1853).—Ure. The process of "gassing" by which cotton lace is said to be made equal to fine linen lace, was invented by Samuel Hall, of Basford, near Nottingham. He died in Nov., 1862.

LACÉDÆMON. See Sparta.

LA COLLE MILLS, ATTACK ON, in Lower Canada, not far from Rouse's Point, by 5000 Americans of Gen. Wilkinson's division, on the 30th March, 1814. The mill was fortified, and garrisoned by 200 British soldiers under Major Hancock. The Americans lost 16 killed and 122 wounded; the British loss was 10 killed and 46 wounded.

LACONIA (S.E. Peloponnesus), the ancient name of Sparta; in the 5th century called Tzakonia.

LACTEAL VESSELS were discovered in a dog by Jasper Asellius, of Cremona, 1622, and in birds and other animals by Mr. Hewson, of London, about 1770.

LADRONE ISLES (N. Pacific), belonging to Spain, discovered by Magellan in 1520. He first touched at the island of Guam. The natives having stolen some of his goods, he named the islands the Ladrones, or Thieves. In the 17th century they obtained the name of Marianne's Islands from the Queen of Spain.

LADY. The masters and mistresses of manor-houses, in former times, served out bread to the poor weekly, and were therefore called Lafords and Lef-days, signifying bread-givers (from hlaf, a loaf; hence lords and ladies. Tooke considers lord to signify high-born. Ladies first came into court in France in 1499. LADY-DAY (March 25), a festival instituted about 350 according to some authorities, and not before the 7th century according to others. See Annunciation. The year was ordered to begin on Jan. 1st in France in 1564, and in Scotland, by proclamation, on Dec. 17, 1599; but not in England till Sept. 3, 1752, when the style was altered.

LAGOS, in the Bight of Benin (Africa), was assaulted and taken by the boats of a British squadron, under Commodore Bruce, Dec. 26 and 27, 1851. This affair arose out of breaches of a treaty for the suppression of the slave-trade. In 1862 the place was ceded to the British government, and created a settlement; Henry Stanhope Freeman to be the first governor.

LAGOS BAY (Portugal). Here was fought a battle between Admiral Boscawen and the French Admiral De la Clue, who lost both his legs in the engagement, and died next day, Aug. 17, 18, 1759. The Centaure and Modeste were taken, and the Rédoutable and Océan run on shore and burnt; the scattered remains of the French fleet got into Cadiz.

LA HOGUE (N.W. France), BATTLE OF, May 19, 1692, between the English and Dutch combined fleets, under Admirals Russell and Rooke, and the French fleet commanded by Admiral Tourville. The English attacked the French near La Hogue, gaining a splendid victory, burning thirteen of the enemy's ships, destroying eight more, forcing the rest to fly, and thus preventing a threatened descent upon England.

LAHORE (N.W. India) was taken by Baber in 1524, and was long the capital of the Mongol Empire. It fell into the power of the Sikhs in 1798. It was occupied by Sir Hugh Gough Feb. 22, 1846, who in March concluded a treaty of peace with them.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN, a long and narrow body of water in Northern New York, discovered by Champlain, an eminent French navigator, in 1609. In the French and Indian War, the American War for independence, and the last war between the United States and Great Britain, this lake became the theatre of important events. Upon its western shore stood the fortresses of Ticonderoga and Crown Point, where first the French and English, and then the English and Americans, contested for dominion. On the lake below these fortresses, naval engagements between British and American vessels, the latter under General Arnold, took place in 1776. In front of Plattsburg British and American vessels had a sharp conflict on the 11th of Sept., 1814, when the latter were victorious. See Battle of Plattsburg. See Battles, Naval Battles.

LAKE ERIE. On the shores and waters of this lake great historical scenes have transpired. Once French expeditions sailed to place missionaries and trading stations in the West, and military ones at the close of the Indian War, in connection with the important post of Detroit. Along its shore, from Detroit to Buffalo, were stirring scenes during the last war between the United States and Great Britain; and near its western end an important naval engagement took place on the 10th of Sept., 1813, between an American fleet under Commodore Perry, and a British fleet under Commodore Barclay. The Americans were victorious. Then Perry sent to General Harrison his noted dispatch, "We have met the enemy, and they are ours!" See Battles, Naval Battles.

LAKE ONTARIO, the most easterly of the chain of great American lakes. Its shores and waters were the scenes of engagements between the Americans and British during the last war between the United States and Great Britain, in 1812-14. See York, Sackett's Harbor, Oswego, Sandy Creek, Fort Niagara, Naval Battles.

LAKE REGILLUS (Italy), where the Romans defeated the Latin auxiliaries of the expelled Tarquins, 499 B.C.

LAMBETH PALACE. A considerable portion was built in the 12th and 13th centuries, by Hubert Walter, archbishop of Canterbury. The chapel was erected in 1196. The tower of the church was erected about 1375; and other parts of the edifice in the 15th century. Simon of Sudbury, archbishop of Canterbury, was barbarously put to death here by the followers of Wat Tyler, who attacked the palace, burnt all the furniture and books, and destroyed all the registers and public papers, June 14, 1381. The domestic portion of the palace was greatly enlarged for Archbishop Howley (who died 1848), by Mr. Blore, at an expense of £52,000. See Canterbury and Articles.

LAMIAN WAR, B.C. 323, between Athens and her allies (excited by Demosthenes, the orator), and Antipater, governor of Macedonia. Antipater fled to Lamia, in Thessaly, and was there besieged. He escaped thence, and defeated his adversaries at Cranon, 322 B.C.

LAMMAS-DAY, the 1st of August, one of our four cross quarter-days of the year. Whitsuntide was formerly the first of these quarters, Lammas the second, Martinmas the third, and Candlemas the last; and such partition of the year was once equally common with the present divisions of Lady-day, Midsummer, Michaelmas, and Christmas. Some rents are yet payable at each of these quarterly days in England, and very generally in Scotland. Lammas comes from the Saxon lammæsse, loaf-mass, because formerly upon that day our ancestors offered bread made of new wheat; anciently, those tenants that held lands of the Cathedral Church of York were by tenure to bring a lamb alive into church at high mass.

LAMPS. The earthen lamp of Epictetus the philosopher sold after his death for 3000 drachmas, 161. Lamps with horn sides were the invention of Alfred. London streets were first lighted with oil-lamps in 1681, and with gas-lamps in 1814. A lamp "constructed to produce neither smoke nor smell, and to give considerably more light than any lamp hitherto known," was patented by M. Aimé Argand in 1784, and was brought into general use in England early in the present century. On his principle are founded the lamp invented by Carcel about 1803, and since 1825, the Moderate lamps of Levassieur, Hadrot, and Neuburger. See Safety-lamp.

LANARK (W. Scotland) was a Roman station, and made a royal burgh 1103.

LANCASHIRE was created a county palatine by Edward III. for his son John of Gaunt, who had married the daughter of Henry, first Duke of Lancaster, in 1359, and succeeded him in 1361. The court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster was instituted in 1376. On the accession of Henry IV. in 1399 the duchy merged into the crown. See under article Cotton.

LANCASTER, supposed to have been the Ad Alanum of the Romans. Lancaster was granted by William I. or II. to Roger de Poitou, who erected a castle upon its hill. It was taken by the Jacobites, Nov., 1715, and Nov., 1745.

LAND was let generally in England for 1s. per acre, 36 Hen. VIII., 1544. The whole rental of the kingdom was about £6,000,000 in 1600; about £14,000,000 in 1688; in 1798 Mr. Pitt proposed his Income Tax of 10 per cent. on an estimate of 100 millions, taking the rent of land at 50 millions, that of houses at 10 millions, and the profits of trade at 40 millions; but in his estimate were exempted much land and the inferior class of houses. The rental of the United Kingdom was estimated at £59,500,000 in 1851.* An act for rendering more easy the transfer of land was passed in 1862. See Agriculture.

A species of land-tax was exacted in England in the 10th century, which produced £82,000 (see Danegelt) in.....1018

Land Banks were proposed by Yarranton in.....1648

The land-tax imposed 1699 grew out of a subsidy scheme of 4s. in the pound, which produced £500,000 in.....1692

A Land Credit Company for Silesia was established by Frederick the Great (see Credits Foncières), 1763

Landed Estates Court, established to "facilitate the sale and transfer of land in Ireland" (see Encumbered Estates Act).....1858

The Land Registry Office was opened in.....1862

From the Revolution to the year 1800, the land-tax had yielded £227,000,000.

Ministers were left in a minority in the House of Commons on the Land-tax Bill in 1767, it being the first instance of the kind on a money-bill since the Revolution. Its rate varied in different years from 1s. to 4s. in the pound.

The tax in 1819 produced £1,418,337; in 1820, £1,338,420; in 1830, £1,423,618; in 1840, £1,298,622; in 1852, £1,151,613.

LANDEN or NEEERWINDEN, Belgium. Near here the French under Marshal Luxembourg defeated the Allies, commanded by William III. of England, chiefly through the cowardice of the Dutch, July 19 (N.S. 29), 1693. The Duke of Berwick, illegitimate son of James II., fighting on the side of France, was taken prisoner.

LANDGRAVE (from land and grave, a count), a German title, which commenced in 1130 with Louis III. of Thuringia, and became the title of the house of Hesse about 1263.

LANDLORD. See Rent.

LANDSHUT (Silesia), where the Prussians were defeated by the Austrians under Marshal Laudohn, June 23, 1760.

LANGSIDE (S. Scotland), where the forces of the regent of Scotland, the Earl of Murray, defeated the army of Mary Queen of Scots, May 13, 1568. Mary fled to England and crossed the Solway Firth, landing at Workington, in Cumberland, May 16. Soon afterward she was imprisoned by Elizabeth.

LANGUAGE must either have been revealed originally from heaven, or the fruit of human invention. The latter opinion is embraced by Horace, Lucretius, Cicero, and most of the Greek and Roman writers; the former by the Jews and Christians, and many profound modern philosophers. Some suppose Hebrew to have been the language spoken by Adam; others say that the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabic are only dialects of the original tongue. "And the whole earth was of one language and of one speech," Genesis xi., 1. The original European languages were thirteen, viz.: Greek, Latin, German, Slavonian, spoken in the East; Welsh; Biscayan, spoken in Spain; Irish; Albanian, in the mountains of Epirus; Tartarian, the old Illyrian; the Jazygian, remaining yet in Liburnia; the Chaucian, in the north of Hungary; and the Finnic, in East Friesland. From the Latin sprang the Italian, French, Spanish, and Portuguese. The Turkish is a mixed dialect of the Tartarian. From the Teutonic sprang the present German, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, English, Scotch, etc. There are 3664 known languages, or rather dialects, in the world. Of these, 937 are Asiatic, 587 European, 276 African, and 1624 American languages and dialects.—Adelung, George I. in 1724, and George II. in 1736, appointed

* The allotment of land to cottagers began with Lord Braybrooke's successful experiment in Essex of allotting small portions of land to poor families, to assist them and relieve the parish poor rates in 1819. The little colony was first called Pauper Gardens, but afterward New Village, and it is calculated that £200 per annum were saved to the parish.

regius professors of modern languages and of history to each of the universities of England. In 1861 and 1863 Professor Max Müller lectured on the "Science of Language" at the Royal Institution, London.* He divides language into three families:

I. ARYAN (in Sanscrit, noble).

Southern Division, India (Prakrit and Pali; Sanscrit; dialects of India; Gipsy).
Iranic (Parsi; Armenian, etc.).

Northern Division.

Celtic (Cymric; Cornish, Welsh, Manx, Gaelic, Breton, etc.).

Italic (Oscan; Latin; Umbrian; Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, French, etc.).

Illyric (Albanian).

Hellenic (Greek and its dialects).

Wendic (Lettic: Old Prussian. Slavonic dialects—Bohemian, Russian, Polish, Lithuanian, etc.).

Teutonic (High-German: Modern German; Low-German: Gothic; Anglo-Saxon; Dutch; Frisian; English. Scandinavian: Old Norse, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Icelandic).

II. SHEMITIC: Southern, Arabic (including Ethiopic and Amharic). Middle, Hebraic (Hebrew, Samaritan, Phenician inscriptions). Northern, Aramaic (Chaldee, Syriac, Cuneiform inscriptions of Babylon and Nineveh).

III. TURANIAN (from Tura, swiftness).

Northern Division, Tungusic (Chinese, etc.); Mongolic; Turkic; Samoyedic, and Finnic.

Southern Division, Taic (Siamese, etc.); (Himalayas); Malayic (Polynesian, etc.); Gangetic; Lonitic (Burmese, etc.); Munda; Tamulic.

LANGUE D'OC. See Troubadours.

LANDSDOWN (Somersetshire). The Parliamentary army, under Sir Wm. Waller, was here defeated, July 5, 1643.

LANTERNS of scraped horn were invented in England, it is said, by Alfred; and it is supposed that horn was used for window-lights also, as glass was not known in Alfred's reign, 872-901.—Stow. London was lighted by suspended lanterns with glass sides, 1415.

LANTHANUM, a rare metal discovered in the oxide of cerium, by Mosander, in 1839.

LAOCOON, an exquisite Grecian work of art, executed in marble, was modeled by Agesander, Athenodorus, and Polydorus, all of Rhodes, and about 80 eminent statues; it represents the death of the Trojan hero Laocoon, priest of Neptune, and his two sons, as described by Virgil, Æneis ii., 200. It was discovered in 1506 in the Sette Salle near Rome, and purchased by Pope Julius II. It is now in the Vatican.

LAODICEA. See Seven Churches.

LAON (N. France). Here a succession of actions between the Allies (chiefly the Prussians) and the French was fought under the walls of the town, which ended in the defeat of the latter with great loss, March 9, 10, 1814.

LA PEROUSE'S VOYAGE. In 1785 La Perouse sailed from France for the Pacific, with the Boussole and Astrolabe under his command, and was last heard of from Botany Bay, in March, 1788. Several expeditions were subsequently dispatched in search of Perouse, but no certain information was had until Captain Dillon, of the East India ship Research, ascertained that the French ships had been cast away on the New Hebrides, authenticated by articles which Captain Dillon brought to Calcutta, April 9, 1828.

LAPLAND, or SAMELAND, N. Europe, nominally subject to Norway in the 13th century, and now to Sweden and Russia.

LARCENY. (French, larcen; Latin, latrocinium). See Theft.

LA ROTHÈRE (France), BATTLE OF, between the French, commanded by Napoleon, and the Prussian and Russian armies, which were defeated with great loss after a desperate engagement, Feb. 1, 1814. This was one of Napoleon's last victories.

LARYNGOSCOPE, an instrument consisting of a concave mirror, by which light is thrown upon a small plane mirror placed in the posterior part of the cavity of the mouth. By its means the vocal chords of the interior of the larynx, etc., are exhibited and have been photographed. One constructed by Dr. Türk, in 1857, was modified by Dr. Czermak, who exhibited it in action in London in 1862. A similar apparatus is said to have been constructed by Mr. John Avery, a surgeon in London, in 1846, and used by M. Garcia.

* Cardinal Giuseppe Mezzofanti (1774-1848) knew 114 languages or dialects; and Niebuhr knew 20 languages in 1807, and more afterward.

LATERAN, a church at Rome, dedicated to St. John, was originally a palace of the Laterani, and was given to the bishops of Rome by Constantine, and inhabited by them till their removal to the Vatican in 1377. Eleven councils have been held here.

LATHAM HOUSE, Lancashire, was heroically defended for three months against the Parliamentarians by Charlotte, countess of Derby. She was relieved by Prince Rupert, May, 1644. The house was, however, surrendered Dec. 4, 1645, and dismantled.

LATHE. The invention is ascribed to Talus, a grandson of Dædalus, about 1240 B.C. Pliny ascribes it to Theodorus of Samos, about 600 B.C.

LATIN KINGDOM, EMPIRE, ETC. See Latinum; Eastern Empire, 1204; and Jerusalem.

LATIN LANGUAGE (founded on the Oscan, Etruscan, and Greek), one of the original languages of Europe, and from which sprang the Italian, French, and Spanish. See Latinum. A large portion of our language is derived from the Latin. It ceased to be spoken in Italy about 581, and was first taught in England by Adelmus, brother of Ina, in the 7th century. The use of Latin in law deeds in England gave way to the common tongue about 1000; was revived in the reign of Henry II.; and again was replaced by English in the reign of Henry III. It was finally discontinued in religious worship in 1553, and in conveyancing and in courts of law in 1731 (by 4 Geo. II., c. 25). A corrupt Latin is still spoken in Roumelia.

LATITUDE. First determined by Hipparchus of Nice, about 163 B.C. It is the extent of the earth, or of the heavens, reckoned from the equator to either pole. Maupertuis, in 1737, in latitude 66° 20, measured a degree of latitude, and made it 69° 493 miles. Swanberg, in 1803, made it 69° 292. At the equator, in 1744, four astronomers made it 68° 732; and Lambton, in latitude 12, made it 61° 743. Mudge, in England, made it 69° 143. Cassini, in France, in 1713 and 1740, made it 69° 12; and Biot, 68° 769; while a recent measure in Spain makes it but 68° 63—less than at the equator, and contradicts all others, proving the earth to be a prolate spheroid (which was the opinion of Cassini, Bernoulli, Euler, and others) instead of an oblate spheroid.

LATIUM, now CAMPANIA (Italy), the country of Latinus, king of Janiculum, 1240 B.C. Laurentum was the capital of the country in the reign of Latinus, Lavinium under Æneas, and Alba under Ascanius. See Italy and Rome.

LAUBENBURG, a duchy, N. Germany; was conquered from the Wends by Henry the Lion of Saxony about 1152; ceded to Hanover, 1689; incorporated with the French Empire, 1810; ceded to Denmark, 1815; annexed by Prussia, Aug. 14, 1865; possession taken Sept. 15 following. See Gastein. Population in 1855, 50,147.

LAUREATE. See Poet Laureate.

LAUREL was sacred to Apollo, god of poetry; and from the earliest times the poets and generals of armies, when victors, were crowned with laurel. Petrarch was crowned with laurel, April 8, 1341.—The Prunus laurocerasus was brought to Britain from the Levant before 1629; the Portugal laurel, Prunus lusitana, before 1648; the royal bay, Laurus indica, from Madeira, 1665; the Alexandrian laurel, Ruscus racemosus, from Spain, before 1713; the glaucous laurel, Laurus aggregata, from China, 1806 or 1821.

LAURENTIALIA were festivals celebrated at Rome in honor of Acca Laurentia, who is said to have been either the nurse of Romulus or Remus, or a rich dissolute woman, who bequeathed her property to the Roman people. They commenced about 621 B.C., and were held on the last day of April and the 23d of December.

LAURUSTINE, Viburnum Tinus, an evergreen shrub, was brought to England from the south of Europe before 1596.

LA VALETTEA. See Malta.

LAVALETTE'S ESCAPE. Count Lavalette, for aiding the Emperor Napoleon on his return in 1815, was condemned to death, but escaped from prison in the clothes of his wife, during a last interview, Dec. 20, 1815. Sir Robert Wilson, Michael Bruce, Esq., and Captain J. H. Hutchinson, were convicted of aiding the escape, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the French capital, April 24, 1816. Lavalette was permitted to return to France in 1820, and died in retirement in 1830.

LA VENDÉE (W. France). The French Royalists of La Vendée took to arms in March, 1793, and were successful in a number of hard-fought battles with the Republican armies between July 12, 1793, and Jan. 1, 1794, when they experienced a severe reverse. Their leader, Henri, comte de la Rochejaquelein, was killed, March 4, 1794. The war was terminated by General Hoche in 1796. A treaty of peace was signed at Luçon, Jan. 17, 1800. See Chouans.

LAVENDER, Lavandula spica. Brought from the south of Europe before 1568.

LAW'S BUBBLE. John Law, of Edinburg (1681), became comptroller general of the finances of France upon the strength of a scheme for establishing a bank, and an East India and a Mississippi Company, by the profits of which the national debt of France was to be paid off. He first offered his plan to Victor Amadeus, king of Sardinia, who told him he was not powerful enough to ruin himself. The French ministry accepted it; and in 1716 he opened a bank in his own name, under the protection of the Duke of Orleans, regent of France, and the deluded rich of every rank subscribed for shares both in the bank and the companies. In 1718 Law's was declared a royal bank, and the shares rose to upward of twenty fold the original value, so that in 1719 they were worth more than eighty times the amount of all the current specie in France. In 1720 this fabric of false credit fell to the ground, spreading ruin throughout the country. Law died in poverty in 1729 at Venice.—The South Sea Bubble in England occurred in the fatal year 1720. See South Sea.

LAWS. See Codes, Canons, and Civil Law. The Jewish law was given by God, and promulgated by Moses, 1491 B.C.

The laws of Phoroneus, in the kingdom of Argos, (1807 B.C.), were the first Attic laws; they were reduced to a system by Draco, for the Athenians, 623 B.C., whose code was superseded by that of Solon, 594 B.C.

The Spartan laws of Lycurgus were made about 844 B.C.; they remained in full force for 700 years, and formed a race totally different from all others living in civilized society.

The Roman laws, the Twelve Tables, were published 449 B.C., and remained in force till Justinian, nearly 1000 years.

LAWYERS.

Pleaders of the bar, or barristers, are said to have been first appointed by Edward I. . . . 1291
Sergeants, the highest members of the bar, were alone permitted to plead in the Court of Common Pleas. The first king's counsel under the degree of sergeant was Sir Francis Bacon in . . . 1604
Law Association Charity founded in . . . 1817
Incorporated Law Society formed in 1823; plan enlarged, 1825; a charter obtained, 1831; renewed, 1845. The building in Chancery Lane, from the designs of Vulliamy, was commenced in . . . 1829
Juridical Society established in . . . 1855
(See Barristers, Counsel.)

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY was founded in 1843. It holds meetings during the session of Parliament, and publishes a journal and reports. Its first chairman was Lord Brougham, who introduced the subject of Law Reform by a most eloquent speech in the House of Commons on Feb. 7, 1825. Many acts for Law Reform have been passed since, and vigorous measures were proposed by the late Lord Chancellor Westbury.

LAYAMON'S BRUT, or Chronicle of Britain, a poetical semi-Saxon paraphrase of the Brut of Wace, made between 1100 and 1230, was published with a literal translation by Sir Frederick Madden in 1847.

LAYBACH (near Trieste, in Illyria). A congress met here in Jan., 1821, and was attended by the sovereigns of Austria, Russia, Prussia, and Naples. It broke up in May, after having issued two circulars, stating it to be their resolution to occupy Naples with Austrian troops, and put down popular insurrections.

LAYER'S CONSPIRACY. Christopher Layer, a barrister, conspired with other persons to seize George I., the Prince of Wales, Lord Cadogan, and the principal officers of state, to take the Tower by surprise, to plunder the Bank, and finally to bring in the Pretender. He was hanged, May 17, 1723.

LAZZARO, Sr. (N. Italy.) Here the King of Sardinia and the Imperialists defeated the French and Spaniards after a long and severe conflict, June 4, 1746.

LAZZARONI (from lazzaro, Spanish for a pauper or leper), a term applied by the Spanish viceroys to the number of degraded beings in Naples, who live like cattle, half clothed and houseless. No man was born a lazzaro; and he who turned to a trade ceased to be one. The viceroy permitted the lazzaroni to elect a chief, with whom he conferred respecting the imposts on the goods brought to the markets. In 1647 Masaniello held the office. See Naples. In 1793 Ferdinand IV. enrolled several thousands of lazzaroni as pikemen (spontaneers), who generally favored the Court party. On May 15, 1848, they were permitted, on the king's behalf, to commit fearful ravages on the ill-fated city.—Colletta.

LEAD is found in various countries, and is abundant in various parts of Britain, and in some places richly mixed with silver ore. Pattinson's valuable method for extracting the silver was made known in 1829. The famous Clydesdale mines were discovered in 1513. The lead-mines of Cumberland and Derbyshire yield about 15,000 tons per annum. British mines produced 65,529 tons of lead in 1855, and 69,266 tons in 1857. Lead-pipes for the conveyance of water were brought into use in 1236. In 1859, 23,690 tons of pig and sheet lead were imported, and 18,414 tons exported.

LEAGUES. Four kings combined to make war against five, about 1913 B.C. (Gen. xiv.). The kings of Canaan combined against the invasion of the Israelites, 1451 B.C. The more eminent Greek leagues were the Ætolian, powerful about 320 B.C., which lasted till 189 B.C., and the Achaean, revived 250 B.C., which was broken up by the conquest of Greece by the Romans, 146 B.C. The fall of these leagues was hastened by discussion.

Lombard leagues against emperors (see Lombards), 1176 and 1225

League of the Public Good was between the dukes of Burgundy, Brittany, and Bourbon, and other princes against Louis XI. of France. . . . 1465-72
League of Cambray against Venice. . . . 1508
Holy League (the pope, Venice, etc.), against Louis XII. . . . 1510
League of Smalcald 1529 League of the Beggars (Gueux; the Protestants so called, though Roman Catholics joined the league) to oppose the institution of the Inquisition in Flanders. . . . 1566

THE HOLY LEAGUE, so denominated by way of eminence, to prevent the accession of Henry IV. of France, who was then of the Reformed religion, was commenced at Peronne in 1576, and lasted till 1593, when Henry embraced Romanism.
League of Wurtzburg, by Catholics; of Halle, by Protestants. . . . 1610
League against the emperor. . . . 1626
Solemn League and Covenant in Scotland against the episcopal government of the Church, and the regal authority (see Covenant) . . . 1638
League of Augsburg against France. . . . 1686

LEAP-YEAR, or BISSEXTILE, originated with the astronomers of Julius Caesar, 45 B.C. They fixed the solar years at 365 days 6 hours, comprising, as they thought, the period from one vernal equinox to another; the six hours were set aside, and at the end of four years, forming a day, the fourth year was made to consist of 366 days. The day thus added was called intercalary, and was placed a day before the 24th of February, the sixth of the calends, which was reckoned twice, hence called bissextile, or twice sixth. This added day with us is Feb. 29th. See Calendar. This arrangement makes the year nearly three minutes longer than the astronomical year: to obviate this, 1700 and 1800 were not, and 1900 will not be leap-year, but 2000 will be one. See Julian Year, Gregorian Calendar, etc.

LEARNING AND THE ARTS flourished among the Greeks, especially under Pisistratus, 537 B.C., and Pericles, 444 B.C.; and with the Romans at the commencement of the Christian era, under Augustus. The Greek refugees caused their revival in Italy, particularly after the taking of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453, and the invention of printing shortly before the period of the Renaissance. Leo X. and his family (the Medici) greatly promoted learning in Italy in the 16th century, when literature revived in France, Germany, and England. See Literature, and lists of authors under Greek, Latin, English, and other languages.

LEASE (from the French laisser, to let), a kind of conveyance invented by Sergeant Moore soon after the Statute of Uses, 27 Henry VIII., 1535. Acts relating to leases were passed in 1856 and 1858.

LEATHER was very early known in Egypt and Greece, and the thongs of manufactured hides were used for ropes, harness, etc., by all ancient nations. The Gordian Knot was made of leather thongs, 330 B.C. A leather cannon was proved at Edinburgh, fired three times, and found to answer, Oct. 23, 1778.—Philips. The duty on leather produced annually in England £450,000, and in Ireland about £50,000. It was abolished May 29, 1830. Many bankruptcies were declared in the leather trade in the autumn of 1860 in England. In the case of Lawrence, Mortimore & Co., enormous fraudulent dealings in bills were disclosed. A plan for making artificial leather out of cuttings, etc., was made known in 1860.—Leather-cloth is unbleached cotton coated with a composition of boiled linseed oil and turpentine, colored with various pigments, invented by Messrs. Crockell, of Newark, U.S., and patented in 1849.

LECH, a river, S. Germany, near which the cruel General Tilly was defeated by the Swedes, under Gustavus Adolphus, April 30, 1632. Tilly died of his wounds soon after.

LECTURES. Those on physic were instituted by Dr. Thomas Linacre, of the College of Physicians (founded by Henry VIII.), about 1502. Clinical lectures, at the bedside of the patient, were begun by Sir B. C. Brodie (1813-17); Mr. G. Maciawain, about 1824, gave surgical clinical lectures in connection with a dispensary. See Gresham College, Boyle's Lectures, Royal and London Institutions, etc. The political lectures of Thelwall, commenced in January, 1795, were interdicted by an act of Parliament. In the autumn of 1857 and since, many distinguished noblemen and gentlemen lectured at Mechanics' Institutes. An act passed in 1835 prohibited the publication of lectures without the consent of the lecturers. Public lectures are very popular in the United States. They are given in almost every city and village in the Northern and Western States during the winter months. The names of over two hundred professed lecturers appeared in the public prints at the close of 1860.

LEEDS (Yorkshire), the Saxon Loidis, once a Roman station, received a charter in 1627. Population in 1861, 207,165.

Shenfield grammar-school founded.....1552
 Colored Cloth-hall built.....1758
 Literary and Philosophical Society established...1820
 Enfranchised by the Reform Act.....1832
 Magnificent new town hall opened by the queen,

LEEK is the Welsh emblem, in consequence of a command from Dewi, or David, afterward Archbishop of St. David's, in 519. On the day that King Arthur won a great victory over the Saxons, Dewi is said to have ordered the soldiers to place a leek in their caps.

LEESBURG HEIGHTS. See Ball's Bluff.

LEGACIES. In 1780 receipts for legacies were subjected to a stamp duty, and in 1796 the legacy duty was imposed. The impost was increased several times subsequently, particularly in 1805, 1808, and 1845. The revenue derived from it varies considerably in amount in consecutive years; but it may be said to average from about one and a half to two millions annually. In 1853 the legacy duty was extended to landed or real property. See Succession Duty Act.

LEGATES. Ambassadors from the pope: the legate's court was erected in 1516 by Cardinal Wolsey, to prove wills, and for the trial of offenses against the spiritual laws.—Law Dict. It was soon discontinued.

LEGATIONS were the twenty administrative divisions in the States of the Church, governed by legates. They rebelled in 1859-60, and are nearly all included in the kingdom of Italy. See Rome.

LEGHORN, Livorno, in Tuscany, a mere village in the 15th century, owes its prosperity to the Medici family. It suffered dreadfully by an earthquake in 1741; was entered by the French army, July 27, 1796, but the British property had been removed. It was evacuated by the French in 1799, and retaken in 1800. It was unsuccessfully attacked by the British and Italian forces, Dec., 1813. The Austrians took this city from the insurgents, May 12 and 13, 1849, and quelled a slight insurrection, July, 1857. In June, 1857, above 60 persons were killed at the theatre, through an alarm of fire.

LEGION, Legio, a corps of soldiers in the Roman armies, first formed by Romulus, when it consisted of 3000 foot and 300 horse, about 750 B.C. When Hannibal was in Italy, 216 B.C., the legion consisted of 5200 soldiers; and under Marius, in 83 B.C., it was 6200 soldiers, besides 700 horse. There were ten, and sometimes as many as eighteen, legions kept at Rome. Augustus had a standing army of 45 legions, together with 25,000 horse and 37,000 light-armed troops, about 5 B.C.; and the peace establishment of Adrian was thirty of these formidable brigades. The peace of Britain was protected by three legions. A legion was divided into ten cohorts, and every cohort into six centuries, with a vexillum, or standard, guarded by ten men. The French army has been divided into legions since Francis I. See Thundering Legion.

LEGION or HONOR, a French order embracing the army, civil officers, and other individuals distinguished for services to the state; instituted by Napoleon Bonaparte when First Consul, May 19, 1802. On the restoration of the Bourbons, Louis XVIII. confirmed this order in April, 1814. The honor was conferred on many British subjects who distinguished themselves in the Russian War, 1854-6, and in the Paris Exhibition of 1855.

LEGITIMISTS, a term (since 1814) applied to those who support the claims of the elder branch of the Bourbon family to the throne of France; whose representative is Henry, duc de Bordeaux, called Comte de Chambord, born Sept. 29, 1820. They held a Congress at Lucerne on June 24-29, 1862, when about 3550 persons were present, including the Duchess of Parma. They agreed to continue a pacific policy.

LEGNANO (in Lombardy), where the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa was defeated by the Milanese and their allies, May 29, 1176, which victory led to the treaty of Constance in 1183.

LEICESTER (Central England) returned two members to Parliament in the reign of Edward I. Here Richard III. was buried, Aug. 25, 1485; and here Cardinal Wolsey died, Nov. 29, 1530. During the Civil War it was taken by Charles I., May 31, and by Fairfax, June 17, 1645. The stocking manufacture was introduced in 1680.

LEIGHLIN (W. Carlow), a see founded by St. Lase-ran about 628. Burchard, the Norwegian, the son of Garmond, founded or endowed the priory of St. Stephen of Leighlin. Bishop Doran, a worthy prelate, appointed in 1523, was murdered by his archdeacon, Maurice Cavenagh, who was hanged for the crime on the spot where he had committed the murder.—Beaton. In 1600 Leighlin was united to Ferns; the combined see united to Ossory in 1835. See Ferns and Bishops.

LEINSTER, a kingdom in 1167, now one of the four provinces of Ireland, divided into four archbishoprics by Pope Eugenius III. at a national synod, held at Kells, March 9, 1151-2, and in which his holiness was represented by Cardinal Paparo. The abduction of Devorgilla, wife of O'Ruave, a lord of Connaught, by Dermot, king of Leinster, in 1152, is asserted to have led to the landing of the English and the subsequent conquest. The province of Leinster gave the title of duke to Schomberg's son in 1690. The title became extinct in 1719, and was conferred on the family of Fitzgerald in 1766.

LEIPSI (Saxony). Famous for its University (founded in 1409) and its fair. Here Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, defeated the Imperialists under Tilly, Sept. 7, 1631, and here the Imperialists were again defeated by the Swedes under Torstensen, Oct. 13, 1642. Here took place, on Oct. 16, 18, 19, 1813, "the battle of the nations," between the French army and its allies, commanded by Napoleon (100,000), and the Austrian, Russian, and Prussian armies (240,000 strong). The French were beaten, chiefly owing to 17 Saxon battalions, their allies, turning upon them in the heat of the engagement. 80,000 men perished on the field, of whom more than 40,000 were French, who also lost 65 pieces of artillery and many standards. The victory was followed by the capture of Leipsic, of the rear-guard of the French army, and of the King of Saxony and his family.

LEITH. The port of Edinburgh was burnt by the Earl of Hertford in 1544. It was fortified by the French partisans of Queen Mary in 1560, and surrendered to the English. The "Agreement of Leith" between the superintendents and ministers was made Jan., 1572. The docks were commenced in 1720.

LELEGES, a Pelasgic tribe which inhabited Lacio-nia about 1490 B.C., and, after many contests, merged into the Hellenes.

LEMURES. The ancients supposed that the soul, after death, wandered over the world, and disturbed the peace of the living. The happy spirits were called Lares familiares, and the unhappy Lemures. The Roman festival called Lemuralia, kept on May 9, 11, 13, was instituted by Romulus about 747 B.C., probably to propitiate the spirit of the slaughtered Remus.

LENT (from the Saxon, lencten, spring). The forty days' fast observed in the Roman Catholic Church from Ash-Wednesday to Easter day, said to have been instituted by Pope Telesphorus, 130.—The early Christians did not commence their Lent until the Sunday which is now called the first Sunday in Lent; and the four days beginning with Ash-Wednesday were added by Pope Felix III. in the year 487, in order that the number of fasting days should amount to forty. Lent was first observed in England by command of Ercm-bert, king of Kent, in 640 or 641.—Baker's Chron. Flesh was prohibited during Lent; but Henry VIII. permitted the use of white meats by a proclamation in 1543, which continued in force until, by proclamation of James I. in 1619 and 1625, and by Charles I. in 1627 and 1631, flesh was again wholly forbidden. See Quadragesima.

LEON, KINGDOM OF. See Spain.

LEONINES. Hexameter and pentameter verses, rhyming at the middle and the end, are said to have been first made by Leoninus, a canon, about the middle of the 12th century, or by Pope Leo II. about 682.

LEPANTO (near Corinth), BATTLE OF, Oct. 7, 1571; when the combined fleets of Spain, Venice, Genoa, Malta, and Pius V., commanded by Don John of Austria, defeated the whole maritime force of the Turks, and checked their progress.

LEPROSY, a skin disease described in Leviticus xiii. (B.C. 1490), which prevailed in ancient times throughout Asia. It has now almost disappeared from Europe, except in the south and in Norway. It chiefly affected the lower classes, yet occasionally has proved fatal to the very highest personages. Robert Bruce, of Scotland, died of leprosy in 1329. A hospital for lepers was founded at Granada by Queen Isabella of Castile about 1504, and a large number of leper houses were founded in Britain. Dr. Edmondson met with a case in Edinburgh in 1809.

LETTERS. See Alphabet, Belles-Lettres, Marque, and Prieteers.

LETRES DE CÂCHET, sealed letters issued by the King of France, beginning about 1670, by virtue of which those persons against whom they were directed were thrown into prison or sent into exile. The National Assembly decreed their abolition, Nov. 1, 1789.

LETTUCE, introduced into England from Flanders about 1520. It is said that when Queen Catharine wished for a salad, she had to send for lettuce to Holland or Flanders.

LEUCTRA, in Boeotia, N. Greece, the site of a battle when the Thebans, under Epaminondas, defeated the superior force of Cleombrotus, king of Sparta, July 8, 371 B.C. 4000 Spartans, with their king, were slain. The Spartans gradually lost their preponderance in Greece.

LEUTHEN (S. Prussia). See Lissa.

LEVANT (the East), a term applied to Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, etc. Levant companies, in London, were established in 1581, 1593, and 1605.

LEVELERS, a fanatical party in Germany, headed by Munzer and Störck in the 16th century, who taught that all distinctions of rank were usurpations on the rights of mankind. At the head of 40,000 men, Munzer commanded the sovereign princes of Germany and the magistrates of cities to resign their authority, and on his march his followers ravaged the country. The Landgrave of Hesse at length defeated him; 7000 of the enthusiasts fell in battle, and the rest fled; their leader was taken and beheaded at Mulhausen in 1525. The English "Levelers," powerful in Parliament in 1647, were put down by Cromwell in 1649, and their leader Lilburn imprisoned. At the period of the French Revolution some knots of persons, styled Levelers, appeared in England. A "Loyal Association" was formed against them and Republicans, by Mr. John Reeves, Nov., 1792.

LEVELS. The Great Level of the Fens is a low-lying district of about 2000 square miles, in Lincolnshire, Huntingdonshire, Cambridgeshire, and Norfolk, said to have been overflowed by the sea during an earthquake, 368. It was long afterward an inland sea in winter, and a noxious swamp in summer, and was gradually drained—by the Romans, the Saxons, and especially by the monks during the reigns of the Plantagenet kings. One of the first works on a large scale was carried out by Morton, bishop of Ely, in the reign of Henry VII. A general drainage act was passed by the advice of Lord Burghley in 1601, but little work was done till the reign of James I., who in 1621 invited over the great Dutch engineer, Cornelius Vermuyden, to assist in the general drainage of the country. After completing several great works, Vermuyden agreed (in 1629) to drain the "Great Level." He was at first prevented from proceeding with his undertaking through a popular outcry against foreigners; but eventually, aided by Francis, earl of Bedford, in spite of the great opposition of the people, for whose benefit he was laboring, he declared his great work complete in 1652. Much, however, still remained to be done; and the drainage of the Great Level employed the talents of Rennie (about 1807), and of Telford (1822), and of other eminent engineers since. In 1844 the Middle Level commission cut through certain barrier banks, and replaced them by other works. These latter were reported unsound in March, 1862; and on May 4, the outfall sluice at St. Germain's, near King's Lynn, gave way. High tides ensuing, about 6000 acres of fertile land were inundated, causing a loss of about £25,000. After unwearied, and, for a while, unsuccessful efforts, a new coffer-dam was constructed under the superintendence of Mr. Hawkshaw, which was reported sound in July. Another inundation, begun through the bursting of a marsh-land sluice, near Lynn, Oct. 4, was checked. The Levels are distinguished as the Middle, Bedford, South, and North Levels.

LEWES (Sussex), where Henry III., king of England, was defeated by Montfort, earl of Leicester, and the barons, May 14, 1264.—Blauwe. The king, his brother Richard, king of the Romans, and his son Edward, afterward Edward I., were taken prisoners. One division of Montfort's army, a body of Londoners, gave way to the furious attack of Prince Edward, who, pursuing the fugitives too far, caused the battle to be lost. See Evesham.

LEXICON. See Dictionaries.

LEXINGTON (Massachusetts), BATTLE OF, between Great Britain and the United States of America, in the War of Independence. The British obtained the advantage, and destroyed the stores of the revolted colonists, but lost in the battle 273 men, killed and wounded, April 19, 1775.—The hostilities thus commenced continued to 1783.—LEXINGTON, a town in Missouri, U.S., fortified by the Federals, was attacked by the Confederate General Price on Aug. 29, and, after a gallant resistance by Colonel Mulligan, surrendered on Sept. 21, 1861. See United States.

LEYDEN (Holland), Lugdunum Batavorum, important in the 13th century. From Oct. 31, 1573, to Oct. 3, 1574, when it was relieved, it endured a siege by the armies of Spain, during which 6000 of the inhabitants died of famine and pestilence. In commemoration the University was founded, 1575. In 1699 two thirds of the population perished by a fever, which, it is said, was aggravated by the improper treatment of Professor De la Boe. The University was almost destroyed by a vessel laden with 10,000 lbs. weight of gunpowder blowing up, and demolishing a large part of the town, and killing numbers of people, Jan. 12, 1807. The Leyden jar was invented about 1745, by Kleist, Muschenbroek, and others. See Electricity.

LIBEL. By the laws of Rome (those of the Twelve Tables), libels which affected the reputation of another were made capital offenses. In the British law, whatever renders a man ridiculous, or lowers a man in the opinion and esteem of the world, is deemed a libel. "The greater the truth, the greater the libel," the well-known law maxim of a high authority, is now disputed. Act against blasphemous and seditious libels, punishing the offender by banishment for the second offense, 6 Geo. III., 1820. Lord Campbell's Act, 6 & 7 Vict., c. 96 (1843), greatly softened the stringency of the law of libel respecting newspapers. See Trials, 1788, 1790, 1792, 1803, 1808 et seq., and 1863.

LIBERIA, the negro republic on the coast of Upper Guinea, W. Africa, was founded by the American Colonial Society, which was established by Henry Clay in 1816. Liberia was made independent in 1847; recognized in 1848; and was flourishing in 1863. The president visited the International Exhibition of London in 1862.

LIBERTINES (signifying freedmen and their sons) was a sect headed by Quintin and Corin about 1525, who held various monstrous opinions.

LIBRARIES. The first public library of which we have any certain account in history was founded at Athens by Pisistratus about 544 B.C. The second of note was founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus, 284 B.C. It was partially destroyed when Julius Cæsar set fire to Alexandria, 47 B.C. 400,000 valuable books in MS. are said to have been lost by this catastrophe.—Blair. According to Plutarch, the library at Pergamos contained 200,000 books. It came into the possession of the Romans at the death of Attalus III. (133 B.C.), who bequeathed his kingdom and wealth to the Roman people. It was added to that of Alexandria by Marc Antony. The first private library was the property of Aristotle, 334 B.C.—Strabo. The first library at Rome was instituted 167 B.C.; it was brought from Macedonia. The library of Appellion was sent to Rome by Sylla from Athens, 86 B.C. This library was enriched by the original manuscripts of Aristotle's works. A library was founded at Constantinople by Constantine the Great about A.D. 335, and was destroyed 477. A second library was formed from the remains of the first at Alexandria* (which see). Pope Gregory I. ordered that the library of the Palatine Apollo should be committed to the flames, under the notion of confining the attention of the clergy to the Scriptures. The early Chinese literature is said to have suffered a similar misfortune to that of the West in the destruction of the Alexandrian library; their Emperor Che-whang-tee ordered all writings to be destroyed, that every thing might begin anew as from his reign; and books and records were afterward recovered by succeeding emperors with great difficulty.

LIBRARIES OF EUROPE.

The first public library in Italy was founded at Florence by Nicholas Niccoli, one of the great restorers of learning. At his death, he left his library to the public, 1436. Cosmo de' Medici enriched it with the invaluable Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, Chaldaic, and Indian MSS. about 1560 The Vatican Library at Rome, founded by Pope Nicholas V. in 1446, and improved by Sixtus V., 1588; contains about 150,000 volumes and 40,000 manuscripts.

* This statement has been disputed. Theophilus, apb. of Alexandria, is said to have destroyed many books when he demolished the Temple of Serapis, 260 years previously.

Imperial Library of Vienna, founded by Frederick III. in 1440, and by Maximilian I. 1500
 Royal (now Imperial) Library of Paris, by John (1350-1363), and by Francis I. about 1520. It was said to contain 815,000 volumes and 84,000 manuscripts in 1860. A new reading-room has been built.
 Escorial at Madrid, commenced with the foundation of that sumptuous palace by Philip II. 1557
 Library of the University of Munich is said to contain 400,000 volumes and 10,000 manuscripts; and that of Göttingen, 300,000 volumes and 6000 manuscripts.
 Imperial Library at St. Petersburg (consisting principally of the spoils of Poland) was founded in 1714

LIBRARIES IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Richard de Bury, chancellor and high treasurer of England, so early as 1341 raised the first private library in Europe. He purchased thirty or forty volumes of the Abbot of St. Alban's for fifty pounds' weight of silver.
 Bodleian Library at Oxford, founded 40 Eliz., 1598: opened in 1602; contains nearly 400,000 volumes, and upward of 30,000 manuscripts.
 Cottonian Library, founded by Sir Robert Cotton about 1600; appropriated to the public, 1701; partly destroyed by fire, 1731; removed to the British Museum. 1753
 Sion College. 1623
 Royal Society in. 1667
 Radcliffean, at Oxford, founded by the will of Dr. Radcliffe, who left £40,000 to the University, 1714; opened. 1749
 University Library, Cambridge, 1720, when George I. gave £5000 to purchase Dr. Moore's collection.
 British Museum (which see). 1753
 The Libraries of the Royal Institution (founded 1803), the London Institution (1805), and the Royal College of Surgeons (1786), have classified catalogues.
 Library of the University of Dublin (1601), and the Advocates' Library in Edinburgh (1680), are extensive and valuable.*
 FREE LIBRARIES have been successfully established since 1850 at Manchester, Liverpool, Salford, etc. Many others have been formed under acts passed in 1845, 1850, and 1856.
 On Nov. 5, 1855, a proposal to establish a Free Library in the city of London was negatived, and 1857 that in Marylebone was closed for want of support.

(See Circulating Library.)

LIBRARIES OF THE UNITED STATES. In the United States there are the following public libraries:

	Founded	Volumes.
Astor Library, New York City.	1859	100,000
Mercantile Library, New York City.	1820	54,000
Society Library, New York City.	1754	40,000

State Library, Annapolis, Md.	1826	20,000
State Library, Indianapolis, Ind.	1825	20,000

These libraries are exclusive of the libraries of the different colleges, which are many of them very extensive, that of Harvard numbering 123,400 volumes, not counting pamphlets, etc.

LIBYA (Africa) was conquered by the Persians 524 B.C., and by Ptolemy Soter 320.

LICENSES. This mode of levying money was introduced by Richard I. about 1190, but was then confined to such of the nobility as desired to enter the lists at tournaments.

* In 1609 the Stationers' Company agreed to give a copy of every book published to the Bodleian Library, Oxford. By 14 Charles II., c. 23 (1662), three copies were required to be given to certain public libraries: by 8 Anne, c. 19 (1709), the number was increased to nine; by 41 Geo. III., c. 107, to eleven; which number was reduced to five by 5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 110 (1835): viz., the British Museum, the Bodleian, Oxford, the Public Library, Cambridge, the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, and Trinity College, Dublin.

Games and gaming-houses licensed in London. 1620
 License system for excisable articles enforced in various reigns, from the 12th Charles II. 1660
 Plays ordered to be licensed in. 1737
 Lottery-office-keepers to take out licenses, and pay £50 for each; this reduced the number from 400 to 51. Aug., 1773
 General licensing act, 9 Geo. IV., c. 61. 1828
 Licenses for public houses granted in 1551, and for refreshment-houses, with wine licenses, in. 1860
 The licensing system was applied to India as a kind of income tax, 1859; ceased in. 1861

LICHFIELD (Staffordshire). The see of Mercia, afterward Lichfield, was founded in 656. In 1705 the see was removed to Chester; in 1102 it was removed to Coventry, and afterward back to Lichfield, but with much opposition from the monks of Coventry. See Coventry. Dr. Samuel Butler, in 1837, was the first Bishop of Lichfield only. This see has given three saints to the Romish Church, and to the British nation one lord chancellor and three lord treasurers. It is valued in the king's books at £559 18s. 2d. Lichfield Cathedral was first built about 656. The present structure was built by Roger de Clinton, the 37th bishop, in 1148.* In Lichfield Castle, King Richard II. kept his Christmas festival, 1397, when 200 tons of wine and 2000 oxen were consumed. A charter was granted to Lichfield, constituting it a city, by Edward VI., 1549. Present income, £4500.

LICHTENSTEIN, a constitutional principality, S. Germany. Population, in 1853, 7150. Prince John, born Oct. 5, 1840, succeeded his father Alois-Joseph, Nov. 12, 1853.

LICINIAN LAW, Licinian Lex (375 B.C.), forbade any person to possess more than 500 acres of land, or more than 100 head of large cattle, or 500 of small, in the Roman states; another law, 56 B.C., of this name, imposed a severe penalty on party clubs, or societies assembled for election purposes; and another, about 103 B.C., limited the expenses of the table.

LIEGE (Belgium), a bishopric under the German Empire, from the 8th century till 1795. Liege frequently revolted against its prince-bishops. In 1467, after a severe contest, the citizens were beaten at Brusthem, and their city taken by Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, who treated them with great severity. In 1482 Liege fell into the power of De la Marck, the Boar of Ardenne, who killed the bishop, Louis of Bourbon; and was himself beheaded two years after. Liege was taken by the Duke of Marlborough, Oct. 23, 1702, and by the French and others at various times up to 1796, when it was annexed to France. It was incorporated with the Netherlands in 1814, and with Belgium in 1830. Iron-works were established at Liege in the 16th century.

LIEGNITZ. See Pfaffendorf.

LIEUTENANTS, LORD, for counties, were instituted in England, 3 Edw. VI., 1549, and in Ireland in 1831. For the lords lieutenants of Ireland, see Ireland.

LIFE-BOAT, etc.† It was stated in Sept., 1865, that there were 185 life-boats on the coasts of the United Kingdom. 3619 lives were saved in 1864 by means of rocket apparatus, life-boats, etc. In the ten years 1855-64, 30,261 lives were saved. See Wrecks.

A patent was granted to Mr. Lukin for a life-boat in 1755
 A reward offered by a committee of gentlemen in South Shields for a life-boat, 1788, obtained by Mr. Henry Greathard, of that town. 1789
 It was first put to sea, Jan. 30, 1790; and Mr. Greathard received £1200 from Parliament for this great means of saving life in cases of shipwreck.
 31 life-boats were built and 300 lives saved up to 1804

* Walter de Langton (bishop in 1296) built the chapel of St. Mary, near taken into the choir, and under Bishop Heyworth (1420) the cathedral was perfected. The building was despoiled at the Reformation, and was scandalously injured in the Parliamentary War (when its monuments, its fine sculptures, and beautifully painted windows were demolished); but it was repaired at the Restoration, and again thoroughly in 1788.

† LIFE-PRESERVER, the apparatus of Captain Manby (brought into use in Feb., 1808), effects a communication with the distressed vessel by a rope, thrown by a shot from a mortar, with a line attached to it. For the night, a night-bell is provided with a hollow case of thick pasteboard, and a fuse and quick match, and charged with fifty balls, and a sufficiency of powder to inflame them. The fuse is so graduated that the shell shall explode at the height of 300 yards. The balls spread a brilliant light for nearly a minute, and give a clear view of every surrounding object. In 20 years, 38 vessels and 410 of their crews and passengers had been saved. Captain Manby died Nov. 18, 1854, aged 89.

THE BOAT-LOWERING APPARATUS, invented by Mr. Charles Clifford, of London, in 1856, has been much approved of, and is generally adopted in the royal navy.

The Duke of Northumberland offered a reward of £105 for a life-boat fulfilling certain conditions, 1850; obtained by Mr. James Beeching, of Yarmouth.....1851
 The tubular life-boat of Mr. H. Richardson, the Challenger, patented in Jan.; a cruise was made by him from Liverpool to London in it.....1852
 The National Life-boat Institution founded in 1824; its journal, the "Life-boat," published, 1852. In 1856 its funds were enlarged by a bequest of £10,000 from Hamilton Fitzgerald, Esq.

LIFE-GUARD. WASHINGTON'S. This corps, varying in numbers, at different times, from 60 to 250 men, was formed in the spring of 1776. The men were not less than 5 feet 9 inches, nor more than 5 feet 10 inches in height, and selected from the various regiments of the Continental army for their moral and personal perfections. Their usual duty was to protect the person, baggage, and papers of the commander-in-chief. The last survivor of this corps was Uzal Knapp, of Orange County, New York, who died in Jan., 1856, and was buried at the foot of the flag-staff, in front of Washington's head-quarters at Newburg, on the Hudson. A neat freestone monument erected over his remains was dedicated on the 18th of June, 1860, at which time there was a large civic and military procession.

LIGHT. The law of refraction discovered by Snellius about 1624. The motion and velocity of light discovered by Reaumur, and after him by Cassini, and calculated by Roemer (1676, and Bradley (1729). Its velocity ascertained to be about 190,000,000 of miles in sixteen minutes, or nearly 200,000 miles in a second, which is a million of times swifter than the velocity of a cannon ball, about 1667. The light of the sun is eight minutes and eight seconds in its transmission through the space from that orb to the earth. The undulatory theory of light, its polarization, and its chemical action, have all been made known in the present century by Drs. Thos. Young, Fresnel, Malus, Arago, Biot, Brewster, Wheatstone, Kitter, Niépce, Daguerre, Talbot, etc. See Optics, Photography.

LIGHT-HOUSES, anciently called Pharos (and now phare, French; fare, Italian), from one erected at Pharos, near Alexandria, Egypt, 550 feet high, said to have been visible forty-two miles, about 285 B.C. There was one at Messina, at Rhodes, etc. The light was obtained by fires. The first true light-house erected in England was the Eddystone Light-house in 1759-60.

BRITISH LIGHT-HOUSES.

By the report of the Commissioners on Lights, etc. (1861), we learn that there was then 171 shore-lights in England, 113 in Scotland, and 73 in Ireland (total 357); and 47 floating-lights.

The French have 224 light-houses on shore.

The source of light in our light-houses is principally oil; but in harbor-lights gas has been successfully used. Glass reflectors were used in 1750, and copper ones in 1807. A common coal fire-light was discontinued at St. Bees so recently as 1822. Fresnel's Dioptric* system (devised about 1819) was adopted for the first time in England by Messrs. Wilkins, at the direction of the Trinity Board, July 1, 1836.

The most brilliant artificial light ever produced—derived from magneto-electricity by a machine devised by Professor Holmes—was first employed at the South Foreland Light-house, near Dover, on Dec. 8, 1858; and at Dungeness (or Dungeness) in 1862. Mr. Holmes's arrangement, and a similar one constructed by M. Serin, were shown at the International Exhibition, London, in 1862.

Lime-light (which see) employed at the South Foreland light-house in 1861.

The cost of erecting the three great British light-houses—viz., the Skerry-Vore (west coast), 158 feet high, was £83,126; the Bishop Rock, Scilly Isles, 145 feet high, £36,559; and the Bell Rock, Scotland, 117 feet high, £61,331.

LIGHT-HOUSES IN THE UNITED STATES. Unlike other nations, the United States lights her coast at the expense of the government. The coast is divided into districts, each district under the care of a light-house inspector, whose duty it is to see that every thing is done, and well done. In 1860 there were 491 light-stations on the coast of the United States, which showed 576 lights. The cost of lighting the coast and buoying the harbors is nearly as follows:

Light-houses.....	$594,033 99
Light-vessels.....	211,910 14
Buoys and beacons.....	126,988 77
Total.....	$932,932 90

Many of the light-houses of the United States are unsurpassed by any in the world, and are of exceedingly difficult construction. The most noted is that of Minot's Ledge, in Massachusetts Bay. The difficulties of erecting this light-house can not be exaggerated. The first one was erected in 1847. It was supported on iron piles 12 inches in diameter. These were firmly braced and tied together with wrought iron bands. The structure was finished in 1849, and stood till the terrible storm of April, 1851, when the iron supports were twisted as if they had been made of straw, and the whole structure was swept away. In 1852 Congress appropriated money to rebuild the light. The design was a granite tower in the shape of the frustum of a cone. The base is 30 feet in diameter, and the whole height 88 feet. The lower 40 feet are solid. Some idea of the difficulty of the work may be formed when it is known that, though every moment when the tide left the rock uncovered was taken advantage of, it was a year before the first layer of stones for the foundation was securely laid. It was first lighted in 1860.

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS were first set up for the protection of buildings by Franklin shortly after 1752, when he brought down electricity from a thunder-cloud. The first in England was set up at Payne's Hill by Dr. Watson. In 1766 one was placed on the tower of St. Mark, at Venice, which has since escaped injury, although frequently consumed by lightning previously. A powder magazine at Glogau, in Silesia, was saved by a conductor in 1782; and, from the want of one, a quantity of gunpowder was ignited at Brescia in 1767, and above 3000 persons perished. In 1762, Dr. Watson recommended conductors to be used in the navy; and they were employed for a short time, but soon fell into disuse from want of skill and attention. Mr. (since Sir William) Snow Harris devoted his attention to the subject from 1820 to 1854, and published a work in 1843 detailing his experiments. In 1830, above thirty ships were fitted up with his conductors, and in 1842 his plans were adopted, and his conductors are now manufactured in the royal dock-yards. In 1854 Parliament granted him £5000. In the United States, Quimby's lightning conductors are considered the most efficacious, and are generally used.

LIGNY (Belgium), where a battle was fought, June 16, 1815, just previously to that of Waterloo, between the Prussian army under Blücher, and the French army commanded by Napoleon, in which the former was defeated. Blücher, however, arrived on the field of Waterloo in the evening at a most critical moment.

LIGURIANS, OR REDENPTORISTS, a Roman Catholic order, established in 1732 by Alfonso de Liguori, and approved by Pope Benedict XIV. in 1759.

LIGURIANS, a Celtic tribe, N. Italy, invaded the Roman territory, and were defeated 238 B.C. They were not subjugated till 112 B.C. The LIGURIAN REPUBLIC, founded in May, 1797, upon the ruins of the republic at Genoa, was incorporated with France in 1805, and then merged into the kingdom of Italy.

LILAC-TREE. Syringa. The Persian lilac from Persia was cultivated in England about 1638; the common lilac by Mr. John Gerard about 1597.

LILY, a native of Persia, Syria, and Italy, was brought to England before 1460; the Martagon from Germany, 1506.

LILYBÆUM, a strong maritime fortress of Sicily, was besieged by Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, 276 B.C., and was relieved by the Carthaginians 275 B.C. It was taken by the Romans 241 B.C., after a siege of nine years, which led to the end of the Second Punic War.

LIMA (Peru). In 1534, Pizarro, marching through Peru, was struck with the beauty of the valley of Rimac, and there he founded this city, and gave it the name of Ciudad de los Reyes, or city of the kings, 1535. Here he was assassinated, June 26, 1541. Awful earthquakes occurred here, 1586, 1630, 1687, and Oct. 28, 1746. In 1854-5 thousands perished by yellow fever. Mr. Sullivan, the British consul, was assassinated at Lima, Aug. 11, 1857.

LIME OR LINDEN-TREE, probably introduced in the 16th century. The lime-trees in St. James's Park are said to have been planted at the suggestion of Evelyn, who recommended multiplying odoriferous trees in his work "Fumifugium" (1661). One of these trees, planted in Switzerland in 1410, existed in 1720, the trunk being 36 feet in circumference.

* From the Greek dia, through, and optomai, I see; the light being condensed by and transmitted through lenses. The system is an adaptation of the discoveries of Buffon, Condorcet, Brewster, and others.

LIME-LIGHT, produced by the combustion of oxygen and hydrogen or carbureted hydrogen on a surface of lime. This light evolves little heat and does not vitiate the air. It is also called Drummond Light, after Lieut. Drummond, who successfully produced it as a first-class light about 1826, and employed it on the ordnance survey. It is said to have been seen at a distance of 112 miles. It was tried at the South Foreland Lighthouse in 1861.

LIMERICK, anciently Lumneach (S.W. Ireland). About 550, St. Munchin is said to have founded a bishopric and built a church here, which latter was destroyed by the Danes in 853. Donald O'Brien, king of Limerick, founded the cathedral about 1200. Limerick obtained its charter in 1195, when John Stafford was made first provost; and its first mayor was Adam Servant, in 1198. It was taken by Ireton after six months' siege in 1655. In Aug., 1691, it was invested by the English and Dutch, and surrendered on most honorable terms, Oct. 3, same year. * An awful explosion of 218 barrels of gunpowder greatly shattered the town, killing 100 persons, Feb. 1, 1694. Another explosion of gunpowder here killed many persons, Jan. 2, 1837. Awful and destructive tempest, Jan. 6-7, 1839.

LIMITED LIABILITY. An act for limiting the liability of joint-stock companies, 18 & 19 Vict., c. 133 (passed 1855), was amended 1856-7-8. On May 31, 1864, "3830 joint-stock companies had been formed and registered on the limited liability principle, and 938 had ceased to exist."

LINCELES (N. France), where the allied English and Dutch armies defeated the French, Aug. 18, 1793. General Lake commanded three battalions of brave foot-guards.

LINCOLN, the Roman Lindum Colonia, and at the period of the Conquest rich and populous. It was taken several times by Saxons and Danes. The castle was built by William I. in 1068. Without Newport Gate was fought, upon Lincoln Plain, the battle between the partisans of the Empress Maud, commanded by the Earl of Gloucester, and the army of Stephen, in which the king was defeated and taken prisoner, Feb. 2, 1141. Louis, dauphin of France, having been invited over by the discontented barons in the last year of King John's reign, was acknowledged by them as King of England here; but the nobility, summoned by the Earl of Pembroke to Gloucester to crown Henry III., marched against Louis and the barons, and defeated them in a most sanguinary fight (called the Fair of Lincoln), May 20, 1217, and Louis withdrew.

LINCOLN, BISHOPRIC OF. Sidnacester, or Lindesee and Dorchester, two distinct sees in Mercia, were united about 1078, and the see was removed to Lincoln by Bishop Remigius de Feschamp, who built a cathedral (1066), afterward destroyed by fire, but rebuilt by Bishop Alexander (1127) and Bishop Hugh of Burgundy. The diocese is the largest in the kingdom, notwithstanding that the dioceses of Ely, Oxford, and Peterborough, formerly parts of it, and now distinct sees, were farther enlarged from Lincoln in 1837. The see was valued at the dissolution of monasteries at £2065 per annum; and after many of its manors had been seized upon, it was rated in the king's books at £894 10s. 1d. Present income, £5000. It has given three saints to the Church of Rome, and to the civil state of England six lord chancellors. The great bell of the cathedral, called Great Tom of Lincoln, weighs four tons eight pounds.

LINCOLN'S INN (London) derives its name from Henry de Lacy, earl of Lincoln, who erected a mansion on this spot in the reign of Edward I., which had been the Bishop of Chichester's palace. It became an inn of court, 1810. The gardens of Lincoln's Inn Fields were laid out by Inigo Jones about 1620, and erroneously said to occupy the same space as the largest pyramid of Egypt, which is 764 feet square; Lincoln's Inn Square being 821 feet by 625 feet 6 inches. Lord W. Russell was beheaded in Lincoln's Inn Fields, July 21, 1683. The square (formed in 1618) was inclosed with iron railings about 1737. The new buildings were opened Oct. 30, 1845, and the square planted. The theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields was built in 1695; rebuilt in 1714; made a barrack in 1756, and pulled down in 1848.

LINDISFARNE, OR HOLY ISLAND, on the coast of Northumberland, became a bishop's see, 635. It was ravaged by the Danes under Regnar Lodbrok in 793, and the monastery was destroyed by them in 875; the see was removed to Chester-le-street in 900, and finally to Durham in 995 (or 990).

LINLITHGOW BRIDGE (near Edinburgh), near which the forces of the Earl of Angus, who held James V. in their power, defeated the forces of the Earl of Lennox, who, after receiving promise of quarter, was killed by Sir James Hamilton, 1526. Mary Queen of Scots was born in the palace of Linlithgow, James V., her father, dying of a broken heart the same year, 1542.

LINNÆAN SYSTEM OF BOTANY, arranged by Linné or Linnæus, a Swede, in 1725-30. He classed the plants according to the number and situation of the sexual parts, and made the flower and fruit the test of his various genera. Linnæus lived from 1707 to 1778. His library and herbarium were purchased by Sir James E. (then Dr.) Smith, and given to the Linnæan Society in London, which was instituted in 1788, and incorporated March 26, 1802.

LION AND UNICORN, the former English, the latter Scottish, became the supporters of the royal arms on the accession of James I. in 1603.

LIPPE, a constitutional principality (N.W. Germany). Population, Dec., 1861, 108,513. Reigning prince, Leopold, born Sept. 1, 1821; succeeded his father, Leopold, Jan. 1, 1851.

LIPPSTADT. See Lützen.

LISBON (Olisippo, and Felicitas Julia, of the ancients) was taken by the Arabs in 716, and became important under the Moorish kings, from whom it was captured by Alfonso I. of Portugal in 1147. It was made the capital of Portugal by Emanuel, 1506. Lisbon has suffered much by earthquakes, and was almost destroyed by one, Nov. 1, 1755. See Earthquakes. The court fled to the Brazils, Nov. 10, 1807, and on Nov. 30 the French, under Junot, entered Lisbon, and held it until the battle of Vimiera, in which they were defeated by the British, under Sir Arthur Wellesley, Aug. 21, 1808. A military insurrection at Lisbon, Aug. 21, 1831, was soon suppressed, and many soldiers were executed. Massacre at Lisbon, June 9, 1834. See Portugal.

LISLE (now Lille, N. France) has a strong citadel by Vauban. It was besieged by the Duke of Marlborough and the Allies; and, though deemed impregnable, was taken after a three months' siege in 1708. It was restored by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713, in consideration of the demolition of the fortifications of Dunkirk. Lisle sustained a severe bombardment from the Austrians, who were obliged to raise the siege, Oct. 7, 1792.

LISMORE (S. Ireland). St. Carthage, first bishop, 636, says: "Lismore is a famous and holy city, of which nearly one half is an asylum where no woman dare enter." The castle (built by King John when Earl of Moreton, 1185), burnt in 1645, was rebuilt with great magnificence by the Duke of Devonshire. The Cathedral, built 636, was repaired by Cormac, son of Muretus, king of Munster, about 1180; and the bishopric was united to that of Waterford about 1363, and both to Cashel in 1839.

* By the treaty it was agreed that all arms, property, and estates should be restored; all attainders annulled, and all outlawries reversed; and that no oath but that of allegiance should be required of high or low; the freedom of the Catholic religion was secured; relief from pecuniary claims incurred by hostilities was guaranteed; permission to leave the kingdom was extended to all who desired it; and a general pardon proclaimed to all then in arms.—Burns.

LISSA (or Leuthen, Silesia), BATTLE OF, in which the King of Prussia vanquished Prince Charles of Lorraine; 6000 Austrians were slain, Dec. 5, 1757.—LISSA, in Poland, was laid in ruins by the Russian army in the campaign of 1707. See German-Italian War.

LITANIES (Greek Litaneia, supplication) were first used in processions, it is said, about 469; others say about 400. Litanies to the Virgin Mary were first introduced by Pope Gregory I. about 595. The first English litany was commanded to be used in the Reformed Churches by Henry VIII. in 1543.

LITERARY CLUB (at first called "The Club" and "Johnson's Club"), began in 1763 by Goldsmith, Reynolds, Burke, Gibbon, Jones, Garrick, Bennett, Langton, and Topham Beauclerk, with Dr. Johnson for president. The opinion formed of a new work by the Club was speedily known all over London, and had great influence. The Club still exists. Hallam, Macaulay, the Marquess of Lansdowne, and Bishop Blomfield were members; Dr. Milman, dean of St. Paul's, was in the chair at the centenary dinner on June 7, 1864.

LITERARY FUND, ROYAL, was founded in 1790, to relieve literary men of all nations, by David Williams,* the friend of Benjamin Franklin. It had its origin in this way: Floyer Sydenham, an eminent Greek scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, and translator of some of the works of Plato, having no patronage, was involved in embarrassment, and arrested and thrown into prison for a trifling debt due for his frugal meals, and there, in 1758, died of a broken heart in want and misery, when nearly eighty years of age. The sympathy excited gave rise to this institution, since bountifully supported. It was incorporated in 1818. Since 1865 various alterations in its management have been annually proposed and negatived.

LITERATURE, called also LETTERS and Belles-Lettres, is held to comprehend Eloquence, Poetry, History, Language, and their subordinates. See Bible, and also Greek, Latin, England, France, Italy, Spain, and Germany.

LITHIUM, a metal, the lightest substance in nature except the gases (its specific gravity being 0.59), is obtained from an alkaline substance termed lithia; discovered by M. Arfwedson, a Swede, in 1817.

LITHOGRAPHY (engraving on stone). The invention of it is ascribed to Alois Sennefelder, whose first essays were executed about 1796; and shortly afterward the art was announced in Germany, and was known as polyautography. It became partially known in England in 1801, et seq., but its general introduction may be referred to Mr. Ackermann, of London, about 1817. Sennefelder died in 1841. Improvements in the art have been made by Engelmann and many others. It is carried to great perfection in the United States. See Printing in Colors.

LITHOTOMY. The surgical operation of cutting for the stone was performed by the ancients. The "small apparatus," so called from the few instruments used in the operation, was practiced by Celsus about 17. The operation called the "high apparatus" is said to have been invented by De Franco, and it is thought to be the most ancient. The "great apparatus" was invented by John de Romanis about 1500.

LITHOTRITY (or bruising the stone). The apparatus produced by M. Leroy d'Etiolles in 1822 has since been improved.

LITHUANIA, formerly a grand-duchy, N.E. of Prussia. The natives (belonging to the Slavonic race) long maintained their independence against the Russians and Poles. In 1386, their Grand-duke Jagellon became King of Poland, and was baptized: Lithuania was not incorporated with Poland till 1501, when another Duke Casimir became king of that country. The larger part of Lithuania now belongs to Russia, the remainder to Prussia.

LITURGIES (from the Greek litai, prayers, and ergon, work). The Greek and Roman liturgies are very ancient, having been committed to writing about the 4th and 5th centuries. The Romish Church recognizes four: the Roman or Georgian, the Ambrosian, the Gallician, and the Spanish or Mosarabic. The Greek Church has two principal liturgies: St. Chrysostom's and St. Basil's, and several smaller ones. Parts of these liturgies are attributed to the apostles, to St. Ignatius, 250, and to St. Ambrose (died 397), and to St. Jerome (died 420). The present ENGLISH LITURGY was first composed, and was approved and confirmed by Parliament in 1547-8. The offices for morning and evening prayer were then put into nearly the same form in which we now have them. At the solicitation of Calvin and others, the Liturgy was reviewed and altered to very near its present state, 1551. It was first read in Ireland, in the English language, in 1550, and in Scotland, where it occasioned a tumult, in 1637, and was withdrawn, 1638. The Liturgy was revised by Whitehead, formerly chaplain to Anna Boleyn, and by Bishops Parker, Grindall, Cox, and Pilkington, Dean May, and Secretary Smith. See Common Prayer.

LIVERIES. The term is derived from the custom of the retainers of the lord mayor and sheriffs of London bearing habiliments of the form and color displayed by those functionaries. It was usual for the wardens of companies to deliver a purse containing 20s. to the lord mayor on the 1st of Dec. to obtain for individuals so desiring sufficient cloth to make a suit, and the privilege of wearing the livery. This added to the splendor of the mayor's train when the civic court went forth.—Ashe. Liveries were regulated by statute in 1392, and frequently since.

LIVERPOOL (W. Lancashire) is supposed to be noticed in Domesday Book under the name Esmedune, or Smedune.* Soon after the Conquest, William granted that part of the country situated between the Rivers Mersey and Ribble to Roger of Poitiers, who, according to Camden, built a castle here about the year 1059. To this circumstance is attributed the origin of the town. It afterward was held by the Earls of Chester and the Dukes of Lancaster. Population in 1581, 375,995; in 1861, 443,874.

LIVERPOOL ADMINISTRATION. Shortly after the assassination of Mr. Perceval (May 11, 1812), the Earl of Liverpool became first minister of the crown.†

* In other ancient records its appellations are Lithopol and Leyopol, signifying probably, in the ancient dialect, the lower pool; though some have deduced its etymology from a pool frequented by an aquatic fowl called the "Liver," or from a sea-weed of that name; and others from its having belonged to a family of the name of Lever, whose antiquity is not sufficiently established to justify their conclusion.

† Robert Jenkinson, born Jan. 7, 1750, entered the House of Commons under Mr. Pitt; opposed the abolition of the slave-trade in 1792;

* He was in early life a dissenting minister, and wrote on education. He was consulted by the early Revolutionists, partly in France as to the form of a Constitution for that country, by Dr. Priestley, Sir James Mackintosh, and other distinguished Englishmen having been previously declared French citizens. He died July 29, 1816.

His administration terminated when he was attacked by apoplexy, Feb. 11, 1827, and Mr. Canning succeeded as prime minister, April. In fifteen years there had been many changes.

LLANDAFF (Wales). The first known bishop was St. Dubritius, said to have died in 612. The see is valued in the king's books at £154 14s. 1d. per annum. Present income, £4200.

RECENT BISHOPS OF LLANDAFF.

LLOYD'S (London). The coffee-house kept by Lloyd, in Abchurch Lane, in 1710, afterward removed; was established finally at the Royal Exchange in 1774, and remained there till the fire in 1838. Here resort eminent merchants, underwriters, etc.; and here are effected insurances on ships and merchandise. Lloyd's is supported by subscribers who pay annually £4 4s. The books kept here contain an account of the arrival and sailing of vessels, and are remarkable for their early intelligence of maritime affairs. In 1803 the subscribers instituted the Patriotic Fund.*

LOADSTONE. See Magnetism.

LOANS for the public service were raised by Wolsey in 1522 and 1525. In 1559 Elizabeth borrowed £200,000 of the city of Antwerp to enable her to reform her own coin, and Sir Thomas Gresham and the city of London joined in the security.—Rapin. The amount of the English loans during several memorable periods was as follows:

Seven Years' War.....	1755 to 1763.....	£52,100,000
American War.....	1776 to 1784.....	75,500,000
French Revolutionary War 1793 to 1802.....		168,500,000
War against Bonaparte.....	1803 to 1814.....	206,300,000
War against Russia.....	1855 to 1856.....	16,000,000
For deficiency in revenue.....	1856.....	10,000,000

Besides the property-tax, in 1813 were raised two loans of twenty-one millions and twenty-two millions; and it deserves to be recorded that a subscription loan to carry on the war against France was filled up in London in 15 hours and 20 minutes, to the amount of eighteen millions, Dec. 5, 1796. In 1858, the East India Company raised a loan of £5,000,000.†

LOCHLEVEN CASTLE (Kinross), built on an island in the celebrated Lake of Loch Leven, it is said by the Picts, was a royal residence when Alexander III. and his queen were forcibly taken from it to Stirling. It was besieged by the English in 1301, and again in 1334. Patrick Graham, first Archbishop of St. Andrew's, was imprisoned for attempting to reform the church, and died within its walls, about 1478. The Earl of Northumberland became Lord Hawkesbury; became foreign minister under Mr. Addington in 1801; succeeded his father as Earl of Liverpool in 1808; died Dec. 4, 1828.

* The Austrian Lloyd's, an association for general, commercial, and industrial purposes, was founded at Trieste, by Baron Bruck, in 1833. It has established regular communication between Trieste and the Levant by means of a fleet of steamers, carrying the mails, and publishes a journal.

‡ French Loan on July 9, 1855, on account of the war with Russia. The French Legislature passed a bill for raising by loan 750 million francs (£30,000,000 sterling). On the 30th the total subscribed amounted to 3,652,391,985 francs (about 2,146,103,679), nearly five times the amount required. About 600 millions came from foreign countries; 2,533,888,450 from Paris; from the departments, 1,118,703,535. The number of subscribers was 316,864. No less than 231,920,155 francs was made up by subscription of 50 francs and under. The English subscription of 150,000,000 francs was returned, as double the amount required had been proffered. In May, 1859, the French government raised a loan of £20,000,000 for the Italian War from its own people without difficulty. A Turkish loan of £5,000,000, on the security of England and France, was taken up by Rothschild in Aug., 1855, and was well received; the stock rose to a small premium.

thumberland was confined in it, 1569. It is, however, chiefly remarkable as the place of the unfortunate Queen Mary's imprisonment in 1567, and of her escape on Sunday, May 2, 1568.

LOCKS. Those of the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans were clumsy contrivances. Denon has engraved an Egyptian lock of wood. Du Cange mentions locks and padlocks as early as 1351. Bramah's locks were patented in 1784. Mr. Hobbs, the American, exhibited his own locks in the Crystal Palace in 1851, and showed great skill in picking others.

LOCOMOTIVES. See Railways. The use of steam locomotives on ordinary roads is regulated by acts passed in 1861 and 1865.

LOCRI, a people of Northern Greece. They resisted Philip of Macedon, were aided by the Athenians and Thebans, and defeated by him at Chæronea, Aug. 7, 338 B.C.

LOCUSTS formed one of the plagues of Egypt, 1491 B.C. (Exod. x.). Owing to the putrefaction of vast swarms in Egypt and Libya, upward of 800,000 persons are said to have perished, 128 B.C. Palestine was infested with such swarms that they darkened the air; and after devouring the fruits of the earth, they died, and their intolerable stench caused a pestilential fever, A.D. 406. A similar catastrophe occurred in France in 837. A remarkable swarm of locusts settled upon the ground about London, and consumed the vegetables; great numbers fell in the streets, and were preserved by the curious; they resembled grasshoppers, but were three times the size, and their colors more variegated, Aug. 4, 1748. They infested Germany in 1749, Poland in 1750, and Warsaw in June, 1816. They are said to have been seen in London in 1857. Russia was infested by them in July, 1860.

LODI (N. Italy). Napoleon Bonaparte, commanding the French army, totally defeated the Austrians, commanded by General Beaulieu, after a bloody engagement, at the bridge of Lodi, May 10, 1796. All Lombardy was opened to his army, and the Republican flag floated in Milan a few days after.

LOG-LINE, used in navigation about 1570; first mentioned by Bourne in 1577. It is divided into spaces of 50 feet, and the way which the ship makes is measured by a half-minute sand-glass, which bears nearly the same proportion to an hour that 50 feet bear to a mile: the line used in the royal navy is 45 feet.

LOGARITHMS, the indexes of the ratio of numbers one to another, were invented by Baron Napier, of Merchiston, who published his work in 1614. The invention was completed by Mr. Henry Briggs, at Oxford, who published tables, 1616-18. The method of computing by means of marked pieces of ivory was discovered about the same time, and hence called Napier's bones.

LOGIC, "the science of reasoning." Eminent works on it are by Aristotle; Bacon, Novum Organon; Locke on the Understanding; and the modern treatises on Logic, by Archbishop Whately, Sir William Hamilton, and Mr. John Stuart Mill.

LOGIERIAN SYSTEM of musical education, commenced by J. B. Logier, in Jan., 1815, and introduced into the chief towns of the United Kingdom, Prussia, etc.

LOGOGRAPHIC PRINTING, in which the common words were cast in one mass, was patented by Henry Johnson, and Mr. Walter, of the Times, in 1783. Anderson's History of Commerce, vol. iv., was printed by these types in 1789.

LOI DES SUSPECTS, enacted by the French Convention, Sept. 17, 1793, during the Reign of Terror, filled the prisons of Paris. The Public Safety Bill, of a somewhat similar character, was passed Feb. 15, 1858, shortly after Orsini's attempt on the life of the emperor.

LOLLARDS (by some derived from the German lollen, to sing in a low tone), the name given to the first reformers of the Roman Catholic religion in England, and a reproachful appellation of the followers of Wickliffe.—Chaucer. The original sect is said to have been founded in 1315 by Walter Lollard, who was burned for heresy at Cologne in 1322. The Lollards are said to have devoted themselves to acts of mercy. The first Lollard martyr in England was William Sawtre, parish priest of St. Osith, London, Feb. 12, 1401, when the Lollards were proscribed by Parliament, and numbers of them were burnt alive.*

* Among others, Sir John Oldcastle, baron Cobham, was cruelly put to death in St. Giles's-in-the-Fields. His crime was the adoption of LOMBARD MERCHANTS, in England, were understood to be composed of natives of some one of the four republics of Genoa, Lucca, Florence, or Venice.—Anderson. Lombard usurers were sent to England by Pope Gregory IX. to lend money to convents, communities, and private persons who were not able to pay down the tenths which were collected throughout the kingdom with great rigor that year, 13 Hen. III., 1229. They had offices in the street named after them to this day. Their usurious transactions caused their expulsion from the kingdom in the reign of Elizabeth.

LOMBARDY (N. Italy) derived its name from the Langobardi, a German tribe from Brandenburg, said (doubtfully) to have been invited into Italy by Justinian to serve against the Goths. Their chief, Alboin, established a kingdom which lasted from 568 to 774. The last king, Desiderius, was dethroned by Charlemagne. (For a list of the Lombard kings, see Italy.) About the end of the 9th century the chief towns of Lombardy fortified themselves, and became republics. The first Lombard league, consisting of Milan, Venice, Pavia, Modena, etc., was formed to restrain the power of the German emperors in 1167. On May 29, 1176, they defeated the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa at Legnano, and eventually compelled him to sign the peace of Constance in 1183. In 1225 another league was formed against Frederick II., which was also successful. After this, petty tyrants rose in most of the cities, and foreign influence quickly followed. The Guelph and Ghibelline factions greatly distracted Lombardy, and from the 15th century to the present time it has been contended for by the German and French sovereigns. The house of Austria obtained it in 1748 and held it till 1797, when it was conquered by the French, who incorporated it into the Cisalpine Republic, and in 1805 into the kingdom of Italy. On the breaking up of the French Empire in 1815, the LOMBARDO-VENETIAN KINGDOM was established by the allied sovereigns and given to Austria, who had lost her Flemish possessions. In March, 1848, Lombardy and Venice revolted, and joined the King of Sardinia: they did not support him well; and after his defeat at Novara (March 23, 1849), were again subjected to Austria. An amnesty for political offenses was granted in 1856. Great jealousy of Sardinia was felt by Austria since 1849. In 1857 diplomatic relations were suspended; and in April, 1859, war broke out, the Austrians crossing the Ticino and entering Piedmont. The French emperor declared war against Austria, and immediately sent troops into Italy. The Austrians were defeated at Montebello, May 20; Palestro, May 30, 31; Magenta, June 4; and Solferino, June 24. By the peace of Villafranca (July 11), the largest part of Lombardy was ceded to Louis Napoleon, who transferred it to the King of Sardinia. It now forms part of the new kingdom of Italy.

LONDON. The greatest and richest city in the world. Some assert that a city existed on the spot 1107 years before the birth of Christ, and 354 years before the foundation of Rome,* and that it was the capital of the Trinobantes, 54 B.C., and long previously the royal seat of their kings. In A.D. 61 it was known to the Romans as Lundinium, or Colonia Augusta, and became the chief residence of the merchants at that period. It is said, but not truly, to have derived its name from Lud, an old British king, who was buried near where Ludgate formerly stood; but its name is from Llyn-Din, the "town on the lake."[†] It became the capital of the Saxon kingdom of Essex, and was called Lundenæster. In 1860, London and the suburbs were estimated to cover 121 square miles, 11 miles each way, being three times as large as in 1800. The population of the metropolitan districts in 1851 was 2,862,236; in 1861, 9,803,034. The population of "the city" in 1851 was 127,869; in 1861, 112,247. Revenue of the corporation in 1862, £437,341. The "port" of London extends from London Bridge to the North Foreland. See Docks.*

* LONDON CITIZENS.—To them many privileges and immunities have been granted from the time of William the Conqueror, whose great charter, granted in 1079, is still preserved in the city archives. This charter is written in beautiful Saxon characters, on a slip of parchment six inches long and one broad, and is in English as follows: "William the King greeteth William the Bishop, and Godfrey the portreeve, and all the burgesses within London friendly. And I acquaint you that I will that ye be all there law-worthy as ye were in King Edward's days. And I will that every child be his father's heir, after his father's days. And I will not suffer that any man do you any wrong. God preserve you."

† Stow incorrectly states this charter to have been given in 1209, but it bears date May 19th in the 16th year of King John's reign, which began in 1199. This charter was acted on at that period in various instances, as many of the mayors were afterward continued of right in King Edward's days. And I will that every child be his father's heir, after his father's days. And I will not suffer that any man do you any wrong. God preserve you."

‡ This terrible pestilence broke out in India, and, spreading itself westward through every country on the globe, reached England. Its ravages in London were so great that the common cemeteries were not sufficient for the interment of the dead, and various pieces of ground without the walls were assigned for burial-places. Among these was the waste land now forming the precincts of the Charter-house, where upward of 50,000 bodies were then deposited. This disorder did not subside till 1357.—Idem.

the tenets of the great reformer Wickliffe. He was misrepresented to Henry V. by the bigoted clergy as a heretic and traitor, who was actually at the head of 30,000 Lollards in these fields. About 100 infatuated people were, or feigned to be, his followers, and were taken round the altar in Wales. He suffered death, being hung on a gallows by a chain fastened round his body, and, thus suspended, burnt alive, in Dec., 1385.—Payant.

* The fables of Geoffrey of Monmouth with regard to the origin of London are unworthy of the attention of the antiquary. That London was founded by Brutus, a descendant of the Trojan Æneas, and called New Troy, or Troy-novant, until the time of Lud, who surrounded it with walls, and gave it the name of Cenr Lud, or Lud's town, etc., may be considered as mere romance.—Leigh.

† The original walls of London were the work of the Romans. Theodosius, governor of Britain, is said to have raised them, 379; but they are supposed to have been built about 306. There were originally four principal gates; but the number increased; and among others were the Porta Nova, Newgate, Doggate, Cripplegate, Aldgate, Aldersgate, Ludgate, Bridgegate, Moorgate, Bishopgate, the Postern on Tower Hill, and the only one of the city boundaries now remaining is Temple Bar, rebuilt 1679-2.

* This proclamation or decree was dated from Nonesuch, 7th July, 1580, and it was forbidden to erect new buildings where none had before existed in the memory of man. The extension of the metropolis was deemed calculated to encourage the increase of the plague; create a trouble in governing such multitudes; a dearth of victuals; multiplying of beggars and inability to relieve them; an increase of artisans more than could live together; impoverishing other cities for lack of inhabitants. The decree stated that lack of air, lack of room to walk and shoot, arose out of too crowded a city. A proclamation to the same effect was also issued by James I.

LONDON, BISHOPRIC OF, is said to have been founded in the reign of Lucius, about 179, Theanus the first archbishop. Augustin made Canterbury the metropolitan see of England. London became a bishopric under Mellitus in 604, and has yielded to the Church of Rome five saints, and to the realm sixteen lord chancellors and lord treasurers; it was valued in the king's books at £1119 8s. 4d. per annum. Present income, £19,000.

LONDON BRIDGE. One is said to have existed, 978. A bridge built of wood, 1014, was partly burned in 1136. The late old bridge was commenced about 1176 by Peter of Colechurch, and completed in 1209, with houses on each side, connected together by large arches of timber, which crossed the street. In July, 1212, a fire at the Southwark end brought crowds on the bridge; the houses at the north end caught fire likewise, and prevented their escape. Thus, it is said, upward of 3000 persons lost their lives, being either killed, burned, or drowned. The bridge was restored in 1300, and again was destroyed by fire in 1471, Feb. 13, 1632, and Sept., 1725. In 1756 all the houses were pulled down. The water-works were begun in 1552; they caught fire and were destroyed in 1774. The toll was discontinued March 27, 1782. After many repairs, in 1822 the corporation advertised for designs for a new bridge: that by John Rennie was approved, and the works were executed by his sons John and George. The first pile was driven 200 feet to the west of the old bridge, March 15, 1824, and the first stone was laid by the lord mayor, Alderman Garratt, June 15, 1825. The bridge was opened by William IV. and his queen, Aug. 1, 1831. The cost was £506,000.*

LONDON STONE. A stone said to have been placed by the Romans in Cannon Street, then the centre of the city, 15 B.C. Cheapside was at this period in the suburbs.—Burns. London Stone is one of the greatest antiquities of the city, having been known before the time of William I. It was removed from the opposite side of the way in 1742. It was against this stone that Jack Cade struck his sword, exclaiming, "Now is Mortimer lord of this city!" 1450.

LONDONDERRY, or DERRY (N. Ireland), mentioned 546. An abbey here was burned by the Danes in 753. A charter was granted to the London companies in 1615. The town was surprised, and Sir George Powlett, the governor, and the entire garrison, were put to the sword by rebels in 1666. It was besieged by O'Neal in 1641. A grant was made of Derry, with 210,000 acres of land, to various companies in London, in 1619, when it took its present name. The memorable siege of Derry by the army of James II. commenced April 20, 1689. The garrison and inhabitants were driven to the extremity of famine; but, under the direction of the Rev. George Walker, they defended it until the siege was raised by Gen. Kirke on July 30. James's army, under the French General Rosen, retired with the loss of about 9000 men.

LONE STAR, a secret society formed in 1848, in Alabama and other Southern states of the North American Union. Its object was declared to be the "extension of the institutions, the power, the influence, and the commerce of the United States over the whole of the Western hemisphere, and the islands of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans." The first acquisitions to be made by the order were Cuba and the Sandwich Islands.

LONG ISLAND, BATTLE OF. This engagement, which occurred on the 27th of August, 1776, is sometimes called the Battle of Brooklyn, and Battle of Flatbush. It occurred at a point between those villages. The Americans, under General Israel Putnam, were partly intrenched at Brooklyn. Parties under General Sullivan and Lord Stirling were in advance of the works in different directions. They were attacked by the British and Hessian troops, under Sir Henry Clinton, Lord Cornwallis, and General De Heister, and, after desperate conflicts, were defeated. About 500 Americans were killed or wounded, and 1100 made prisoners of war. Sullivan and Stirling were among the latter. The British lost in killed, wounded, and prisoners was 367. Washington crossed over from New York after the battle, and, by judicious management and the aid of a heavy fog, withdrew the remnant of the American army to New York before the British could attack it in its lines. That memorable retreat occurred early in the morning of the 30th of August.

LONGEVITY. Methuselah died, aged 969, 2349 B.C. (Gen. v., 27). In these countries the instances of it are remarkable, though rare. Goulour M'Crain, of the Isle of Jura, one of the Hebrides, is said to have kept 150 Christmases in his own house, and died in the reign of Charles I., being the oldest man on any thing approaching to authentic records for upward of 8000 years.—Greig. "In 1014 died Johannes de Temporebus, who lived 361 years (1)"—Stow. Thomas Parr, a laboring man of Shropshire, was brought to London by the Earl of Arundel in 1635, and considered the wonder of his time, being then in his 153d year, and in perfect health; but the journey and change of air and diet killed him, Nov. 15, the same year. Henry Jenkins, of Yorkshire, died in 1670, and was buried in Bolton Church-yard, Dec. 6, in that year, aged 169 years. Most cases of alleged longevity are very doubtful.

* On March 17, 1859, it was computed that there passed over London Bridge 29,498 vehicles (of which 4483 were cabs and 4286 omnibuses), and 167,910 persons (107,074 on foot, and 60,836 in vehicles.)

LONGITUDE, determined by Hipparchus at Nice, who fixed the first degree in the Canaries, 162 B.C. Harrison made a time-keeper in A.D. 1759 which in two voyages was found to correct the longitude within the limits required by the act of Parliament, 12th Anne, 1714, and obtained the reward. See Harrison's Time-piece. Other improvements followed. The chronometers of Arnold, Earnshaw, and Bréguet are highly esteemed. Chronometers are now received on trial at Greenwich Observatory. The act relating to the discovery of the longitude at sea was repealed in 1828. The Bureau des Longitudes at Paris was established in 1795.

LONGWY (N.E. France), a frontier town, was taken by the allied army, Aug. 23, 1792, the beginning of the great war.

LOOM. The weaver's, otherwise called the Dutch loom, was brought into use in London from Holland about 1676. There were, in 1825, about 250,000 hand-loom in Great Britain, and 75,000 power-loom, each being equal to three hand-loom, making twenty-two yards each per day. The Jacquard loom was invented about 1800. The steam loom was introduced in 1807. See Cotton, Electric Loom, and Pneumatic Loom.

LOPEZ EXPEDITIONS. General Lopez, a native Cuban, formed an expedition in the United States to invade Cuba, excite the people to insurrection, and secure the independence of the island. He landed at Cardenas, in Cuba, with about 600 men, in April, 1850. After an obstinate engagement he took the town, but in a skirmish with government troops soon afterward he lost many men. Lopez, with others, escaped and returned to the United States. In the summer of 1857 Lopez made another attempt with 450 men, chiefly Americans. On the 11th of August he landed on the northern coast of Cuba, where he left Col. Crittenden, a Kentuckian, and 100 men, and started to the interior, expecting to be joined by the people. He was disappointed. His little army was attacked and dispersed, Crittenden and his party were captured, taken to Havana, and shot. Lopez and six of his companions were also captured, and afterward executed at Havana by the garrote.

LORDS.* The nobility of England date their creation from 1066, when William Fitz-Osborn, the first peer, is said to have been made by William I. Earl of Hereford; and afterward Walter d'Evreux, Earl of Salisbury; Copsi, Earl of Northumberland; Henry de Ferrers, Earl of Derby; and Gerodus (a Fleming), Earl of Chester. Twenty-two other peers were made in this sovereign's reign. The first peer created by patent was Lord Beauchamp, of Holt Castle, by Richard II., in 1387. In Scotland, Gilchrist was created Earl of Angus by Malcolm III., 1037. In Ireland, Sir John de Courcy was created Baron of Kinsale, etc., in 1131, the first peer after the obtaining of that kingdom by Henry II.

LORDS, House of. The peers of England were summoned, ad consulendum, to consult, in early reigns, and were summoned by writ, 6 & 7 John, 1205, but the earliest writ extant is 49 Henry III., 1255. The Commons did not form a part of the great council of the nation until some ages after the Conquest. See Parliament. The House of Lords includes the spiritual as well as temporal peers of Great Britain. The bishops are supposed to hold certain ancient baronies under the king, in right whereof they have seats in this house. Some of the temporal lords sit by descent, some by creation, and others by election, since the union with Scotland in 1707, and with Ireland, 1801.—Scotland elects 16 representative peers, and Ireland 4 spiritual lords by rotation of sessions, and 28 temporal peers for life. The House of Lords in Nov., 1865, consisted of 3 princes of the blood, 3 archbishops, 20 dukes, 21 marquesses, 129 earls, 27 viscounts, 221 barons, and 28 bishops; in all, 452. The House of Lords

* Peers of England are free from all arrests for debts, as being the king's hereditary counselors; therefore a peer can not be outlawed in any civil action, and no attachment lies against his person; but execution may be taken upon his lands and goods. For the same reason, they are free from all attendance at courts leet or sheriffs' turns; or, in case of a riot, from attending the posse comitatus. He can act as a justice of the peace in any part of the kingdom. See Baron, Earl, etc.

† Peerage for life only, with the title of Lord Wensleydale of Wensleydale, was granted to Baron Sir James Parke, Jan. 10, 1856; the House of Lords opposed his sitting and voting as a peer for life, and on July 25, 1856, he was created a peer in the usual way, with the title of Lord Wensleydale of Walton.

LORETTO, near Ancona, Italy. Here is the Casa Santa, or Holy House, in which it is pretended the Virgin Mary lived at Nazareth, and which was carried by angels into Dalmatia from Galilee in 1291, and brought here a few years after. The Lady of Loretto, gaudily dressed, stands upon an altar holding the infant Jesus in her arms, surrounded with gold lamps. Loretto was taken by the French in 1797, and the holy image, which had been carried to France, was brought back with pomp, Jan. 5, 1803.

L'ORIENT (W. France). Lord Bridport off this port defeated the French fleet, June 23, 1795. The loss of the French was severe; that of the British inconsiderable.—The French flag-ship, L'ORIENT, blew up during the battle of the Nile, August 1, 1798. Admiral Bruyes and about 900 men perished.

LORRAINE (formerly Lotharingia), a French province, became a kingdom under Lothaire (son of the Emperor Lothaire I.) about 855; it was divided on his death in 869, part of it being made a duchy. The first hereditary duke, Gerard, was nominated by the Emperor Henry III. in 1048. From Gerard descended the illustrious house of Lorraine, represented now by the Emperor of Austria, whose ancestor, the Empress Maria Theresa, married in 1736 Francis, formerly Duke of Lorraine, then of Tuscany. Lorraine had been given to the dethroned King of Poland, Stanislaus I., for life; at his death in 1766 it was united to France.

LOTS. Casting lots was sacred among the Jews as an appeal to God, Proverbs xvi, 33. It was employed in the division of the land of Canaan, about 1444 B.C., by Joshua (xiv.), and in the election of Matthias the apostle, A.D. 33, Acts i.—Lots for life or death have been frequently cast. For an instance, see Wales, 1649, note.

LOTTERIES are said to have originated in Florence about 1530, and to have been legalized in France in 1539. The first mentioned in English history began drawing at the western door of St. Paul's Cathedral, Jan. 11, 1569, and continued day and night until May 6 following. It contained 40,000 "lots," at 10s. each lot. The profits were for repairing the harbors on the coast of England, and the prizes were pieces of plate.

LOUVRE. This renowned edifice in Paris is said to have been originally a royal residence in the reign of Dagobert, 628. It was a prison-tower constructed by Philip Augustus in 1204. It afterward became a library, and Charles VI. made it his palace (about 1364). Successive kings enlarged and adorned it, particularly Louis XIV.—Napoleon I. turned it into a museum, and deposited here the finest collection of paintings, statues, and treasures of art known in the world. The chief of those brought from Italy have since been restored to the rightful possessors. The magnificent buildings of the new Louvre, begun by Napoleon I. and completed by Napoleon III., were inaugurated by the latter in great state, Aug. 14, 1857.

LOWER EMPIRE. Some historians make it begin with the reign of Valerian, 253; others with that of Constantine, 323.

LUBECK, a city in N. Germany, one of the four republics of the German Confederation, was built in the 12th century, and was the chief founder of the Hanseatic League about 1240, which lasted till 1630. Lübeck was declared a free imperial city about 1226, but was frequently attacked by the Danes. The French took it by assault, Nov. 6, 1806, and Napoleon incorporated it into his empire in 1810. On his fall in 1814 it became once more a free imperial city. Population in 1862, 50,614.

LUCANIANS, a warlike people of S. Italy, defeated Alexander of Epirus at Pandosia, 332 B.C.; were subdued by the Romans, 227; revolted after the battle of Cannæ, 216; were reduced by Scipio, 201; again revolted, 90; admitted as Roman citizens, 88.

LUCCA (Central Italy), a Roman colony 177 B.C., a Lombard duchy 1327 A.D., became a free city about 1370, and took an active part in the civil wars of the Italian republics. It was united with Tuscany, and given in 1805 as a principality to Eliza Bonaparte by her brother Napoleon I. Lucca, as a duchy, was given to Maria Louisa, widow of Louis, king of Etruria, in 1814. It was exchanged by her son Charles Louis for Parma and Placentia in 1847, was annexed to Tuscany, and with it became part of the kingdom of Italy in 1860.

LUCIA, Sr. (West Indies), settled by the French in 1650; taken by the British several times in the subsequent wars. Insurrection of the French negroes, April, 1795. St. Lucia was restored to France at the peace of 1802, but was seized by England in 1803, and confirmed to her in 1814. Population in 1861, 26,705.

LUCIFER MATCHES came into use about 1834. In March, 1842, Mr. Reuben Partridge patented machinery for manufacturing the splints. In 1845, Schrötter, of Vienna, discovered his amorphous phosphorus, by the use of which lucifers are rendered less dangerous, and the manufacture less unhealthy.

LUCKNOW, the capital of Oude. See India, 1857.

LUDDITES. Large parties of men under this designation commenced their depredations at Nottingham, breaking frames and machinery, Nov., 1811. Skirmish with the military there, Jan. 29, 1812. Several serious riots occurred again in 1814; and numerous bodies of these people, chiefly unemployed artisans, committed great excesses in 1816 et seq. Several of these Luddites were tried and executed.

In 1851 there were in Ireland nearly 15,000 lunatics of all classes; in Scotland, in 1851, 3362 in charge; in 1855, 7403; of which only 3323 were under the protection of the law.

LUNATICS IN THE UNITED STATES. There are 47 asylums for the insane in the different states in the Union, some of them private establishments, others supported by contributions of individuals and appropriations by the state. The number of the insane in the United States in 1860 was 23,957.

LUNEBURG. See Brunswick.

LUNEVILLE (France), PEACE OF, concluded between the French Republic and the Emperor of Germany, confirmed the cessions made by the treaty of Campo Formio, stipulated that the Rhine, to the Dutch territories, should form the boundary of France, and recognized the Batavian, Helvetic, Ligurian, and Cis-alpine republics, Feb. 9, 1801.

LUPERCALIA, a yearly festival* observed at Rome on Feb. 15, in honor of Pan, destroyer of wolves (lupi), instituted by the Romans, according to Plutarch; but, according to Livy, brought by Evander into Italy.
These feasts are said to have been abolished in 496 by Pope Gelasius on account of their great disorders.

LUSATIA, a marquise in N. Germany, given to John of Bohemia, 1319; obtained by Matthias of Hungary, 1478; and ceded to Saxony in 1635.

LUSIAD. See Epic.

LUSTANIA. See Portugal.

LUSTRUM, an expiatory sacrifice made for the Roman people at the end of every five years, after the census had been taken, 472 B.C. Every fifth year was called a lustrum; and ten, fifteen, or twenty years were commonly expressed by two, three, or four lustra. The number of Roman citizens was, in 293 B.C., 272,308; 179 B.C., 273,294; 70 B.C., 450,000; 28 B.C., 4,164,060; A.D. 48, 5,984,072.

LUTHERANISM,* the form of Christianity professed by the majority of the people of the north of Germany, Prussia, Denmark, and Sweden. The doctrines are mainly embodied in Luther's Catechisms, in the Augsburg Confession, and in the Formula Concordie of the Lutherans, published in 1580. Their first university was founded at Marburg, in 1527, by Philip, landgrave of Hesse.

LUTZEN, or LUTZENGEN (N. Germany). Here Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, defeated the Imper-ialists under Wallenstein, Nov. 6, 1632, but was himself killed; and here the French army, commanded by Napoleon, defeated the combined armies of Russia and Prussia, commanded by General Wittgenstein, May 2, 1813. The battles of Bautzen and Würtzchen immediately followed (May 19-21), both in favor of Napoleon. The Allies were compelled to pass the Oder, and an armistice was agreed to, and afterward prolonged; but, unfortunately for the French emperor, did not produce peace.

LUXEMBURG (Holland), capital of the grand-duchy of Luxemburg, part of which is subject to Holland and part to Belgium since 1839. Luxemburg, once considered the strongest fortress in the world, was taken and pillaged by the French in 1542-3; by the Spaniards in 1544; by the French in 1654; restored to Spain in 1697; taken by the French in 1701; given to the Dutch as a barrier town, and ceded to the emperor at the peace in 1713. It withstood several sieges in the last century. It surrendered to the French after a long and memorable siege, June 1, 1795.

LUXOR. See Thebes.

LUXURY. Lucullus (died 49 B.C.), at Rome, was distinguished for inordinate luxury. See Sumptuary Laws.

LYCEUM (originally a temple of Apollo Lyceus, or a portico, or gallery, built by Lyceus, son of Apollo) was a spot near the Ilissus, in Attica, where Aristotle taught philosophy; and as he generally taught as he walked, his pupils were called peripatetics, walkers-about, and his philosophy that of the Lyceum, 342 B.C.
—Stanley. See Theatres.

LYCIA (Asia Minor) belonged successively to Cræsus (about 560 B.C.), the Persians (546 B.C.), to Alexander the Great (333 B.C.), and to his successors the Seleucids. The Romans gave Lycia to the Rhodians (188 B.C.). It became nominally free under the Romans, and was annexed to the empire by Claudius.
The marbles brought from Lycia by Sir Charles Fellows were deposited in the British Museum, 1840-6.

LYDIA, or Mæonia, an ancient kingdom in Asia Minor, under a long dynasty of kings, the last being Cræsus, "the richest of mankind." The coinage of gold and silver money, and other useful inventions, are ascribed to the Lydians. Æsop, the Phrygian fabulist, Alcman, the first Greek erotic poet, Thales of Miletus, Anaximenes, Xenophanes, Anacreon of Teos, Heraclitus of Ephesus, etc., flourished in Lydia.

* Naked youths ran through the streets with whips, lashing all whom they encountered, even women, who received the stripes with inclination, believing that they removed barrenness and eased the pains of childbirth. Augustus forbade all persons above the age of fourteen to appear naked during this festival. Cicero, in his Philippics, re-proaches Antony for having disgraced the dignity of the consulship by appearing naked on one of these occasions.—Varro.

* Martin Luther was born at Eisleben, Nov. 10, 1483; studied at Erfurt, 1501; was professor of philosophy at Wittenberg, 1508; resisted the sale of indulgences, 1517; defended himself at Augsburg, 1518; at Worms, 1520; was excommunicated, June 16, 1520; began his German Bible, 1521; married Katherine de Bora, 1525; published his German Bible complete, 1534; died Feb. 18, 1546.

LYMPIATIC VESSELS (concerned in digestion) were discovered by Jasper Asellius in 1622, and described in 1627. Discovered in oviparous animals by Dr. Hewson, who disputed the honor of the discovery with Dr. Munro, 1762.

LYNCH LAW, punishment inflicted by private individuals, independently of the legal authorities, said to derive its name from John Lynch, a farmer, who exercised it upon the fugitive slaves and criminals dwelling in the "Dismal Swamp," North Carolina, when they committed outrages upon persons and property which the colonial law could not promptly repress. This mode of administering justice began about the end of the 17th century, and is still practiced occasionally in some parts of the United States.

LYONS (S. France), the Roman Lugdunum, founded by M. Plancus, 43 B.C. The city was reduced to ashes in a single night by lightning, A.D. 59, and was rebuilt in the reign of Nero. It was a free city till its union with France in 1307.

LYRE. Its invention is ascribed to the Grecian Hermes, the Latin Mercury, who, according to Homer, gave it to Apollo, the first that played upon it with method, and accompanied it with poetry. The invention of the primitive lyre, with three strings, is ascribed to the first Egyptian Hermes. Terpander added several strings to the lyre, making the number seven, 673 B.C. Phrynis, a musician of Mitylene, added two more, making nine, 438 B.C.

M.

MACADAMIZING, a system of road-making devised by Mr. John Macadam, and published by him in an essay in 1819, having practiced it in Ayrshire. He received a grant of £10,000 from Parliament; was appointed surveyor general of the metropolitan roads in 1827, and died in 1836.

MACAO (N. China) was given to the Portuguese as a commercial station in 1586, in return for their assistance against pirates.

MACARONI. This name was given to a poem by Theop. Folengo, 1509, and it continues to designate trifling performances, as buffoonery, puns, anagrams, "wit without wisdom, and humor without sense." His poem was so called from an Italian cake of the same name, pleasant to the taste, but without any alimentary virtue. These poems became the reigning taste in Italy and France, where they gave birth to Macaroni academies, and, reaching England, to Macaroni clubs (about 1772), till, in the end, every thing ridiculous in dress and manners was called "Macaroni."

MACCABEES, a family of patriotic Jews, who commenced their career during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, 167 B.C., when Mattathias, a priest, resisted the tyranny of the governor. His son, Judas Maccabæus, defeated the Syrians in three battles, 166, 165 B.C.; but fell in an ambush, 161 B.C. His brother Jonathan made a league with the Romans and Lacedæmonians, and, after an able administration, was treacherously killed at Ptolemais by Tryphon, 143 B.C. His brother and successor, Simon, was also murdered, 135 B.C. John Hyrcanus, son of Simon, succeeded. His son Judas, called also Aristobulus, took the title of king, 107 B.C. The history of the Maccabees is contained in five books of that name, two of which are included in our Apocrypha. Four are accounted canonical by the Roman Catholic Church; none by Protestant communions.

MACE, a weapon anciently used by the cavalry of most nations, was originally a spiked club, hung at the saddle-bow, and usually of metal. Maces were also early ensigns of authority borne before officers of state, the top being made in the form of an open crown, and commonly of silver gilt. The lord chancellor and speaker of the House of Commons have maces borne before them. Edward III. granted to London the privilege of having gold or silver maces carried before the lord mayor, sheriffs, aldermen, and corporation, 1354. It was with the mace usually carried before the lord mayor on state occasions that Wat Tyler off his horse, a courtier afterward dispatching him with his dagger, for rudely approaching Richard II., 1381. Cromwell, entering the House of Commons to disperse its members and dissolve the Parliament, ordered one of his soldiers to "take away that fool's bauble, the mace," which was done, and the doors of the house locked, April 20, 1653.

MACE DON (N. Greece). The first kingdom was founded by Caranus, about 814 B.C. It was an considerable country, sometimes under the protection of Athens, sometimes of Thebes, and sometimes of Sparta, until the reign of Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, who, by his wisdom as a politician and exploits as a general, made it a powerful kingdom, and paved the way for his son's greatness.

MACHIAVELLIAN PRINCIPLES, those laid down by Nicholas Machiavelli, of Florence (born 1469, died 1527), in his Practice of Politics and The Prince. By some they are stigmatized as "the most pernicious maxims of government, founded on the vilest policy;" and by others as "sound doctrines, notwithstanding the prejudice erroneously raised against them." The author said that if he taught princes to be tyrants, he had also taught the people to destroy tyrants. The work appeared at Rome in 1532, and was translated into English in 1761.

M'HENRY, FORT, DEFENSE OF. The British fleet that conveyed the troops under General Ross to Baltimore (see North Point) opened a bombardment upon Fort M'Henry, in the harbor, on the 13th of September, 1814. The fort was garrisoned by about 1000 men, under General Armistead. They made a most gallant defense during a bombardment of 25 hours. The loss was trifling on both sides.

MADEIRA, an island, N.W. coast of Africa, discovered, it is said, in 1344, by Mr. Macham, an English gentleman, or mariner, who fled from France for an illicit amour. He was driven here by a storm, and his mistress, a French lady, dying, he made a cance, and carried the news of his discovery to Pedro, king of Aragon, which occasioned the report that the island was discovered by a Portuguese, 1345. It is asserted that the Portuguese did not visit this island until 1419 or 1420, nor did they colonize it until 1481. It was taken by the British in July, 1801, and again by Admiral Hood and General Beresford, Dec. 24, 1807, and retained in trust for the royal family of Portugal, which had emigrated to the Brazils. It was restored to the Portuguese in 1814. Since 1852 the renowned vine-groves here have been totally ruined by the vine disease.

MAESTRICHT (Holland). It revolted from Spain 1570, and was taken by the Prince of Parma in 1579, when a dreadful massacre took place. In 1632 the Prince of Orange reduced it after a memorable siege, and it was confirmed to the Dutch in 1648; Louis XIV. took it in 1673; William, prince of Orange, invested it in vain in 1676, but in 1678 it was restored to the Dutch. In 1748 it was besieged by the French, who were permitted to take possession of the city on condition of its being restored at the peace then negotiating. At the commencement of 1793 Maestricht was unsuccessfully attacked by the French, but they became masters of it toward the end of the following year. In 1814 it was made part of the kingdom of the Netherlands; it now belongs to Holland.

 These are the principal literary magazines, but there are a number of others, devoted to fashion and short stories, which have been in circulation a long time.

MAGDALENS and MAGDALENETTES, communities of nuns and women, the latter class consisting chiefly of penitent courtesans. The order of penitents of St. Magdalen was founded 1272, at Marseilles. The convent of Naples was endowed by Queen Sancho, 1324. That at Metz was instituted in 1452. At Paris, 1492. The Magdalen at Rome was endowed by Pope Leo X. in 1515, and favored by Clement VIII. in 1594. The Magdalen Hospital, London, was founded in 1758, principally under the direction of Dr. Dodd. The Asylum in Dublin was opened in June, 1766.

MAGDEBURG (Prussia). The archbishopric was founded about 967. The city suffered much during the religious wars in Germany. It was blockaded for seven months by the Imperialists, under Wallenstein, in 1629, and was barbarously sacked by Tilly on May 10, 1631. It was given to Brandenburg in 1648; was taken by the French Nov. 8, 1806, and annexed to the kingdom of Westphalia, but was restored to Prussia in 1813.*

MAGELLAN, STRAITS OF (connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans), was passed by Fernando de Magelhaens (Magellan), a Portuguese, on Nov. 27, 1520. He gave the latter ocean its name on account of its calmness. Magellan completed the first voyage round the world, with a fleet of discovery fitted out by the Emperor Charles V., but was killed in 1521. The Spaniards had a fort here, called Fort Famine, because the garrison perished for want.

MAGENTA, a small town in Lombardy, memorable for the victory of the French and Sardinian army over the Austrians, June 4, 1859. The Emperor Louis Napoleon commanded, and he and the King of Sardinia were in the thickest of the fight. It is said that 55,000 French and Sardinians, and 75,000 Austrians, were engaged. The former are asserted to have lost 4000 killed and wounded, and the Austrians 10,000, besides 7000 prisoners; these numbers are still doubtful. The French generals Espinasse and Clerc were killed. The arrival of General M'Mahon during a deadly struggle between the Austrians and the French greatly contributed to the victory. The contest near the Bridge of Buffalora was very severe. The Austrians fought well, but were badly commanded. The emperor and king entered Milan on June 8 following; M'Mahon and Regnault d'Angely were created marshals of France.—The red dye, rosaniline, obtained by chemists from gas tar, is termed magenta. See Aniline.

MAGI, or WORSHIPERS OF FIRE. The Persians adored the invisible and incomprehensible God as the principle of all good, and paid homage to fire as the emblem of his power and purity. They built no altars nor temples; their sacred fires blazed in the open air, and their offerings were made upon the earth. The Magi, their priests, are said to have had skill in astronomy, etc.; hence the term Magi was applied to all learned men, till they were finally confounded with the magicians. Zoroaster, king of Bactria, was the reformer of the sect of the Magi; he flourished about 1080 B.C.; others say 550 B.C. Their religion was superseded in Persia by Mohammedanism, A.D. 652. The Parsees at Bombay are descendants of the Guebres or fire-worshippers.

MAGIC. See Alchemy, Witchcraft, etc. The invention of the MAGIC LANTERN is ascribed to Roger Bacon, about 1260, but more correctly to Athanasius Kircher, who died 1680.

MAGNA CHARTA. The fundamental parts of the great charter of English liberty were derived from Saxon charters continued by Henry I. and his successors. It was signed by John at Runnymede, near Windsor, June 15, 1215, &c. It was many times confirmed, and frequently violated, by Henry III. This last king's grand charter was granted in 1224, and was assured by Edward I. See Forests.

* The Magdeburg Experiment is shown by means of a hollow sphere, composed of two hemispheres, fitted air-tight. When the air is exhausted by the air-pump, the hemispheres are held together by the pressure of the atmosphere, and require great force to separate them. The apparatus was suggested by Otto von Guericke, the inventor of the air-pump. He died in 1686.—Brande.

† On Nov. 20, 1214, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the barons met at St. Edmundsbury. On Jan. 6, 1215, they presented their demands to the king, who deferred his answer. On May 19 they were censured by the pope. On May 24 they marched to London, and the king was compelled to yield.

MAGNA GRÆCIA, the independent states founded by Greek colonists in South Italy, Sicily, etc., beginning in 974 B.C. Pandosia and Metapontum were built in 774 B.C. Cumæ, in Campania, is said to have been founded in 1034 B.C. These states were ruined through siding with Hannibal when he invaded Italy, 216 B.C.

MAGNESIA (Asia Minor). Here Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, was defeated by the Scipios, 190 B.C.—Magnesia alba, the white alkaline earth used in medicine, of gently purgative properties, was in use in the beginning of the 18th century. Its properties were developed by Dr. Black in 1755.

MAGNESIUM, a metal first obtained from magnesia by Sir Humphry Davy about 1807, and since produced in larger quantities by Bussy, Deville, and especially by Mr. E. Sonstadt, in 1862-4. Its light, when burnt, is very brilliant, and is so rich in chemical rays that it may be used in photography. Lamps have been made for burning magnesium wire, which is so employed by the excavators of the tunnel through Mount Cenis. By its light photographs of the interior of the Pyramids were taken in 1865.

MAGNETISM. Magnes, a shepherd, is said to have been detained on Mount Ida by the nails in his boots. The attractive power of the loadstone or magnet was early known, and is referred to by Homer, Aristotle, and Pliny; it was also known to the Chinese and Arabians. The Greeks are said to have obtained the loadstone from Magnesia in Asia, 1000 B.C. Roger Bacon is said to have been acquainted with its property of pointing to the north (1294). The invention of the mariner's compass is ascribed to Flavio Gioja, a Neapolitan, about 1320; but it was known in Norway previous to 1266, and is mentioned in a French poem, 1150. MAHARAJPOOR (India). Here Sir Hugh Gough severely defeated the Mahratta army of Gwalior, Dec. 29, 1843. Lord Ellenborough was present.

MAHOGANY is said to have been brought to England by Raleigh in 1595, and to have come into general use about 1720.

MAHRATTAS, a people of Hindostan, who originally dwell northwest of the Deccan, which they overran about 1676. They endeavored to overcome the Mogul, but were restrained by the Afghans. They entered into alliance with the East India Company in 1767, made war against it in 1774, again made peace in 1782, and were finally subdued in 1818. Their last prince, Scindiah, is now a pensioner of the British government.

MAIDA (Calabria), where the French, commanded by General Regnier, were signally defeated by the British under Major General Sir John Stuart, July 4, 1806.

MAIDS OF HONOR. Anne, daughter of Francis II., duke of Brittany, and Queen of Charles VIII. and Louis XII. of France, was the first to have young and beautiful ladies about her person, called maids of honor.—Phil. de Comines. When Charles died (1495), she put a cordelier (a black knotted lace) round her coat of arms as a token of mourning, which introduced the custom. The Queen of Edward I. of England is said to have had four maids of honor; Queen Victoria has eight.

MAIL. Coaches for the conveyance of letters were first set up at Bristol by Mr. John Palmer, of Bath, Aug. 2, 1784. They were employed for other routes in 1785, and soon became general in England. The mails were first sent by rail in 1838.

MAIMING and WOUNDING. See Coventry Act.

MAINE, a province N.W. of France, was seized by William I. of England in 1069. It acknowledged Prince Arthur, 1199, and was taken from John of England by Philip of France, 1204; was recovered by Edward III. in 1357, but given up, 1360. After various changes, it was finally united to France by Louis XI. in 1481.—

MAINE (N. America) was discovered by Cabot, 1497, and colonized by the English in 1638; it became a state of the Union in 1820. The boundary-line between the British and the United States territories in Maine was settled by the Ashburton treaty, concluded Aug. 9, 1842. The Maine liquor law, prohibiting the manufacture and use of intoxicating drinks, with certain exceptions, was enacted in 1851.

MAJORCA. See Balearic Isles and Minorca. Majorca rebelled against Philip V. of Spain in 1714, but submitted July 14, 1715.

MALABAR (W. coast of Hindostan). The Portuguese established factories here in 1505; the English did the same in 1601.

MALACCA, on the Malay peninsula, E. Indies, was a flourishing Portuguese settlement in 1511. The Dutch factories were established in 1640. It now forms part of the British "Straits" settlements, the Dutch government having exchanged it for Bencoolen in Sumatra.

MALAKHOFF, a hill near Sebastopol, on which was situated an old tower, which the Russians strongly fortified during the siege of 1854-55. The allied French and English attacked it on June 17 and 18, 1855, and, after a conflict of forty-eight hours, were repulsed with severe loss; that of the English being 175 killed and 1126 wounded, that of the French 3335 killed and wounded. On Sept. 8 the French again attacked the Malakhoff; at eight o'clock the first mine was sprung, and at noon the French flag floated over the conquered redoubt. See Sebastopol. In the Malakhoff and Redan were found 3000 pieces of cannon of every calibre, and 120,000 lbs. of gunpowder.

* The South Foreland Light-house, near Dover, was illuminated by the magneto-electro light in the winters of 1858-9 and 1859-60, and at Dungeness in 1861-2. The light exceeds all other artificial lights in brilliancy, continuance, etc.

MALDON (Essex), built 28 B.C., is supposed to have been the first Roman colony in Britain. It was burnt by Queen Boadicea, and rebuilt by the Romans. It was burnt by the Danes, A.D. 991, and rebuilt by the Saxons. Maldon was incorporated by Philip and Mary. The singular custom of Borough-English is kept up here, by which the youngest son, and not the eldest, succeeds to the burgage tenure on his father's death.

MALICIOUS DAMAGES. The law respecting them was consolidated and amended by 24 & 25 Vict., c. 97. This act protects works of art, electric telegraphs, etc., 1861.

MALO, St. (N.W. France). This port sustained a tremendous bombardment by the English under Admiral Benbow in 1693, and under Lord Berkeley in July, 1695. In 1755 the British landed in considerable force in Cancealle Bay, and went up to the harbor, where they burnt upward of a hundred ships, and did great damage to the town, making a number of prisoners. It is now defended by a very strong castle, and the harbor is most difficult of access.

MALPLAQUET (N. France). Here the Allies under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene defeated the French commanded by Marshal Villars, Sept. 11, 1709. Each army consisted of nearly 120,000 choice soldiers. There was great slaughter on both sides, the Allies losing 18,000 men, which loss was but ill repaid by the capture of Mons.

MALT, barley prepared for brewing and distillation. In March, 1858, there were 6157 licensed maltsters in the United Kingdom. The duty on malt in 1863 amounted to £6,273,727. An act was passed in 1865 allowing the excise duty to be charged according to the weight of the grain used.

MALTA (formerly Melita), an island in the Mediterranean, held successively by the Phœnicians, Carthaginians, and Romans, which last conquered it, 259 B.C. The Apostle Paul was wrecked here, A.D. 62 (Acts xxvii., xxviii.). Malta was taken by the Vandals, 534; by the Arabs, 870; and by the Normans from Sicily, 1090. With Sicily it became successively part of the possessions of the houses of Hohenstaufen, Anjou (1266), and Aragon (1269). In 1530 Charles V. gave it to the Knights Hospitalers, who defended it most courageously and successfully against the Turks in 1551 and 1565, when the Turks were obliged to abandon the enterprise after the loss of 30,000 men. The island was taken by General Bonaparte in the outset of his expedition to Egypt, June 12, 1798. He found in it 1200 pieces of cannon, 200,000 lbs. of powder, two ships of the line, a frigate, four galleys, and 40,000 muskets, besides an immense treasure collected by superstitution, and 4500 Turkish prisoners, whom he set at liberty. Malta was surrendered to the British under Pigot, Sept. 5, 1800. At the peace of Amiens, it was stipulated that it should be restored to the knights. The British, however, retained possession, and the war recommenced between the two nations; but by the treaty of Paris in 1814, the island was guaranteed to Great Britain. La Valette, the capital, was founded in 1557 by the grand master La Valette, and completed and occupied by the knights, Aug. 18, 1571. The Protestant College was founded in 1846.

MALTA, KNIGHTS OF. A military-religious order, called also Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem, Knights of St. John, and Knights of Rhodes. Some merchants of Malfi, trading to the Levant, obtained leave of the Caliph of Egypt to build a house for those who came on pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and whom they received with zeal and charity, 1048. They afterward founded a hospital for the reception of pilgrims, from whence they were called Hospitalers (Latin, hospes, a guest). The military order was founded about 1099; confirmed by the pope in 1113. In 1119 the knights defeated the Turks at Antioch. After the Christians had lost their interest in the East, and Jerusalem was taken, the knights retired to Acre, which they defended valiantly in 1290. They next followed John, king of Cyprus, who gave them Limisso, in his dominions, where they staid till 1310, in which year they took Rhodes, under their grand master De Vallaret, and the next year defended it under the Duke of Savoy against an army of Saracens; since then his successors have used F. E. R. T. for their device, that is, Fortitudo ejus Rhodum tenuit, or, His valor kept Rhodes. From this they were called Knights of Rhodes; but, Rhodes being taken by Solymán in 1522, they retired into Candia, thence into Sicily. Pope Adrian VI. granted them the city of Viterbo for their retreat; and in 1530 the Emperor Charles V. gave them the isle of Malta. The order was suppressed in England in 1540; restored in 1557; and again suppressed in 1559. St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell, a relic of their possessions, still exists. The Emperor Paul of Russia declared himself grand master of the order in June, 1799.

MAMELUKES, originally Turkish and Circassian slaves, established by the sultan as a body-guard, 1230. They advanced one of their own corps to the throne about 1250, and continued to do so until Egypt became a Turkish province in 1517, when the beys took them into pay, and filled up their ranks with renegades from various countries. On the conquest of Egypt by Bonaparte in 1798, they retreated into Nubia; but, assisted by the Arnauts, they once more wrested Egypt from the Turkish government. On March 1, 1811, they were decoyed into the power of the Turkish pacha, Mehemet Ali, and slain at Cairo to the number of 1600. In 1804, Napoleon embodied some of them in his guard.

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant. An entire mammoth, flesh and bones, was discovered in Siberia in 1799. Remains of this animal have since been found at Harwich in 1803, and at places in Europe, Asia, and America.

MAN, ANTIQUITY OF. In 1846, M. Boucher de Perthes found some rude flint implements, which he believed to be of human manufacture, mingled with bones of extinct animals, in the old alluvium near Abbeville, in Picardy, France. Similar flints have since been found in Sicily by Dr. Falconer, and at Brixham by Mr. Pengelly, and lately in various parts of the world. Hence many geologists infer that man existed on the earth many ages earlier than has been hitherto believed. Sir Charles Lyell's "Antiquity of Man" was published in 1863, and Sir John Lubbock's "Pre-historic Times" in 1865.

MAN, ISLE OF, was subdued by Edwin, king of Northumberland, 621; by Magnus of Norway, 1092; ceded to the Scots, 1266; and taken from them in 1314 by Montacute, afterward Earl of Salisbury, to whom Edward III. gave the title of King of Man, in 1343. It was afterward subjected to the Earl of Northumberland, on whose attainer Henry IV. granted it in fee to Sir John Stanley, 1406; it was taken from this family by Elizabeth, but was restored in 1608 to the Earl of Derby, through whom it fell by inheritance to the Duke of Athol, 1735. He received £70,000 from Parliament for the sovereignty in 1765; and the nation was charged with the farther sum of £132,944 for the purchase of his interest in the revenues of the island in Jan., 1829. The Countess of Derby held the isle against the Parliament forces in 1651. The bishopric is said to have been presided over by Amphibalus about 360. Some assert that St. Patrick was the founder of the see, and that Germanus was the first bishop, about 447. It was united to Sodor in 1113. The bishop has no seat in the House of Lords; but Lord Anckland (bishop, 1847-54) sat by right of his barony. Present income, £2000.

MANASSAS JUNCTION, Virginia, United States, an important military position, where the Alexandria and Manassas Gap railways meet, near a creek named Bull Run. It was held by the Confederates in 1861, when they were attacked by General Irvin McDowell. He began his march from Washington on July 16, and gained some advantage on the 18th at Centreville. On the 21st was fought the first battle of Bull Run. The Federals, who began the fight, had the advantage till about four o'clock, P.M., when the Confederate General Johnston brought up re-enforcements, which at first the Federals took for their own troops. After a brief resistance, the latter were seized with sudden panic, and, in spite of the utmost efforts of their officers, fled in disgraceful rout, abandoning a large quantity of arms, ammunition, and baggage. The Confederate Generals Johnston and Beauregard did not think it prudent to pursue the fugitives, who did not halt till they arrived at Washington. The Confederate forces on the field numbered 31,000, the National 23,000. Confederate loss, 373 killed, 1489 wounded, 30 missing—total, 1887; National loss, 451 killed, 1011 wounded, 1460 missing—total, 3051. In March, 1862, when the Army of the Potomac, under General M'Clellan, marched into Virginia, they found that the Confederates had quietly retreated from the camp at Manassas. On Aug. 30, 1862, this place was the site of another great battle between the National and Confederate armies. In August, General "Stonewall" Jackson, after compelling General Pope to retreat, defeated him at Cedar Mountain on the 9th, turned his flank on the 22d, and, arriving at Manassas, repulsed his attacks on the 29th. On the 30th General R. E. Lee joined Jackson with his army, and Pope received re-enforcements from Washington. A desperate conflict ensued, which ended in the Confederates gaining a decisive victory, compelling the Federals to a hasty retreat to Centreville. On the 1st of September, Jackson was pushed forward toward Fairfax to turn Pope's right. M'Dowell, Heintzelman, and Reno were sent in that direction, and a battle was fought just before dark at Ox Hill, near Chantilly, in which Generals Stevens and Kearney were killed. Both sides claimed a victory; but, before morning of the 2d, Pope's army was in retreat for Alexandria. That day it took refuge behind the defenses of Washington. The forces engaged in the second battle of Bull Run numbered, on the National side, 40,000; on the Confederate, 60,000. The Confederate loss was about $400, of whom 1400 were killed; the National, about 11,000, besides 7000 missing. Pope was at once superseded, and M'Clellan resumed the command to march against the Confederates, who had crossed the Potomac and entered Maryland. See United States.

MANCHESTER (Lancashire), in the time of the Druids was one of their principal stations, and had the privilege of sanctuary attached to its altar, in the British language Meyne, a stone. It was one of the seats of the Brigantes, who had a castle, or stronghold, called Mancenion, or the place of tents, near the confluence of the rivers Medlock and Irwell, the site of which, still called the "Castle Field," was, about 79, selected by the Romans as the station of the Cohors Prima Frisiorum, and called by them Mancunium; hence its Saxon name Manceastre, from which its modern appellation is derived.—Lewis.

MANES, the name applied by the ancients to the soul when separated from the body. The Manes were reckoned among the infernal deities, and were generally supposed to preside over the burial-places and monuments of the dead. They were solemnly worshipped by the Romans and invoked by the augurs; Virgil (22 B.C.) introduces his hero as sacrificing to the Manes. The Romans superscribed their epitaphs with D.M., Diis Manibus.

MANGANESE. Black oxide of manganese, long used to decolorize glass, and called Magnesia nigra, was formerly included among the ores of iron. Its distinctive character was proved by the researches of Pott (1740), Kaim and Winterl (1770), and Scheele and Bergmann (1774); it was first eliminated by Gahn. Manganese combined with potassium is called mineral chameleon, from its rapid change of color under certain circumstances. Forchammer employed it as a test for the presence of organic matter in water, and Dr. Angus Smith successfully applied this test to air in 1853.

MANICHEANS, a sect founded by Manes, which began to infest the East about 261. It spread into Egypt, Arabia, and Africa, and particularly into Persia. A rich widow, whose servant Manes had been, left him much wealth, after which he assumed the title of apostle, or envoy of Jesus Christ, and announced that he was the Paraclete, or Comforter that Christ had promised to send. He maintained two principles, the one good and the other bad; the first he called light, which did nothing but good, and the second he called darkness, which did nothing but evil. He rejected the Old Testament, and composed a system of doctrine from Christianity and the dogmas of the ancient fire-worshippers. He obtained many followers. Sapor, king of Persia, believed in him at one time, but afterward banished him. He was burnt alive by Bahram or Varanes, king of Persia, 274. His followers spread themselves over the Roman Empire, and several sects sprang from them.

MANILLA (built about 1573), capital of the Philippine Islands, a great mart of Spanish commerce. Manilla was taken by the English in 1575, and again in Oct., 1762, by storm. The archbishop engaged to ransom it for about a million sterling; never wholly paid. Manilla has suffered greatly by earthquakes. It is stated that nearly 3000 persons perished by one in 1645. On Sept. 22, 1852, the city was nearly destroyed, and on June 3, 1863, several thousand lives were lost.

MANNHEIM (S. Germany), founded in 1606, became the court residence of the Palatine of the Rhine in 1719; but his becoming Elector of Bavaria in 1777 caused the removal of the court to Munich. Mannheim surrendered to the French, under command of General Pichegru, Sept. 20, 1795. On Oct. 31, the Austrians, under General Wurmsen, defeated the French near the city. Several battles were fought with various success in the neighborhood during the late wars. Kotzebue, the popular dramatist, was assassinated at Mannheim by a student of Wurtzburg named Sand, April 2, 1819.

MANORS are as ancient as the Saxon Constitution, and imply a territorial district, with the jurisdiction, rights, and perquisites belonging to it. They were formerly called baronies, and still are lordships. Each lord was empowered to hold a court called the court-baron for redressing misdemeanors and settling disputes between the tenants.—Cabinet Lawyer.

MANSOURAH (Lower Egypt). Here Louis IX. was defeated by the Saracens and taken prisoner, April 5, 1250. He gave Damietta and 400,000 livres for his ransom.

MANTINEA (Arcadia, Greece), BATTLES here—(1.) Athenians and Argives defeated by Agis II. of Sparta, 418 B.C. (2.) Between Epaminondas and the Thebans, and the combined forces of Lacedæmon, Achaia, Elis, Athens, and Arcadia, 362 B.C. The Theban general was victorious, but was killed in the engagement, and from that Thebes lost its power and consequence among the Grecian states. The Emperor Adrian built a temple at Mantinea in honor of his favorite Alcibiades. The town was also called Antigonia. Other battles were fought in the neighborhood.

MANTUA (N. Italy). Virgil was born at a village near this city, 70 B.C. Hence he is often styled the Mantuan bard. Mantua was ruled by the Gonzagas, lords of Mantua, from 1328 to 1708, when it was seized by the Emperor Joseph I. It has since been held by the Austrians. Mantua surrendered to the French, Feb. 2, 1797, after a siege of eight months. It was retaken by the Austrian and Russian army, July 30, 1799, after a short siege. In 1800, after the battle of Marengo, the French again obtained possession of it. It was included in the kingdom of Italy till 1814, when it was restored to the Austrians.

MANUFACTURES. See Silk, Cotton, etc.

MAORIS. See New Zealand.

MAPLE-TREE. The Acer rubrum, or scarlet maple, was brought to England from North America before 1656. The Acer Negundo, or ash-leaved maple, before 1688. From the Acer saccharinum (introduced here in 1735) the Americans make very good sugar.

MAPS. See Charts and Mercator.

MARATHON (in Attica). Here, on Sept. 23 or 29, 490 B.C., the Greeks, only 10,000 strong, defeated the Persian army amounting to 500,000, who had 200,000 killed. The former were commanded by Miltiades, Aristides, and Themistocles. Among the slain was Hippas, the instigator of the war. The Persian army was forced to retreat to Asia.

MARBLE. Dipœnus and Scyllis, statues of Crete, were the first artists who sculptured marble and polished their works; all statues previously being of wood, 568 B.C.—Pliny. The edifices or monuments of Rome were constructed of, or ornamented with, fine marble. The ruins of Palmyra are chiefly of white marble. The marble arch, London, was removed from Buckingham Palace to Hyde Park, March, 1851.

MARBURG (W. Germany). The cathedral was founded 1231; and the first Protestant University in 1527. It suffered much during the Seven Years' War, 1753-60.

MARCH, the first month of the year, until Numa added January and February, 713 B.C. Romulus, who divided the year into months, gave to this month the name of his supposed father, Mars; though Ovid observes that the people of Italy had the month of March before the time of Romulus, but that they placed it very differently in the calendar. The year formerly commenced on the 25th day of this month. See Year.

MARCHES, Lords or, noblemen who lived on boundaries settled between England and Wales, and England and Scotland, and, according to Camden, had their laws, and power of life, death, etc., like petty princes. These powers were abolished 1535 and 1547.

MARCHFELD (Austria). Here Ottocar II. of Bohemia was defeated and slain by his rival, the Emperor Rodolph of Hapsburg, Aug. 26, 1278. See Bohemia.

MARCIONITES, heretics, followers of Marcion, about 150, who preceded the Manichees, and taught similar doctrines.—Cave.

MARCOMANNI, a people of Southern Germany, expelled the Boii from Bohemia, and, united with other tribes, invaded Italy about 167, but were repelled by the Emperors Antonius and Verus; defeated by the Legion called, from a fabled miracle, the Thundering Legion, 179; and finally driven beyond the Danube by Aurelian, 271.

MARENGO (N. Italy). Here the French army, commanded by Bonaparte, attacked the Austrians, June 14, 1800; his army was retreating, when the arrival of General Desaix turned the fortunes of the day. The slaughter on both sides was dreadful. By a treaty between the Austrian General Melas and Bonaparte, signed June 15, the latter obtained twelve strong fortresses, and became master of Italy.

MARECHALS, OR MARSHALS, in France, were the esquires of the king, and originally had the command of the vanguard to observe the enemy and to choose proper places for its encampment. Till the time of Francis I. in 1515, there were but two marshals, who had 500 livres per annum in war, but no stipend in time of peace. The rank afterward became of the highest military importance, the number was without limit, and the command supreme. Napoleon's marshals were renowned for skill and courage. See Marshal.

MARIAN PERSECUTION. See Protestants.

MARIGNANO (NOW MALEGNANO), North Italy, near Milan. Three battles have been fought near here: 1.

Francis I. of France defeated the Duke of Milan and the Swiss, Sept. 13, 14, 1515; above 20,000 men were slain. This conflict has been called the Battle of the Giants.—2. Near here was fought the battle of Pavia (which see).—3. After the battle of Magenta, June 4, 1859, the Austrians intrenched themselves at Malignano. The emperor sent Marshal Baraguay d' Hilliers with 16,000 men to dislodge them, which he did with a loss of about 850 killed and wounded, on June 8. The Austrians are said to have lost 1400 killed and wounded, and 900 prisoners, out of 18,000 engaged.

MARINER'S COMPASS. See Compass and Magnetism.

MARINES in England were first established with the object of forming a nursery to man the fleet. An order in council, dated October 16, 1664, authorized 1200 soldiers to be raised and formed into one regiment. In 1684, the 3d regiment of the line was called the Marine Regiment; but the system of having soldiers exclusively for sea-service was not carried into effect until 1693, when two marine regiments were formed. More regiments were embodied in subsequent years; and in 1741 the corps consisted of ten regiments, each 1000 strong. In 1759 they numbered 18,000 men. In the latter years of the French War, ending in 1815, they amounted to 31,400, but there were frequently more than 3000 supernumeraries. The jollies, as they are called, frequently distinguished themselves. The "Royal Marine Forces" now comprehend artillery and light infantry. The vote for 1857 was for 16,000 marines, inclusive of 1500 artillery.—P. H. Nicolas.

MARINO, SAN, a republic in Central Italy, has existed since the 6th century. Its independence was confirmed by Pope Pius VII. in 1817. Population in 1858 about 8000.

MARK, a silver coin of the Northern nations, and the name mark-lubs is still retained in Denmark. In England, the mark means the sum of 13s. 4d., and here the name is also retained in law courts.

MARKET. See Smithfield and Metropolitan Cattle-market.

MARK'S, St. (Venice). The church was erected in 829; the piazza in 1592.

MARLBOROUGH, STATUTES OF, were enacted in the castle of Marlborough, in Wiltshire, 1267.—MARLBOROUGH HOUSE, Pall Mall, London, was built by Wren for the Duke of Marlborough, 1709-10; was bought for the Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold in 1817; held by Queen Adelaide till 1849, and became the residence of the Prince of Wales, 1863.

MARONITES, Christians in the East, followers of one Maron in the 5th century; they are said to have embraced the errors of the Jacobites, Nestorians, and Monothelites: in 1180 they numbered 40,000 living in the neighborhood of Mount Libanus, and, being a brave people, they were of great service to the Christian kings of Jerusalem. They were reconciled to the Church of Rome about the 12th century. For an account of the massacres of the Maronites in 1860, see Druses.

MAROONS, a name given in Jamaica to runaway negroes. When the island was conquered from the Spaniards, a number of their negroes fled to the hills and became very troublesome to the colonists. A war of eight years' duration ensued, when the Maroons capitulated on being permitted to retain their free settlements, about 1730. In 1795 they again took arms, but were speedily put down, and many were transported to other colonies.—Brande.

MAR-PRELATE TRACTS, virulently attacking episcopacy, were written, it is believed, by Henry Penny, who was cruelly executed, May 29, 1693, for having written seditious words against the queen (found about his person when seized). The tracts appeared about 1556. Some had very singular titles, such as "An Almand for a Parrat," "Hay any Worke for Cooper?" etc. They were collected and reprinted in 1843.

MARQUE, LETTERS OF. See Privateer.

MARQUESAS ISLANDS (Polynesia) were discovered in 1595 by Mendana, who named them after the viceroy of Peru, Marquesa de Mendoza. They were visited by Cooke in 1774, and were taken possession of by the French Admiral Dupetit Thouars, May 1, 1842.

MARQUESS, a dignity, called by the Saxons Mark-in-Reve, by the Germans Markgrave, took its original from Mark or March, a limit or bound (see Marches), the office being to guard or govern the frontiers of a province. Marquess is the next place of honor to a duke, and was introduced several years after that title had been established in England. The first on whom it was conferred was the favorite of King Richard II., Robert de Vere, earl of Oxford, created Marquess of Dublin, and placed in Parliament between the dukes and earls, 1385. James Stewart, second son of James III. of Scotland, was made Marquess of Ormond in 1476, without territories; afterward Earl of Ross.

MARRIAGE was instituted by God (Gen. ii.), and confirmed by Christ (Mark x.), who performed a miracle at the celebration of one (John ii.). Matrimonial ceremonies among the Greeks are ascribed to Cecrops, king of Athens, 1554 B.C.

ROYAL MARRIAGE ACT was passed in 1772, in consequence of the marriage of the Duke of Gloucester, the king's brother, with the widow of the Earl Walgrave, and of the Duke of Cumberland with the widow of Colonel Horton and daughter of Lord Inrham. [By this act, none of the descendants of Geo. II., unless of foreign birth, can marry under the age of 25, unless with the consent of the king; at and after that age, the consent of Parliament is necessary to render the marriage valid.] The marriage of the Duke of Sussex with the Lady Augusta Murray, solemnized in 1793, was pronounced illegal, and the claims of their son, Sir Augustus d'Este, declared invalid by the House of Lords, July 9, 1844.

HALF MARRIAGE.—Semi-Matrimonium. Among the Romans concubinage was a legitimate union, not merely tolerated, but authorized. The concubine had the name of semi-conjux. Men might have either a wife or a concubine, provided they had not both together. Constantine the Great checked concubinage, but did not abolish it. This ancient custom of the Romans was preserved, not only among the Lombards, but by the French when they held dominion in that country. Cujas assures us that the Gascons and other people bordering on the Pyrenean Mountains had not relinquished this custom in his time, 1590. The women bore the name of "wives of the second order."—Hénault. See Morganatic Marriages.

DOUBLE MARRIAGES.—There are some instances of a husband and two wives (but they are very rare) in countries where polygamy was interdicted by the state. The first Lacedæmonian who had two wives was Anaxandrides, the son of Leon, about 510 B.C. Dionysius of Syracuse married two wives, viz., Doris, the daughter of Xenetus, and Aristomache, sister of Dion, 393 B.C. It is said that the Count Gleichen, a German nobleman, was permitted, under peculiar circumstances, by Gregory IX., in A.D. 1237, to marry and live with two wives. The Mormons practise and encourage polygamy.

FORCED MARRIAGES.—The statute 3 Henry VII. (1487) made the principal and abettors in marriages with heiresses, etc., contrary to their will, equally guilty as felons. By 39 Eliz. (1596) such felons were denied the benefit of clergy. This offense was made punishable by transportation, 1 Geo. IV. (1820). The remarkable case of Miss Wharton, heiress of the house of Wharton, whom Capt. Campbell married by force, occurred in William III.'s reign. Sir John Johnston was hanged for seizing the young lady, and the marriage was annulled by Parliament, 1690.—Edward Gibbon Wakefield was tried at Lancaster, and found guilty of the felonious abduction of Miss Turner, March 24, 1827; and his marriage with her was immediately dissolved by act of Parliament.

MARRIAGES BY SALE.—Among the Babylonians, at a certain time every year, the marriageable females were assembled, and disposed of to the best bidder. This custom is said to have originated with Atossa, daughter of Belochus, about 1433 B.C.

FLEET MARRIAGES. See Fleet.

MARSEILLAISE HYMN. The words and music are ascribed to Rouget de Lille, a French engineer officer, who composed it at the request of Marshal Lucknow, in 1791, to cheer the conscripts at Strasburg. It derived its name from a body of troops from Marseilles marching into Paris in 1792 playing the tune, it being then not much known.—Brande.

MARSEILLES, the ancient Massilia (S. France), a maritime city, founded by the Phœceans about 600 B.C.; was an ally of Rome, 218 B.C. Cicero styled it the Athens of Gaul, on account of its excellent schools.

MARSHALS. Two were appointed in London to clear the streets of vagrants, and to send the sick, blind, and lame to asylums and hospitals for relief, 1567.—Northouck.

MARSHALS, BRITISH FIELD.—This rank was first conferred upon John, duke of Argyle, and George, earl of Orkney, by George II. in 1736. See Mareschal.

MARSHALS OF FRANCE, etc., appointed by Napoleon I. during his wars, 1804-14:

* Of these marriages, it is stated in the registrars' returns that 47,570 men and 70,601 women could not write, and that they signed the marriage register with their marks.—In France, the marriages were 208,893 in 1820; 243,674 in 1825; and 259,177 in 1830. As respects Paris, the statistics of that city, which are very minute and curious, furnish the following classes as occurring in 1754 marriages: Bachelors and maids, 6456; bachelors and widows, 368; widowers and maids, 708; widowers and widows, 222.

Arrighi, duke of Padua.

Augereau, duke of Castiglione.

Bernadotte, prince of Ponte Corvo; afterward king of Sweden.

Berthier, prince of Neufchâtel and Wagram, committed suicide at Bamberg, 1815.

Besières, duke of Istria.

Davoust, prince of Eckmühl and duke of Auerstadt.

Jourdan, peer of France.

Junot, duke of Abrantes, suicide 1813.

Kellerman, duke of Valmy.

Lannes, duke of Montebello, killed at Aspern, 1809.

Lefebvre, duke of Dantzic.

Macdonald, duke of Tarento.

Marmont, duke of Ragusa.

Massena, prince of Essling and duke of Rivoli.

Mouney, duke of Conegliano.

Mortier, duke of Treviso, killed by Fieschi, July 28, 1835.

Murat, king of Naples, executed Oct. 13, 1815.

Ney, prince of Moskwa, executed Dec. 7, 1815.

Oudinot, duke of Reggio.

Soult, duke of Dalmatia.

Suchet, duke of Albuera.

Victor, duke of Belluno.

OFFICERS OF STATE.

Cambacères, duke of Parma.

Caulaincourt, duke of Vicenza.

Champagne, duke of Cadore.

Duroc, duke of Friuli, killed at Bantzen, 1813.

Fouché, duke of Otranto.

Le Brun, duke of Piacenza.

Maret, duke of Bassano.

Savary, duke of Rovigo; and Talleyrand de Périgord, prince of Benevento, died 1838.

MARSHALSEA COURT of the Queen's house was very ancient, of high dignity, and coeval with the common law. Since the decision of the case of the Marshalsea (see Lord Coke's 10 Rep., 68) no business had been done in this court; but it was regularly opened and adjourned at the same time with the Palace court, the judges and other officers being the same. These courts were abolished by Parliament, and were discontinued, Dec. 31, 1849.

MARSI, a brave people of Southern Italy, who, after several contests, yielded to the Romans, about 301 B.C. During the Civil Wars they and their allies rebelled, having demanded and been refused the rights of Roman citizenship, 91 B.C. After many successes and reverses, they sued for and obtained peace and the rights they required, 87 B.C. The Marsi being Socii of the Romans, this was called the Social War.

MARSTON MOOR (near York). The Scots and Parliamentary army were besieging York, when Prince Rupert, joined by the Marquess of Newcastle, determined to raise the siege. Both sides drew up on Marston Moor on July 2, 1644, and the contest was long undecided. Rupert, commanding the right wing of the Royalists, was opposed by Oliver Cromwell, at the head of a body of troops disciplined by himself. Cromwell was victorious; he drove his opponents off the field, followed the vanquished, returned to a second engagement and a second victory. The prince's artillery was taken, and the Royalists never recovered the blow.

MARTELLO TOWERS were circular buildings of masonry erected in the beginning of the present century on the coast of England as defenses against invasion. There are four of them in the rear of the city of Quebec, between the St. Lawrence and St. Charles Rivers.

MARTIAL LAW. See Courts-martial and Military Law.

MARTINESTL See Rimnik.

MARTINIQUE (West Indies), settled by France, 1635. This and the adjacent isles of St. Lucia and St. Vincent, and the Grenadines, were taken by the British from the French in Feb., 1762. They were restored to France at the peace of the following year. They were again taken March 16, 1794; were restored at the peace of Amiens in 1802; and were again captured Feb. 23, 1809. A revolution took place in this island in favor of Napoleon, but it was finally suppressed by the British, June 1, 1815, and Martinique reverted to its French masters. Severe earthquakes occurred here in 1767 and 1839.

MARTINMAS, Nov. 11, the feast of St. Martin, bishop of Tours, in the 4th century. In parts of the north of England and in Scotland it is quarter day.

MARTIN'S HALL, Sr., Long Acre, London, was opened as a concert-room for Mr. John Hullah on Feb. 11, 1850; burnt down Aug. 26, 1860, and rebuilt 1861.

MARTYRS. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, was stoned, 37. The festivals of the martyrs, of very ancient date, took their rise about the time of Polycarp, who suffered martyrdom about 166. St. Alban is the English protomartyr, 286. See Persecutions and Protestants.

MARYLAND, one of the first thirteen United States of North America, was granted in 1632 to Lord Baltimore, and settled by a company of English Romanists in 1634. It continued in the Union when the other slave states seceded in 1860 and 1861. The Confederate army, under General Lee, after their victory at Bull Run, Aug. 30, 1862, crossed the Potomac and entered Maryland. They were encountered by the Federal army under McClellan. Severe conflicts ensued, especially on Sept. 17, at Antietam Creek, with great loss on both sides, each claiming the victory. See Antietam.

MASKS. Poppæa, the wife of Nero, is said to have invented the mask to guard her complexion from the sun; but theatrical masks were in use among the Greeks and Romans. Horace attributes them to Æschylus; yet Aristotle says the inventor and time of their introduction were unknown.—Modern masks, and muffs, fans, and false hair for the women, were devised in Italy, and brought to England from France in 1572.—Stow.

MASQUERADES were in fashion in the court of Edward III., 1340; and in the reign of Charles, 1660, masquerades were frequent among the citizens. The bishops preached against them, and made such representations as occasioned their suppression, 9 Geo. I., 1724. [No less than six masquerades were subscribed for in a month at this time.] They were revived, and carried to shameful excess by connivance of the government, and in direct violation of the laws, and tickets of admission to a masquerade at Ranelagh were on some occasions subscribed for at twenty-five guineas each, 1776.—Mortimer. At the close of a bal masqué, March 5, 1856, Covent Garden Theatre was destroyed by fire.

MASS, in the Roman Church, is the office or prayers used at the celebration of the Eucharist, in memory of the passion of Christ, and to this every part of the service alludes. The general division consists in high and low; the first is that sung by the choristers, and celebrated with the assistance of a deacon and sub-deacon; low masses are those in which the prayers are badly rehearsed without singing. Mass was first celebrated in Latin about 394; it was introduced into England in the 7th century. Prostration was enjoined at the elevation of the host in 1201.*

MASSACHUSETTS, one of the United States. First settled at Plymouth by a colony of English Puritans, who had lived some time in Holland, after being driven out of their own country by persecution, 1620. This was called the Plymouth colony. In 1628, others direct from England settled at Salem and Charlestown, and in 1630 at Boston, and this was called the Massachusetts Bay colony. By this name the whole province was called until the Revolution, the two above-named colonies having been united in 1692. Here were transacted some of the earlier and most important scenes of the Revolution. See Boston. It adopted a State Constitution in 1780, abolished slavery in 1783, and accepted the Federal Constitution in Feb., 1788, by which it became a member of the Confederacy.

MASSACRES. The following are among the most remarkable:

BEFORE CHRIST.

Of all the Carthaginians in Sicily, 397.
2000 Tyrians crucified and 8000 put to the sword for not surrendering Tyre to Alexander, 331.
Of 2000 Capuans, friends of Hannibal, by Gracchus, 211.

A dreadful slaughter of the Teutones and Ambrones, near Aix, by Marius, the Roman general, 200,000 being left dead on the spot, 102.

The Romans throughout Asia, women and children not excepted, massacred in one day, by order of Mithridates, king of Pontus, 88.

A great number of Roman senators massacred by Cinnan, Marius, and Sertorius, 87.

* Dr. Daniel Rock, in his work entitled "The Church of our Fathers" (1849), gives a full account of an ancient MS. of "The Service of the Mass, called the Rite of Salisbury," compiled for that cathedral by St. Osmund and others, from the end of the 11th to the end of the 12th century.

Again, under Sylla and Catiline, his minister of vengeance, 82.

At Perusia, Octavianus Cæsar ordered 300 Roman senators and other persons of distinction to be sacrificed to the manes of Julius Cæsar, 40.

AFTER CHRIST.

At the destruction of Jerusalem, 1,100,000 of Jews are said to have been put to the sword, 70.

The Jews, headed by one Andræ, put to death 100,000 Greeks and Romans, in and near Cyrene, 115.

Cassius, a Roman general, under the Emperor M. Aurelius, put to death 300,000 of the inhabitants of Selesia, 165.

At Alexandria, many thousands of citizens were massacred by order of Antoninus, 215.

The Emperor Probus is said to have put to death 400,000 of the barbarian invaders of Gaul, 277.

Of the Gothic hostages by Valens, 375.

Of Thessalonica, when 7000 persons invited into the circus were put to the sword, by order of Theodosius, 390.

Of the circus factions at Constantinople, 532.

Massacre of the Latins at Constantinople, by order of Andronicus, 1184.

Of the Albigenses and Waldenses, commenced at Toulouse, 1208. Thousands perished by the sword and gibbet of the French in Sicily, 1252. See Sicilian Vespers.

At Paris, of the Armagnacs, at the instance of John, duke of Burgundy, 1418.

Of the Swedish nobility, at a feast, by order of Christian II., 1520.

Of Protestants at Vassy, March 1, 1562.

Of 70,000 Huguenots, or French Protestants, in France (see St. Bartholomew), Aug. 24, 1572.

Of the Christians in Croatia by the Turks, when 65,000 were slain, 1592.

Of the pretender Demetrius, and his Polish adherents, May 27, 1606.

Of Protestants at Thorn, put to death under a pretended legal sentence of the Chancellor of Poland for being concerned in a tumult occasioned by a Roman Catholic procession, 1724. All the Protestant powers in Europe interceded to have this unjust sentence revoked, but unavailingly.

At Batavia, 12,000 Chinese were massacred by the natives, Oct., 1740, under the pretext of an intended insurrection.

At the taking of Ismail by the Russians, 30,000 old and young were slain, Dec., 1790. See Ismail.

MASSACRES IN BRITISH HISTORY.

Of 300 English nobles, on Salisbury Plain, by Hengist, about 450.

Of the monks of Bangor, to the number of 1200, by Ethelred, king of Bernicia, 607 or 612.

Of the Danes in the southern counties of England, in the night of Nov. 13, 1002, and the 23d Ethelred II. At London it was most bloody, the churches being no sanctuary. Among the rest was Gunilda, sister of Swein, king of Denmark, left in hostage for the performance of a treaty but newly concluded.—Baker's Chronicle.

Of the Jews in England. Some few, pressing into Westminster Hall at Richard I.'s coronation, were put to death by the people; and a false alarm being given that the king had ordered a general massacre of them, the people in many parts of England slew all they met. In York, 500, who had taken shelter in the castle, killed themselves rather than fall into the hands of the multitude, 1189.

Of the Bristol colonists at Cullen's Wood, Ireland (see Cullen's Wood), 1209.

Of the English factory at Amboyna, in order to dispossess its members of the Spice Islands, Feb., 1624.

Massacre of the Protestants in Ireland, in O'Neill's rebellion, Oct. 23, 1641. Upward of 30,000 British were killed in the commencement of this rebellion.

—Sir William Petty. In the first three or four days of it, forty or fifty thousand of the Protestants were destroyed.—Lord Clarendon. Before the rebellion was entirely suppressed, 154,000 Protestants were massacred.—Sir W. Temple.

Of the Macdonalds of Glencoe (see Glencoe), Feb. 13, 1692.

Of 184 men, women, and children, chiefly Protestants, burnt, shot, or pierced to death by pikes; perpetrated by the insurgent Irish, at the barn of Scullabogue, Ireland, in 1798.—Musgrave.

Of Europeans at Meerut, Delhi, etc., by mutineers of the native Indian army (see India), May and June, 1857.

Of Europeans at Kalangan, on the south coast of Borneo, May 1, 1859.

Of the Europeans at Morant Bay, Jamaica, by the infuriated negroes, Oct. 11, 12, 1865.

MASSAGETÆ, an ancient Scythian people (probably the ancestors of the Goths), who invaded Asia about 635. In a conflict with them Cyrus the Great was killed, 529 B.C.

MASSANIELLO REVOLUTION, 1647. See Naples, note.

MASSILIA. See Marseilles.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS, an equity judge, derives his title from having the custody of all charters, patents, commissions, deeds, and recognizances, made into rolls of parchment; his decrees are appealable to the Court of Chancery. The repository of public papers, called the Rolls, is in Chancery Lane. They were formerly kept in a chapel founded for the converted Jews; but, after the Jews were expelled the kingdom, it was annexed forever to the office of the mastership of the rolls. Here were kept all the records since the beginning of the reign of King Richard III., 1483, all prior to that period being kept in the Tower of London. See Records. The first recorded master of the rolls was either John de Langton, appointed 1286, or Adam de Osgodeby, appointed Oct. 1, 1295; but it is clear that the office was in existence long before.—Hardy. The duties were defined in 1833, and the salary regulated in 1837.

MATHEMATICS formerly meant all kinds of learning, but the term is now applied to the sciences relating to numbers and quantity. See Arithmetic. Among the most eminent mathematicians were Euclid, 300 B.C.; Archimedes, 287 B.C.; Descartes, died 1650; Barrow, died 1677; Leibnitz, died 1716; Sir Isaac Newton, died 1727; Euler, died 1783; Lagrange, died 1813; Laplace, died 1827; and Dr. Peacock, died 1858. Dr. Whewell, Mr. G. B. Airy (astronomer royal), Professor de Morgan, J. Todhunter, and Mary Somerville, born 1790, author of the "Mechanism of the Heavens," are eminent living mathematicians.

MATINS. The service or prayers first performed in the morning or beginning of the day in the Roman Catholic Church. The French Matins imply the massacre of St. Bartholomew, Aug. 24, 1572. The Matins of Moscow were the massacre of Prince Demetrius, and the Poles his adherents, at six o'clock in the morning of May 27, 1606.

MATTERHORN, a part of the main ridge of the Alps, about 14,836 feet high, S. Switzerland. After various fruitless attempts by Professor Tyndall, Mr. Whymper, and other eminent climbers, in 1860, the summit was reached on July 14, 1865, by Mr. Edward Whymper and others. During their descent four of the party were killed. Mr. Hadow fell; the connecting rope broke, and himself, Lord Francis Douglas, the Rev. Mr. Hudson, and Michael Croz, a guide, slipped down, and fell from a precipice nearly 4000 feet high.

MAUMEE RAPIDS, BATTLE OF. At the Maumee Rapids, in Northern Ohio, Wayne, with American troops, fought with, defeated, and completely routed 2000 Indians, on the 20th of August, 1794. The Americans lost 83 killed and 100 wounded. This battle ended the Indian War in the Northwest.

MAUNDAY-THURSDAY (derived by Spelman from mande, a hand-basket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor; by others from dies mandati, the day on which Christ gave his grand mandate that we should love one another), the Thursday before Good Friday.—Wheatley. On this day it was the custom of our kings or their almoners to give alms, food, and clothing to as many poor men as they were years old. It was begun by Edward III. when he was fifty years of age, 1363, and is still continued by our sovereign.

MAUR, Sr. See Benedictines.

MAURITANIA (N. Africa), with Numidia, became a Roman province, 45 B.C., with Sallust for proconsul. Augustus created (30 B.C.) a kingdom formed of Mauritania and part of Getulia for Juba II., a descendant of the ancient African princes. Suetonius Paulinus suppressed a revolt here, A.D. 42. The country was subjugated by the Vandals and Greeks, and fell into the hands of the Arabs, about 667. See Morocco and Moors.

MAURITIUS, or ISLE OF FRANCE (in the Indian Ocean), was discovered by the Portuguese, 1505; but the Dutch were the first settlers in 1598. They called it after Prince Maurice, their stadtholder, but on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope they deserted it, and it continued unsettled until the French landed, and gave it the name of one of the finest provinces in France, 1715. This island was taken by the British, Dec. 2, 1810, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814. Sir Henry Barkly became governor in 1853. Population in 1861, 313,462.

MAUSOLEUM. Artemesia married her own brother, Mausolus, king of Caria, Asia Minor, 377 B.C. At his death she drank in liquor his ashes after his body had been burned, and erected to his memory at Halicarnassus a monument, one of the seven wonders of the world (350 B.C.), termed Mausoleum. She invited all the literary men of her age, and proposed rewards to him who composed the best elegiac panegyric upon her husband. The prize was adjudged to Theopompus, 357 B.C. She died 352 B.C. The statue of Mausolus is among the antiquities brought from Halicarnassus by Mr. C. T. Newton in 1857, and placed in the British Museum. A mausoleum for the royal family of England was founded by the queen at Frogmore, March 15, 1862.

MAUVE (French for malva, mallow), a dye produced by Dr. Stenhouse from lichens in 1848; now produced from Aniline (which see).

MAY, the fifth month of the year, received its name, some say, from Romulus, who gave it this appellation in respect to the senators and nobles of his city, who were denominated maiores; others supposed it was so called from Maia, the mother of Mercury, to whom they offered sacrifices on the first day. The ancient Romans used to go in procession to the grotto of Egeria on May-day. See Evil May-day.*

MAYORS OF THE PALACE were high officers in France, and had great influence during the later Merovingian kings. They were Pepin the Old (or de Landen), 622 et seq. Pepin Heristal, 687-714; Charles Martel, 714-741; Pepin le Bref, 741-752, who shut up Childeric III. in a monastery, and himself took the kingdom. In this quality Charles Martel ruled with despotic sway, 735 et seq. MAYORS OF CORPORATIONS.—At the time of the Norman Conquest, 1066, the chief officer of London was called port-grave, afterward softened into port-reeve, from Saxon words signifying chief governor of a harbor. He was afterward called provost; but in Henry II.'s reign the Norman title of maire (soon after major) was brought into use. At first the mayor was chosen for life, but afterward for periods of irregular duration; now he is chosen annually, but is eligible for re-election. He must be an alderman, and must have previously filled the office of sheriff. His duties commence on Nov. 9. The prefix lord is peculiar to the chief civic officer of London, Dublin, Edinburgh, and also York (since 1389, when a new charter was granted).

MEAL-TUB PLOT, against the Duke of York, afterward James II., contrived by one Dangerfield, who secreted a bundle of seditious letters in the lodgings of Colonel Maunsell, and then gave information to the Custom-house officers to search for smuggled goods, Oct. 23, 1679. After Dangerfield's apprehension on suspicion of forging these letters, papers were found concealed in a meal-tub at the house of a woman with whom he cohabited, which contained the scheme to be sworn to, accusing the most eminent persons in the Protestant interest, who were against the Duke of York's succession, of treason, particularly the Earls of Shaftesbury, Essex, and Halifax. On Dangerfield being whipped the last time, as part of his punishment, June 1, 1685, one of his eyes was struck out by a barrister named Robert Francis: this caused his death, for which his assailant was hanged.

MEASURES. See Weights.

MECCA (in Arabia), the birthplace of Mohammed, 569. The temple is a gorgeous structure, much visited by pilgrims. On one of the neighboring hills is a cave, where it is asserted Mohammed usually retired to perform his devotions, and where the greatest part of the Koran was brought to him by the Angel Gabriel, 604. Two miles from the town is the hill where, they say, Abraham went to offer up Isaac, 1871 B.C. Mecca, after being vainly besieged by Hosen for the Caliph Yezid, A.D. 682, was taken by Abdelmelek, 692. In 1803 it fell into the hands of the Wahabees, a Mohammedan sect. It is said that 160,000 pilgrims visited Mecca in 1858, and only 50,000 in 1859.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

One was founded by Dr. Birkbeck in London, and another in Glasgow, in 1823; and soon after others arose in different parts of the empire. They have revived since 1857, many noblemen and gentlemen giving lectures in them. There are several flourishing ones in the United States. Of these, that of Boston takes the lead.

MECKLENBURG (N. Germany), formerly a principality in Lower Saxony, now independent as the two grand-duchies of Mecklenburg-Schwerin (population in 1863, 551,884), and Mecklenburg-Strelitz (population in 1860, 99,960). The house of Mecklenburg is among the most ancient in Europe, as it claims to be descended from Genseric the Vandal, who ravaged the Western Empire in the 5th century, and died 477. During the Thirty Years' War Mecklenburg was conquered by Wallenstein, who became its duke, 1628; it was restored to its own duke in 1630. After several changes, the government was settled in 1701 as it now

* Mrs. Elizabeth Montague (who died in 1800) gave for many years, on May-day, an entertainment at her house in Portman Square to the chimney-sweepers of London. They were regaled with roast beef and plum pudding, and a dance succeeded. Upon their departure, each guest received a shilling from the mistress of the feast. It is said, though the statement is much doubted, that this entertainment was instituted to commemorate the circumstance of Mrs. Montague's having once found a boy of her own, or that of a relation, among the sooty tribe. In allusion to this incident, perhaps, a story resembling the adventures of this child is pathetically related by Montgomery in "The Chimney-sweeper's Boy."

exists in the two branches of Schwerin and Strelitz. In 1815, the Dukes of Mecklenburg were made grand-dukes.—The royal family of England for a century has been intimately allied with the house of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. King George III. married Charlotte, a daughter of the duke, in 1761; their son, the Duke of Cumberland (afterward King of Hanover), married Princess Frederica Caroline, a daughter of the duke, in 1815; and Princess Augusta of Cambridge married June 28, 1843, Frederick, the present grand-duke.

MEDALS. See Numismatics. There is hardly any record of medals or decorations as rewards in the army or navy before the time of the Commonwealth. The House of Commons resolved to grant rewards and medals to the fleet whose officers (Blake, Monk, Penn, and Lawson) and men gained a glorious victory over the Dutch fleet, off the Texel, in 1653. Blake's medal of 1653 was bought by his majesty William IV. for 150 guineas. In 1692 an act was passed for applying the tenth part of the proceeds of prizes for medals and other rewards for officers, seamen, and marines. Subsequent to Lord Howe's victory, June 1, 1794, it was thought expedient to institute a naval medal. Medals were presented by the queen to persons distinguished in the war in the Crimea, May 18, 1855. In the United States, medals of gold and silver have been awarded for meritorious services from the foundation of the government. The first that was authorized by Congress was awarded to Washington for his deliverance of Boston from British rule in March, 1776. It was of gold.

MEDICI FAMILY, illustrious as the restorers of literature and the fine arts in Italy, were chiefs or signori of the republic of Florence from 1434, in which year Cosmo de' Medici, who had been banished from the republic, was recalled and made its chief; he presided over it for thirty years. Lorenzo de' Medici, styled "the Magnificent," and the "Father of Letters," ruled Florence from 1469 to 1492. John de' Medici (Pope Leo X.) was the son of Lorenzo.—Roscoe. From 1569 to 1737 the Medici family were hereditary grand-dukes of Tuscany (which see). Catharine de' Medici became queen of France in 1547, and regent in 1550. She plotted with the Duke of Alva to destroy the Protestants in 1565.

MEDICINE. See Physic.

MEDINA (Arabia Deserta), famous for the tomb of Mohammed, in a large mosque, lighted by rich lamps. Medina was called the City of the Prophet, because here Mohammed was protected when he fled from Mecca, July 15, 622. See Hegira. Medina was taken by the Wahabees in 1804.

MEEANEE. The Hyderabad Ameers, amounting to 30,000 infantry, with 15 guns and 5000 cavalry, posted in a formidable position at Meeanee, were attacked on Feb. 17, 1843, by Lieut. Gen. Sir Charles Napier, with 2600 men of all arms. This insignificant force fell so impetuously upon the enemy, that after a severe contest the Ameers gave way, and retreated in tolerable order. Their loss was enormous.

MEGARA, a city of ancient Greece, was subdued by the Athenians in the 8th century B.C. Pericles suppressed a revolt, 445 B.C. The Megarians founded Byzantium 657 B.C., and sent a second colony 628 B.C. The Megarian (Eristic or disputations) school of philosophy was founded by Euclid and Stilpo, natives of Megara.

MEIGS, FORT, at the Maumee Rapids, was occupied by General Harrison, with about 2000 American troops, in the spring of 1813. There, on the 1st of May, he was besieged by General Proctor, with a British and Indian force amounting in all to about 2800 men. On the 5th they were attacked by a part of General Clay's brigade, 800 in number, and driven off. The victors pursued, but were turned upon and overwhelmed by the British and Indians. During the siege the Americans lost 81 killed and 190 wounded. In the attack and pursuit, on the 5th of May, the Americans lost 80 killed and 490 made prisoners.

MELAZZO (W. Sicily). Here Garibaldi, on July 20 and 21, 1860, defeated the Neapolitans under General Bosco, who lost about 600 men, Garibaldi's loss being 167. The latter entered Messina; and on July 30 a convention was signed, by which it was settled that the Neapolitan troops were to quit Sicily. They held the citadel of Messina till March 13, 1861.

MELBOURNE (Australia), capital of Victoria (which see). It was laid out as a town by orders of Sir R. Bourke, in April, 1837. The first land-sale took place in June, and speculation commenced and continued till it caused wide-spread insolvency in 1841-2.

MELBOURNE ADMINISTRATIONS. On the retirement of Earl Grey, July 9, 1834, Viscount Melbourne became first minister of the crown. On the accession of Viscount Althorpe to the earldom of Spencer, on his father's decease, Nov. same year, Lord Melbourne waited on the king to receive his majesty's commands as to the appointment of a new chancellor of the Exchequer, when his majesty said he considered the administration at an end. Sir Robert Peel succeeded, but was compelled to resign in 1835, and Lord Melbourne returned to office. His administration finally terminated Aug. 30, 1841, Sir Robert Peel again coming into power. See Administrations.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION, July, 1834.

Viscount Melbourne,* First Lord of the Treasury.
Marquess of Lansdowne, Lord President.
Earl Mulgrave, Privy Seal.
Viscount Althorpe, Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Viscount Duncannon, Viscount Palmerston, and Mr. Spring Rice (afterward Lord Monteagle), Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries.

Lord John Russell, Paymaster of the Forces.
Lord Brougham, Lord Chancellor.
Sir John Hobhouse, Mr. Ellice, Marquess of Conyngham, Mr. Littleton, etc.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION, April, 1835.

Lord Melbourne, First Lord of the Treasury.
Marquess of Lansdowne, Lord President.
Viscount Duncannon, Privy Seal, and Woods and Forests.
Mr. Rice, Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Lord John Russell, Viscount Palmerston, and Lord Glenelg, Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries.
Earl of Minto, Admiralty.

* Wm. Lamb, born in 1779; became M.P. for Westminster, 1812; secretary for Ireland, 1827; succeeded his father as Viscount Melbourne, 1828; died Nov. 24, 1848.

Sir John Hobhouse, and Mr. Poulett Thomson, Boards of Control and Trade.

Lord Holland, Duchy of Lancaster.
Viscount Howick, Secretary at War.
Mr. Labouchere, Sir Henry Parnell, Lord Morpeth, etc.
The chancellorship in commission; Sir C. Pepys (afterward Lord Cottenham) became Lord Chancellor, Jan., 1836.

MELEGNANO. See Marignano.

MELODRAMA originated with or was introduced by Mr. Holcroft in 1793.

MEMEL, an important commercial port in Prussia, built about 1279. It was taken by the Teutonic knights about 1328. It has suffered much by fire, and was almost totally destroyed October 4, 1864. The loss was estimated at £1,100,000.

MEMORY. See Mnemonics.

MEMPHIS, an ancient city of Egypt ("of which the very ruins are stupendous"), is said to have been built by Menes, 3890 B.C.; or by Misraim, 2188 B.C. It was restored by Septimius Severus, A.D. 206. In the 7th century, under the dominion of the Saracens, it fell into decay. The invasion of Cambyses, 526 B.C., began the ruin of Memphis, and the founding of Alexandria, 332, completed it.

MENAI STRAIT (between the Welsh coast and the isle of Anglesey). Suetonius Paulinus, when he invaded Anglesey, transported his troops across this strait in flat-bottomed boats, while the cavalry swam over on horseback, and attacked the Druids in their last retreat. Their horrid practice of sacrificing their captives, and the opposition he met with, so incensed the Roman general that he gave the Britons no quarter, throwing all that escaped from that battle into fires which they had prepared for the destruction of himself and his army, A.D. 61.—In crossing this strait a ferry-boat was lost, and fifty persons, chiefly Irish, Dec. 4, 1785. The road from London to Holyhead has long been regarded as the highway from the British metropolis to Dublin; Mr. Telford was applied to by the government to perfect this route by the London and Holyhead mail-coach road, which he did by erecting beautiful suspension bridges over the River Conway and the Menai Strait, commenced in July, 1818, and finished in July, 1825. The Britannia tubular bridge over the Menai was constructed by Stephenson and Fairbairn in 1849-50. See Tubular Bridges.

MENDICANT FRIARS. Several religious orders commenced alms-begging in the 13th century, in the pontificate of Innocent III. They spread over Europe, and embraced many communities; but at length, by a general council, held by Gregory X. at Lyons in 1272, were confined to four orders—Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustines. The Capuchins and others branched off. See Franciscans, etc.

MENDICITY SOCIETY (Red Lion Square, London), was established in 1818 for the suppression of public begging and other impositions. Tickets received from the society are given by subscribers to beggars, who obtain relief at the society's house, if deserving. The society has caused above 25,000 vagrants to be convicted as impostors. In 1857, 54,074 meals; in 1860, 42,912; and in 1864, 55,265, were distributed. In 1857, 2785, and in 1864, 3680 begging letters were investigated.

MENSURATION. The various properties of conic sections were discovered by Archimedes, to whom the chief advancement in mensuration may be attributed. He also determined the ratio of spheres, spheroids, etc., about 218 B.C. See Arithmetic.

MENTZ (S.W. Germany), the Roman Moguntiacum. The archbishopric was founded by Boniface in 745. Many diets have been held here; and here John Faust established a printing-press in 1442. A festival in honor of John Gutenberg was celebrated here in 1837.

MENU, INSTITUTE OF, the very ancient code of India. Sir Wm. Jones, who translated them into English (1794), considers their date should be placed between Homer (about 962 B.C.) and the Roman Twelve Tables (about 449 B.C.).

MERCATOR'S CHARTS. The true inventor of these charts is said to have been a Mr. Wright, who made several voyages; in his absence Gerard Mercator published the charts in his own name, 1566. They are, however, now confidently ascribed to Mercator's own ingenuity.

MERCER, FORT, BATTLE AT. Fort Mercer, at Red Bank, on the Delaware, in command of Lieutenant Colonel Greene, was attacked on the 22d of October, 1777, by Count Donop and 2000 Hessian grenadiers. They were repulsed with a loss of about 400 men, including their commander. The Americans lost less than 50 men.

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT was passed in 1862 to punish forgeries of tradesmen's marks, whereby much injury had been done.

MERCHANT. An attempt was made by Queen Anne's ministry to exclude merchants from sitting in the House of Commons in 1711; but it failed. The MERCHANT ADVENTURERS' Society (see Adventurers) was established by the Duke of Brabant in 1296; it extended to England in Edward III.'s reign; and was formed into an English corporation in 1564.—The MERCHANT TAILORS, a rich company of the city of London, of which many kings have been members, were so called after the admission of Henry VII. into their company, 1501, but were incorporated in 1466. Their school was founded in 1561.—Stow.

MERCY, ORDER OF (in France), was established with the object of accomplishing the redemption of Christian captives, by John de Matha, in 1198.—Henault. Another order was founded by Pierre Nolasque, Spain, 1223.

MERIDA (Spain), a town in Estremadura (built by the Romans), was taken by the French, Jan., 1811. Near this town, at Arroyos Molinos, the British army under General (afterward Lord) Hill defeated the French under General Girard, after a severe engagement, Oct. 28, 1811. The British took Merida from the French in Jan., 1812, General Hill leading the combined forces of English and Spanish troops.

MERRY-ANDREW. The name is said to have been first given to Andrew Borde, a physician, who lived in the reign of Henry VIII., and who, on some occasions, on account of his facetious manners, appeared at court, 1547.

MERTON (Surrey). At an abbey here, the barons under Henry III., Jan. 23, 1236, held a Parliament which enacted the statutes called the Provisions of Merton, the most ancient body of laws next after Magna Charta. They were repealed in 1863. See Barons.

MESMERISM. Frederick Anthony Mesmer, a German physician of Mersburg, published his doctrines in 1766, contending, by a thesis on planetary influence, that the heavenly bodies diffused through the universe a subtle fluid which acts on the nervous system of animated beings. Quitting Vienna for Paris in 1778, he gained numerous proselytes to his system in France, where he received a subscription of 340,000 livres. The government appointed a committee of physicians and members of the Academy of Sciences to investigate his pretensions. Among these were Franklin and Bally, and the results appeared in an admirable paper drawn up by the latter, 1784, exposing the futility of animal magnetism, as the delusion was then termed. Mesmerism excited attention again about 1848, when Miss Harriet Martineau and others announced their belief in it.*

MESSENIA (now Mavra-Matra), a country of the Peloponnesus. The kingdom commenced by Polycaon, 1499 B.C. It had long sanguinary wars against Sparta (see next article), and once contained a hundred cities, most of whose names even are now unknown. It was at first governed by kings; after its restoration to power in the Peloponnesus, it formed a republic, under the protection first of the Thebans, and afterward of the Macedonians; but it never rose to eminence.

* In 1859, the Mesmeric Infirmary issued its tenth annual report, Archbishop Whately being president, and the Earl of Carlisle and Mr. Monckton Milnes (since Lord Houghton) among the vice-presidents.

The first Messenian War began 743 B.C.; was occasioned by violence offered to some Spartan women in a temple of devotion common to both nations, the King of Sparta being killed in his efforts to defend the females. Eventually Ithome was taken, and the Messenians became slaves to the conquerors. . . . B.C. 723

METALS. The metals and metalloids are now above fifty in number. Tubal-Cain is mentioned as an "instructor of every artificer in brass and iron" (Gen. iv.). Moses and Homer speak of the seven metals, and Virgil of the melting of steel. The Phœnicians had great skill in working metals. See Mines, Iron, and the other metals. Bunsen and Kirchhoff's method of chemical analysis by means of the spectrum has added Cæsium, Rubidium, Thallium, and Indium to the known metals.

METAMORPHISTS in the 15th century affirmed that Christ's natural body, with which he ascended into heaven, was wholly deified.

METAPHYSICS, the science of abstract reasoning, or that which contemplates the existence of things without relation to matter. The term, literally denoting "after physics," originated from these words having been put at the head of certain essays of Aristotle, which follow his treatise on Physics.—Mackintosh. Modern metaphysics arose in the 15th century—the period when an extraordinary impulse was given to the human mind in Europe, commonly called the "revival of learning." Hobbes, Cadworn, S. T. Coleridge, Dugald Stewart, and Sir W. Hamilton were eminent British metaphysicians, and Descartes, Pascal, Kant, and Fichte, foreign ones. See Philosophy.

METAURUS, a river in Central Italy, where Hasdrubal, the brother of Hannibal, was defeated and slain, 207 B.C., when marching with abundant reinforcements. The Romans were led by Livius and Claudius Nero, the consuls. The latter commanded the head of Hasdrubal to be thrown into his brother's camp. This victory saved Rome.

METEMPSYCHOSIS, a doctrine attributed to Pythagoras, 528 B.C., supposes the transmigration of the soul from one body to another. It is also ascribed to the Egyptians, who would eat no animal food lest they should devour the body into which the soul of a deceased friend had passed. They had also an idea that so long as the body of the deceased was kept entire, the soul would not transmigrate; and therefore embalmed the dead.

METEOROLOGY (from the Greek meteōros, aerial), the science which treats of the phenomena which have their origin in the air, such as rain, lightning, meteors, fogs, etc. Bacon, Boyle, and Franklin wrote on the subject.

John Dalton's essay on Meteorology appeared in 1793. Luke Howard's work on the Clouds appeared in 1802, and his "Barometrographia" in 1848.

Sir W. Reid published his work on the "Law of Storms" in 1838. The works of Daniell (1845), Kämtz (1845), and Müller (1847) are esteemed.

Mr. James Glaisher, the energetic secretary of the British Meteorological Society (established in 1850), is the most eminent meteorologist of the day. By his exertions the apparatus at Greenwich was erected; and meteorology has appeared in the "Greenwich Observations" since 1848. See Balloon—Scientific Ascents.

Meteorological observatories have been erected in all parts of the globe within the last 20 years.

The meteorological department of the Board of Trade, established in 1855, under Admiral Fitzroy, commenced the publication of reports in 1857.* It has issued apparatus and instruction books to captains of ships, and established observatories in many places in the empire. The Kew Meteorological Observatory was given to the British Association in April, 1860.

At the recommendation of M. Le Verrier and Admiral Fitzroy, meteorological information, obtained by the telegraph from the principal places in the United Kingdom, has been transmitted daily to Paris, and thence to other parts of Europe since Sept. 1, 1860.

Meteorological observations appear in the Times daily. Storm-warnings first sent to the coast by the Board of Trade, Feb. 6; and first published, July 31, 1861.

Daily international bulletin of the imperial observatory at Paris, under the direction of M. Le Verrier, first published Nov., 1862.

METHYLATED SPIRITS. By an act passed in 1855, a mixture of spirits of wine with 10 per cent. of its bulk of wood-naphtha, or methyllic alcohol, is allowed to be made duty free for use in the arts and manufactures, not less than 450 gallons being made at one time. In 1861 an act was passed permitting the methylated spirits to be retailed by license.

METONIC CYCLE, a period of 19 years, or 6940 days, at the end of which the changes of the moon fall on the same days. See Calippic Period.

METRIC SYSTEM. Before the revolution there was no uniformity in French weights and measures. On May 8, 1790, the Constitutional Assembly charged the Academy of Sciences with the organization of a better system. The committee named for the purpose by the Academy included the illustrious names of Berthollet, Borda, Delambre, Lagrange, Laplace, Méchain, and Prony. Delambre and Méchain were charged with the measurement of an arc of the meridian between Dunkirk and Barcelona, and from their calculations the mètre, which is equal to a ten millionth part of the distance between the poles and the equator (3-2508 English feet), was made the unit of length and the base of the system by law on April 7, 1795. The system was completed in 1799, and made by law the only legal one on Nov. 2, 1801. A decree on Feb. 12 accommodated the old measures to the new system; but on July 4, 1837, it was decreed that after Jan. 1, 1840, the metric and decimal system in its primitive simplicity should be used in all business transactions. The example of France has been followed by the greater part of Europe, and will probably, in time, be adopted in the British Empire.

Unit of SURFACE, centiare—a square metre=1-1960 English yard (a square décamètre or are=100 square metres).

Unit of VOLUME or SOLIDITY, stère=a cubic metre. Unit of CAPACITY, litre=a cubic décimètre (or 10th of a metre)=1-76077 English pint.

Unit of WEIGHT, gramme=weight of a cubic centimetre (the 100th part of a metre) of distilled water=0-56438 English dram.

Unit of MONEY, the franc, a piece of silver weighing 5 grammes.

The multiples of these units are expressed by Greek numerals (deca, 10; hecto, 100; kilo, 1000; myria, 10,000. The divisors are expressed by Latin numerals (deci, 10; centi, 100; milli, 1000).

MEXICAN WAR. The war between the United States and Mexico, which commenced in the spring of 1846, was caused, immediately, by the annexation of the independent state of Texas (which was once a part of Mexico, and had separated by means of a revolution) to the American Union. Hostilities were threatened by Mexico, and General Zachary Taylor was ordered by the President of the United States to march into Texas, to the borders of the Rio Grande, with an army of occupation. In January, 1846, he took position opposite the Mexican city of Matamoras, and commenced a fortification, which he called Fort Brown. Soon after this hostilities began, and continued until near the close of 1847. General Taylor invaded Central Mexico, and General Scott, beginning at Vera Cruz, penetrated the country to the capital, gaining victories at every step. He took possession of the city of Mexico on the 14th of September, 1847. On the 2d of February, 1848, a treaty of peace was signed at Guadalupe Hidalgo. By this war the United States came into possession of Northern Mexico and California.

MEXICO (N. America), discovered in 1517, conquered by the Spaniards under Fernando Cortez, 1521. The territory was named New Spain. The mint of Mexico was begun in 1535. This country rebelled in war against the viceroy in 1816; and under Iturbide gained its independence in 1821. Benito Juarez was appointed president, Feb. 11, 1858; made absolute dictator, June 30, 1861. See below. Population in 1862 about 7,500,000.

MICROSCOPES, said to have been invented by Fontana in Italy, and by Drebbel in Holland, about 1621. Those with double glasses were made at the period when the law of refraction was discovered, about 1624. Solar microscopes were invented by Dr. Hooke. In England great improvements were made in the microscope by Benjamin Martin (who invented and sold pocket microscopes about 1740), by Henry Baker, F. R.S., about 1763, and still greater during the present century by Wollaston, Ross, Jackson, Varley, Powell, and others. Diamond microscopes were made by Andrew Pritchard in 1824; and the properties of "test-objects" to prove the qualities of microscopes discovered by him and Goring in 1824-40. A binocular microscope (i.e., for two eyes) was constructed by Professor Biddell in 1851. Wenham's improvements were made known in 1861. Treatises on the microscope by J. Quekett (1848), by Dr. W. B. Carpenter (1856), by Dr. Lionel Beale (1858-64), and Griffith and Henfrey's "Micrographic Dictionary" (1856), are valuable. The Microscopical Society of London was established in 1839. In 1865 Mr. H. Sorby exhibited his spectrum microscope, by which the millionth of a grain of blood was detected.

MIDWIFERY. Women were the only practitioners of this art among the Hebrews and Egyptians. Hippocrates, who practiced medicine in Greece, 460 B.C., is styled by some the father of midwifery as well as of physic.* It advanced under Celsus, who flourished A.D. 37, and of Galen, who lived, 131. In England midwifery became a science about the period of the institution of the College of Physicians, 10 Hen. VII., 1518.†

* Agnoscite, an Athenian virgin, disguised her sex to learn medicine. She was taught by Hippocrates, her father, the art of midwifery, and, when employed, always discovered her sex to her patients. This brought her into so much practice, that the males of her profession, who were now out of employment, accused her before the Areopagus of corruption. She confessed her sex to the judges, and a law was made to empower all free-born women to learn midwifery. The whole story is doubtful.

† The celebrated Dr. Harvey personally engaged in the practice of it about 1603; and, after his example, the calling in of men in all difficult cases followed. Astruc affirms that the epoch of the employment of men-midwives goes no farther back than the first lying-in of Madame de la Valliere, mistress of Louis XIV., 1665. She sent for Julian Clement, an eminent surgeon, who was conducted with great secrecy to the house. The same surgeon was employed in the subsequent labors of this lady, and he being very successful, men-midwives afterward came into repute, the name of accoucheur being given to them.

MILETUS, a Greek city of Ionia, Asia Minor, founded about 1043 B.C. During the war with Persia it was taken, 494, but restored, 449. Here Paul delivered his celebrated charge to the elders of the Church of Ephesus, A.D. 60 (Acts xx.).

MILFORD HAVEN (Wales). Here the Earl of Richmond, afterward Henry VII., landed on his enterprise against Richard III., whom he defeated at Bosworth, 1485. The packets from this port to Ireland, sailing to Waterford, were established in 1787. The dock-yard, established here in 1790, was removed to Pembroke in 1814.

MILITARY or MARTIAL LAW is built on no settled principle, but is entirely arbitrary, and, in truth, no law, but sometimes indulged rather than allowed as law.—Sir Matthew Hale. It has been several times proclaimed in these kingdoms, and in 1798 was almost general in Ireland, where it was proclaimed in 1803.

 diers, 872 to 901.

MILKY WAY (Galaxy) in the heavens. Juno is said by the Greek poets to have spilled her milk in the heavens after suckling Mercury or Hercules. Democritus (about 428 B.C.) taught that the Via Lactea was a multitude of stars; proved by Galileo by means of the telescope.

MILL SPRING (Kentucky), BATTLE OF. Fought January 19, 1862. General Felix Zollicoffer here attacked General George H. Thomas, and was defeated, with a loss of 300 killed and wounded. General Zollicoffer was killed.

* This militia act was consequent upon the then prevailing opinion of the necessity of strengthening our national defenses against the possibility of French invasion. The act empowered her majesty to raise a force not exceeding 50,000 men, of which number 50,000 were to be raised in 1862, and 30,000 in 1856; the quotas for each county or riding to be fixed by an order in council.

MILLENNARIANS suppose that the world will end at the expiration of the seven thousandth year from the creation; and that during a thousand years (millennium) Christ and the saints will reign upon the earth. See Rev. xx. The doctrine was very generally inculcated as early as the 2d and 3d centuries by Papias, Justin Martyr, and others.—Burnett.

MILLS. Moses forbade mill-stones to be taken in pawn, because it would be like taking a man's life to pledge.—Deut. xxiv., 6. The hand-mill was in use among the Britons previously to the conquest by the Romans. The Romans introduced the water-mill.
 Cotton mills moved by water were erected by Sir Richard Arkwright, at Cromford, Derbyshire. He died in 1792.

MIMS, FORT. This fort, on the Alabama River, was attacked by a large body of Indians on the 30th of August, 1813. About 300 of the inmates (many of them old men, women, and children, who had taken refuge there) were massacred, and the fort was burnt. Only 17 escaped. The garrison, under Major Beaseley, fought bravely, and killed 200 Indians, and wounded 400 more.

MINCIO, a river of Lombardy. Here the Austrians were repulsed by the French under Brune, Dec. 25-27, 1800; and by Eugène Beauharnais, Feb. 8, 1814.

MINDEN (Prussia), BATTLE OF, Aug. 1, 1759, between the English, Hessians, and Hanoverians (commanded by Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick), and the French, who were beaten and driven to the very ramparts of Minden. Lord George Sackville (afterward Lord George Germaine), who commanded the British and Hanoverian horse, for some disobedience of orders was tried by a court-martial on his return to England, found guilty, and dismissed the service, April 22, 1760.
 He was afterward restored to court favor, and became secretary of state, 1776.

MINES. Strabo and Tacitus enumerate gold and silver as among the products of England. The earliest instance of a claim to a mine royal being enforced occurs 47 Hen. III., 1262. It related to mines containing gold, together with copper, in Devonshire; and in Edward I.'s reign, according to Mr. Ruding, the mines in Ireland, which produced silver, were supposed to be so rich that the king directed a writ for working them to Robert de Ufford, lord justice, 1276. The lead mines of Cardiganshire, from which silver has ever since been extracted, were discovered by Sir Hugh Middleton in the reign of James I.

MINIÉ RIFLE, invented at Vincennes, about 1833, by M. Minié, (born about 1800). From a common soldier he raised himself to the rank of chief d'escadron.
 His rifle is considered to surpass all made previous to it for accuracy of direction and extent of range. It was adopted by the French, and, with various modifications, by the British army in 1852.

MINNESINGERS, lyric German poets of the 12th and 13th centuries, who wrote to entertain knights and barons of the time. The Meister-singers in the 14th century devoted themselves to citizens. Some of their songs have been collected and published.

MINNESOTA, a Western state of the United States, was organized as a Territory March 3, 1849, and admitted into the Union in 1857. On Aug. 17, 1862, the Sioux Indians commenced a series of outrages at Acton, in Messler county, desolating the country and mas-sacring above 500 persons, of both sexes and of all ages. General Sibley beat the Indians in two battles, and rescued many captives. Thirty-eight Indians were executed as assassins.

MINORCA and MAJORCA, the Balearic Isles (which see). Minorca was captured by Lieutenant General Stanhope and Sir John Lenke in Aug., 1708, and was ceded to the British by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713.
 It was retaken by the Spanish and French in July, 1756. Admiral Byng fell a victim to public indignation for not relieving it. See Byng. It was restored to the British at the peace in 1763; besieged by the Spaniards, and taken Feb. 5, 1782. It was again captured by the British under General Stuart, without the loss of a man, Nov. 15, 1798, but was given up at the peace of Amiens in 1802.

MINSTRELS, originally pipers appointed by lords of manors to divert their copyholders while at work, owed their origin to the glee-men or harpers of the Saxons, and continued till about 1560. John of Gaunt erected a court of minstrels at Tutbury in 1380. So late as the reign of Henry VIII. they intruded without ceremony into all companies, even at the houses of the nobility; but in Elizabeth's reign they sank into neglect, and were adjudged rogues and vagabonds (1597).

MINT. Athelstan first enacted regulations for the government of the Mint about 928. There were several provincial mints under the control of that of London. Henry II. is said to have instituted a mint at Winchester, 1125. Stow says the Mint was kept by Italians, the English being ignorant of the art of coining. 7 Edw. I., 1278. The operators were formed into a corporation by the charter of King Edward III., in which condition it consisted of the warden, master, comptroller, assay-master, workers, coiners, and subordinates. The first entry of gold brought to the Mint for coinage occurs in 18 Edw. III., 1343. Tin was coined by Charles II., 1684; and gun-metal and pewter by his successor James. Sir Isaac Newton was warden, 1699-1727, during which time the debased coin was called in, and new issued at the loss of the government. Between 1806 and 1810, grants amounting to £262,000 were made by Parliament for the erection of the present Mint, which was completed in 1813; it was injured by fire Oct. 31, 1815. The new constitution of the Mint, founded on the report of the Hon. Wellesley Pole, took effect in 1817.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES was established by act of Congress in April, 1792, but it was not put into full operation until January, 1795. During the intervening three years its operations were chiefly experimental, and a great variety of copper and silver coins were struck between 1792 and 1795. The act specified that the gold coin should be of the fineness of 22 carats, or $\frac{917}{1000}$; the silver to be in 1435 parts in 1604, or 892.4 thousandths; and the cent to weigh 264 grains. On account of the increased value of copper, its weight was reduced in 1796 to 168 grains. Since that time no alteration has been made in the weight of the copper cent. Its coinage was suspended in 1857, when a smaller cent, composed of more precious metals, was substituted. The total value of coinage at the Mint and its branches, from its establishment to the 30th of June, 1859, is \$650,969,907 84. The value of the entire deposit of domestic gold at the Mint and its branches to the 30th of June, 1859, was \$470,341,478 46, of which \$451,310,840 26 were from California. The Mint is in the city of Philadelphia. There are four branch mints, situated respectively at New Orleans, La.; Dahlonega, Geo.; Charlotte, N. C.; and San Francisco, Cal. There is an assay-office at New York.

MINUS. See Plus.

MIRRORS. In ancient times mirrors were made of metal: those of the Jewish women of brass. Mirrors in silver were introduced by Praxiteles, 328 B.C. Mirrors or looking-glasses were made at Venice, A.D. 1300; and in England, at Lambeth, near London, in 1673. The improvements in manufacturing plate-glass, and that of very large size, has cheapened looking-glasses very much. Various methods of coating glass by a solution of silver, thus avoiding the use of mercury, so injurious to the health of the workmen, have been made known by M. Petitjean in 1851, and by M. Cimeg in 1861.

MISSIONS. Among the Romanists, the religious orders of St. Dominic, St. Francis, St. Augustin, etc., had missions to the Levant and to America. Marco Polo is said to have introduced missionaries into China, 1275. The Jesuits had missions to China (which see) and to most other parts of the world. Among the Protestants, an early undertaking of this kind was a Danish mission, planned by Frederick IV. in 1706. But the Moravian Brethren may be said to have led the way to the new Christian missions about 1732. The London Missionary Society held their first meeting, Nov. 4, 1794.*

* English missionaries abroad have not unfrequently suffered grievous hardships and privations. Commander Allan Gardner, R.N., who left England in the Ocean Queen in Sept., 1850, on the Patagonian mission, with Mr. Williams, surgeon, Mr. Meidment, catechist, and four others, died on Picton Island, at the mouth of the Beagle Channel, to MISSISSIPPI, a great river, N. America. The Mississippi trade was begun in England, in Nov., 1716. The celebrated Mississippi scheme or bubble in France, which was commenced about the same period, exploded in 1720, at which time the nominal capital is said to have amounted to £100,000,000. The ruin of thousands of families, dupes of this iniquitous scheme, soon followed in both countries. See Law's Bubble.

MISSISSIPPI, one of the United States. First settled by the French, at Natchez, and claimed as a part of Louisiana, 1716. Colony attacked by the Natchez Indians. Indians almost annihilated by the French in 1730. Ceded to Great Britain in 1763. Erected into a territory (including Alabama) in 1812. Admitted into the Union in 1817.

MISSOLOGHI, a town in Greece, heroically and successfully defended against the Turks by Marco Botzaris in 1822. It was taken in 1826 after a year's siege. Here Lord Byron died in 1824. It was surrendered to the Greeks in 1829.

MISSOURI, one of the United States. Was a part of the vast territory of Louisiana, and included in its purchase from the French in 1803. St. Louis, its capital, settled by the French in 1764. Only a sort of trading-post until 1804, when the territorial government was formed. Admitted into the Union in 1821. It decided on neutrality in the conflict of 1861, but was invaded by both the Confederate and Federal forces in June of that year, and became one of the seats of war. Capital, Jefferson City.

MISSOURI COMPROMISE. During the session of Congress in 1818-19, a bill was introduced into Congress which contained a provision forbidding the introduction of slavery or involuntary servitude into the new state of Missouri, when admitted. This brought out violent debates upon the subject of slavery. The whole country was greatly agitated by it. Finally a compromise was effected (Feb. 28, 1821) by an agreement that slavery should be allowed in Missouri, and in all territory west of it, south of 36° 30' N. latitude, and prohibited in all territory north of this line. This act was virtually repealed in 1854 by the act erecting the territories of Nebraska and Kansas into states.

MITHRIDATE, a physical preparation in the form of an electuary, supposed to be an antidote to poison and the oldest compound known, is said to have been invented by Mithridates, king of Pontus, about 70 B.C.

MITHRIDATIC WAR, caused by the massacre of 100,000 Romans by Mithridates, king of Pontus, 88 B.C., and remarkable for its duration, its many battles, the destruction of human life it occasioned, and the cruelties of its commanders. Mithridates having taken the consul Aquilius, made him ride on an ass through a great part of Asia, crying out as he rode, "I am Aquilius, consul of the Romans." He ultimately dispatched him by ordering melted gold to be poured down his throat, in derision of his aversion, 85 B.C. Mithridates was defeated by Pompey, 66 B.C., and committed suicide, 63 B.C.

MITRE. The cleft cap or mitre was worn by the Jewish high-priest, 1491 B.C. It had on it a golden plate inscribed "HOLINESS TO THE LORD."—Exodus xxxix., 28. The most ancient mitre that has the nearest resemblance to the present one is that upon the seal of the Bishop of Laon, in the 10th century.—Fosbrooke. Anciently the cardinals wore mitres, but at the Council of Lyons in 1245 they were directed to wear hats.

MNEMONICS, artificial memory, was introduced by Simonides the younger, 477 B.C.—Arund. Marbles. In modern times mnemonics have been elaborately treated; "Mnemonica" was published by John Willis in 1618; and the Memoria Technica of Dr. Grey first appeared in 1730. A system of mnemonics was announced in Germany in 1806-7.

MOBILE, Alabama. The city is situated at the southwest corner of the state, at the mouth of Mobile River, and with a harbor on the Gulf. After the capture of Vicksburg in 1863, an attack on this city was contemplated, but was given up, the Red River campaign being strongly urged by the United States government. Admiral Farragut attacked Forts Morgan and Gaines, August 5, 1864. On that day Fort Powell was blown up; on the 8th, Fort Gaines was surrendered, with its garrison, and Fort Morgan was occupied the south of Tierra del Fuego, having been starved to death, all his companions having previously perished, Sept. 6, 1851.—M. Schoffer, a missionary to Cochinchina, was publicly executed at Son-Tay, by order of the grand mandarin, for preaching Christianity, such preaching being prohibited by the law of that country, May 4, 1851.

on the 23d. After passing the forts on the 5th, Farragut captured the Confederate ram Tennessee. The result of this brief naval campaign was the possession of Mobile Bay by the national forces. After Hood's defeat at Nashville (December, 1864), military operations against Mobile were commenced. On the 25th of March, General Canby had the Thirteenth and Sixteenth Corps (under Gordon Granger and A. J. Smith) at Danley's, on Fish River, east of Mobile. The siege of Spanish Fort was commenced on the 27th. A week before this, General Steele, with an army which he had landed at Pensacola, marched northward against Montgomery, and, returning near the close of the month, joined the besieging army around Mobile. Spanish Fort was evacuated by the Confederates on the 8th of April, and occupied by the national troops. The next day Fort Blakely was assaulted and captured, and Mobile was evacuated (April 11-12). This was the last campaign of the Civil War. Dick Taylor surrendered on the 4th of May.

MOCKERN (Prussia). Here the French army under Eugène Beauharnois defeated the allied Russian and Prussian army with great loss, April, 1813; and here Blücher defeated the French, Oct. 16, 1813.

MODELS. The first were figures of living persons, and Dibutades, the Corinthian, is the reputed inventor of those in clay. His daughter, known by the appellation of the Corinthian Maid, being about to be separated from her lover, who was going on a distant journey, traced his profile by his shadow on the wall. Her father filled up the outline with clay, which he afterward baked, and thus produced a figure of the object of her affection, giving rise to an art till then unknown, about 985 B.C.*

MODENA (formerly Mutina), till lately capital of the duchy in Central Italy; was governed by the house of Este from 1288 till 1796, when the last male of that house, the reigning duke Hercules III., was expelled by the French. By the treaty of Campo Formio, the Modenese possessions were incorporated with the Cisalpine Republic, 1797. The Archduke Francis of Este, son of the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, and of Mary, the heiress of the last duke, was restored in 1814. Modena, in accordance with the voting by universal suffrage, was annexed to Sardinia on March 18, 1860. Population in 1857, 604,512.

RECENT GRAND-DUKES OF MODENA.

1814. Francis IV. An invasion of his states by Murat was defeated, April 11, 1815. He was expelled by his subjects in 1831, but was restored by the Austrians.

1846. Francis V. (born June 1, 1819) succeeds Jan 21. His subjects rose against him soon after the Italian War broke out, in April, 1859. He fled to Verona, establishing a regency, June 11, which was abolished June 13; Farini was appointed dictator July 27; a Constituent Assembly was immediately elected, which offered the duchy to the King of Sardinia, Sept. 15. He incorporated it with his dominions, March 18, 1860.

MOESIA (now Bosnia, Servia, and Bulgaria) was finally subdued by Augustus. It was successfully invaded by the Goths, 253 B.C., who eventually settled here. See Goths.

MOHAMMEDANISM as embodied in the Koran includes the unity of God, the immortality of the soul, predestination, a last judgment, and a sensual paradise. Mohammed asserted that the Koran was revealed to him by the angel Gabriel during a period of twenty-three years. He enjoined on his disciples circumcision, prayer, alms, frequent ablution, and fasting, and permitted polygamy and concubinage.

The Mohammedans are divided into several sects, the two chief being the Sunnites, or the Orthodox, who recognized as caliph Abubeker, the fa-

The Ottoman Empire is the chief seat of the Sunnites, the sultan being considered the representative of the caliphs; while Persia has been for centuries the strong-hold of the Shiites.

The Mohammedans conquered Arabia, North Africa, and part of Asia in the 7th century; in the 8th they invaded Europe, conquering Spain, where they founded the Caliphate of Cordova, which lasted from 756 to 1031, when it was broken up into smaller governments, the last of which, the kingdom of Granada, endured till its subjugation by Ferdinand in 1492; but the Mohammedans were not finally expelled from Spain till..... 1609

MOHATZ (Lower Hungary). Here Louis, king of Hungary, defeated by the Turks under Solymán II. with the loss of 22,000 men, was suffocated by the fall of his horse in a muddy brook, Aug. 29, 1526. Here, also, Prince Charles of Lorraine defeated the Turks, Aug. 12, 1687.

MOHILOW (in Russia). Here the Russian army, under Prince Bagration, was signally defeated by the French under Marshal Davoust, prince of Eckmühl, July 23, 1812.

MOHOOKS, ruffians, who went about London at night, wounding and disfiguring the men, and indecently exposing the women. One hundred pounds were offered by royal proclamation in 1712 for apprehending any one of them.—Northouck.

MOLDAVIA. See Danubian Principalities.

MOLINISTS, a Roman Catholic sect, followers of Louis Molina, a Jesuit, born 1535. He maintained the reconcilability of the doctrines of predestination and free-will.

MOLUCCAS, an archipelago in the Indian Ocean (the chief island, Amboyna), discovered by the Portuguese about 1511, and held by them secretly till the arrival of the Spaniards, who claimed them till 1629, when Charles V. yielded them to John III. for a large sum of money. The Dutch conquered them in 1607, and have held them ever since, except from 1810 to 1814, when they were subject to the English.

MOLWITZ (in Prussian Silesia). Here the Prussians, commanded by Frederick II., obtained a great victory over the Imperialists, April 10 (O.S. March 30), 1741.

MOLYBDENUM, a whitish, brittle, almost infusible metal. Scheele, in 1778, discovered molybdic acid in a mineral hitherto confounded with graphite. Hjelm, in 1782, prepared the metal from molybdic acid; and in 1825 Berzelius described most of its chemical characters.—Gmelin.

MONACHISM (from the Greek monos, alone). Catholic writers refer to the Prophet Elijah, and the Nazarenes, mentioned in Numbers, ch. vi., as early examples. The first Christian ascetics appear to be derived from the Jewish sect of the Essenes, whose life was very austere, practicing celibacy, etc. About the time of Constantine (306-22) numbers of these ascetics withdrew into the deserts, and were called hermits, monks, and anchorites,* of whom Paul, Anthony, and Pachomius were most celebrated. Simeon, the founder of the Stylite (or pillar saints), died 451. He is said to have lived on a pillar thirty years. St. Benedict, the great reformer of Western monachism, published his MONACO, a principality, N. Italy, held by the Genoese family Grimaldi since 968. By treaty on Feb. 2, 1861, the prince ceded the communes of Roquebrune and Mentone, the chief part of his dominions, to France, for 4,000,000 francs. The present prince, Charles III., born Dec. 8, 1818, succeeded June 20, 1856. Population about 1200.—A commercial convention between the prince and France, signed Nov. 9, 1865, was much discussed, as tending toward the abolition of the French navigation laws.

MONARCHY. Historians reckon four grand monarchies—the Assyrian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman (which see).

MONASTERIES. See Abbeys.

MONDOVI (Piedmont). Here the Sardinian army, commanded by Colli, was defeated by Napoleon Bonaparte, April 22, 1796.

MONEY is mentioned as a medium of commerce in Genesis xxiii., 1860 B.C., when Abraham purchased a field as a sepulchre for Sarah. The coinage of money is ascribed to the Lydians. Moneta was the name given to their silver by the Romans, it having been coined in the temple of Juno-Moneta, 269 B.C. Money was made of different metals, and even of leather and other articles, both in ancient and modern times. It was made of pasteboard by the Hollanders so late as 1574. See Coin; Gold; Silver; Copper; Mint; Banks, etc. For Money Orders, see Post-office.

MONEYERS are mentioned in Alfred's "Domesday-Book." They traveled with our early kings, and coined money as required.

MONMOUTH, BATTLE OF. Sir Henry Clinton, at the head of the British army, left Philadelphia for New York on the 18th of June, 1778, with 11,000 men, and an immense baggage and provision train. Washington pursued him, harassed him much in New Jersey, and engaged in battle with him near Monmouth Court-house on the 28th of June, 1778. The battle lasted all day. It was exceedingly sultry weather, and more than 50 American soldiers died of exhaustion. Night closed the conflict. Both armies slept upon their arms until toward midnight, when Clinton, with his whole force, stole off in the dark, to avoid another engagement in the morning, and escaped, leaving a large number of the sick and wounded behind. The Americans lost 228 of their men; less than 70 were killed. The British left about 300 dead on the field.

MONMOUTH'S REBELLION. James, duke of Monmouth (born at Rotterdam, April 9, 1649), a natural son of Charles II. by Lucy Waters, was banished England for his connection with the Rye-house plot in 1683. He invaded England at Lyme, June 11, 1685; was proclaimed king at Taunton, June 20; was defeated at Sedgemoor, near Bridgewater, July 6; and beheaded on Tower Hill, July 15.

MONOLITH, Greek for single stone. See Obelisk.

MONOPHYSITES. See Eutychians.

MONOPOLIES reached to such a height in England that Parliament petitioned against them, and many were abolished, about 1601-2. They were farther suppressed by 21 Jas. I., 1624. In 1650 Charles I. established monopolies of soap, salt, leather, and other common things, to supply a revenue without the help of Parliament. It was decreed that none should be in future created by royal patent, 16 Chas. I., 1640.

MONOTHELITES, heretics who affirmed that Jesus Christ had but one will, were favored by the Emperor Heraclius, 630; they merged into the Eutychians (which see).

MONROE DOCTRINE, a term applied to the determination expressed by James Monroe, president of the United States, 1817-24, not to permit any European power to interfere in restraining the progress of liberty in North or South America by exercising sovereignty on this continent. This doctrine has been frequently reaffirmed as a settled political tenet of the people and government of the United States.

MONSTER, THE. Renwick Williams, who prowled nightly through the streets of London, secretly armed with a double-edged knife, with which he shockingly wounded many females. He was tried and convicted, July 8, 1790. See Mohocks.

MONTALEMBERT'S TRIAL. See France, 1858.

MONTANISTS, followers of Montanus, of Ardaba, in Mysia, about 171, who was reputed to have the gift of prophecy, and proclaimed himself the Comforter promised by Christ. He condemned second marriages as fornication, permitted the dissolution of marriage, forbade the avoiding martyrdom, and ordered a severe fast of three lent; he hanged himself with Maximilla, one of his women-scholars, before the close of the 3d century.—Care. The eloquent father Tertullian joined the sect, 204.

MONT BLANC, in the Swiss Alps, is the highest mountain in Europe, being 15,731 feet above the level of the sea. The summit was first reached by Saussure, aided by a guide named Balma, on Aug. 2, 1787. The summit was attained by Dr. Hamel (when three of his guides perished) in 1820, and by many other persons before and since. Accounts of the ascents of Mr. John Aldjo, Charles Fellows (1827), and of Professor Tyndall (1857-8) have been published. See Alps.

MONTABELLO, a village in Piedmont, where Lannes defeated the Austrians, June 9, 1800, and acquired his title of Duke of Montebello; and where (May 20, 1859), after a contest of six hours, the French and Sardinians defeated the Austrians, who lost about 1000 killed and wounded, and 200 prisoners. The French lost about 670 men, including General Benet.

MONTENOTTE, a village in Piedmont, memorable as being the site of the first victory gained over the Austrians by Napoleon Bonaparte, April 12, 1796.

MONTEREAU (near Paris). Here the allied armies were defeated by the French, commanded by Napoleon, with great loss in killed and wounded; but it was one of his last triumphs, Feb. 18, 1814.—On the bridge of Montereau, at his meeting with the dauphin, John the Fearless, duke of Burgundy, was killed by Tanneguy de Chatel in 1419. This event led to Henry V. subduing France, the young Duke Philip joining the English.

MONTEREY, BATTLE OF. General Taylor crossed the Rio Grande and took possession of Matamoras on the 13th of May, 1846. There he remained until the close of August, and then marched toward Monterey, in the interior. More than 6000 Americans encamped near that city on the 9th of September. It was defended by over 9000 Mexican troops, under General Ampudia. Taylor commenced a siege of the town on the 21st, and on the 24th it was surrendered, with the entire garrison that survived. The Americans lost in killed, wounded, and missing, 561; the Mexicans over 1000, besides the prisoners.

MONTE VIDEO (S. America) was taken by storm by the British forces under Sir Samuel Auchmuty, but with the loss of nearly one third of his brave troops, Feb. 3, 1807. It was evacuated July 7 the same year, in consequence of the severe repulse the British met with at Buenos Ayres. See Buenos Ayres. Monte Video, a subject of dispute between Brazil and Buenos Ayres, was given up to Uruguay, 1828. See Brazil for recent war.

MONTFERRAT (Lombardy), HOUSE OF, celebrated in the history of the Crusades, began with Alderan, who was made Marquis of Montferrat by Otho about 967. Conrad of Montferrat became Lord of Tyre, and reigned from 1187 till 1191, when he was assassinated. William IV. died in a cage at Alexandria, having been thus imprisoned nineteen months, 1292. Violante, daughter of John II., married Andronicus Palæologus, emperor of the East. Their descendants ruled in Italy amid perpetual contests till 1533, when John George Palæologus died without issue. His estates passed after much contention to Frederick II. Gonzaga, marquis of Mantua, in 1536.

MONTGOMERY, capital of Alabama, United States, founded 1817. Here the State Convention passed the ordinance of secession from the Union on Jan. 11, 1861; here the Confederate Congress met on Feb. 4, and elected Jefferson Davis president, and Alexander H. Stephens vice-president of the Confederate States of North America; and here they were inaugurated on Feb. 18. On May 21, the Congress adjourned to meet on July 20 at Richmond, in Virginia, that state having joined the Confederates and become the seat of war.

MONTI DI PIETÀ, charitable institutions for advancing money on pledges, were first established at Perugia, Florence, Mantua, and other Italian cities, 1462 et seq. The Franciscans, in 1493, first began to receive interest, which was permitted by the pope in 1515. Monts de Piété were not established in France till 1777. They were suppressed by the Revolution, but restored, 1804; regulated by law, 1851-2. See Pawnbroking.

MONTIEL (Spain), BATTLE OF, March 14 (or 23) 1369, between Peter the Cruel, king of Castile, and his brother Henry of Trastamare, aided by the French warrior, Bertrand du Guesclin. Peter was totally defeated, and afterward treacherously slain.

MONTREAL, BATTLE NEAR, on the 25th of September, 1775, between a small party of 80 Americans under Colonel Ethan Allen, who had crossed the St. Lawrence to join Colonel John Brown in an attack upon the city, and some troops sent out by Colonel Prescott, the commandant of the garrison. Allen was defeated, made prisoner, and, with some of his men, was sent in chains to England.

MONTSERAT, a West India Island, discovered by Columbus in 1493, and settled by the British in 1632. It has several times been taken by the French, but was secured to the British in 1783.

MONUMENT OF LONDON, built by Sir Christopher Wren, 1671-7. The pedestal is forty feet high, and the edifice altogether 202 feet, that being the distance of its base from the spot where the fire which it commemorates commenced. It is the loftiest isolated column in the world. Its erection cost about £14,500. The staircase is of black marble, consisting of 345 steps.* Of the four original inscriptions, three were Latin, and the following in English—Cut in 1681, obliterated by James II.; re-cut in the reign of William III.; and finally erased by order of the Common Council, Jan. 26, 1831.*

MOODKE (India). Here, on Dec. 18, 1845, the Sikhs attacked the advanced guard of the British, and were repulsed three miles, losing many men and fifteen pieces of cannon. Sir Robert Sale was mortally wounded. Lady Sale signalized herself during the two memorable retreats from Afghanistan. The battle followed that of Ferozeshah (which see).

MOOLTAN (India). Here Moolraj Singh, ruler of the Sikhs, murdered Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, April 21, 1848. This led to a siege. A conflict took place between the British and the Sikhs, in which the latter was driven to the town of Mooltan with great loss, Nov. 7, 1848. It was taken after a protracted bombardment, Jan. 2-22, 1849.

MOON. Opacity of the moon, and the true causes of lunar eclipses, taught by Thales, 640 B.C. Hipparchus made observations on the moon at Rhodes, 127 B.C. Posidonius accounted for the tides from the motion of the moon, 79 B.C.—Diog. Laert. Maps of the moon have been constructed by Hevelius (1647), Cassini (1680), and others. Beer and Mädler's map was published in 1834. In 1862 Professor John Phillips invited the British Association to make arrangements to obtain a "systematic representation of the physical aspect of the moon." Photographs of the moon were taken and exhibited by Mr. Warren de la Rue in 1857. Hansen's "Tables of the Moon," calculated at the expense of the British and Danish governments, were published at the cost of the latter in 1857. See Eclipse.

MOORE'S CREEK BRIDGE, in North Carolina. Some Tory Scotch Highlanders, living at Fayetteville and vicinity, took up arms, and went out in search of the Republican troops that were collecting in that vicinity. They met at Moore's Creek Bridge, on the 27th of February, 1776, and had a severe engagement. The Highlanders were led by Donald McDonald; the Americans by Colonels Caswell and Lillington. The Scotch were 1500 strong; the Americans numbered about 1000. The Loyalists were defeated. They lost 70 men in killed and wounded; the Americans lost none. They had only two wounded.

MOORS, formerly the natives of Mauritania (which see), but afterward the name given to the Numidians and others, and now applied to the natives of Morocco and the neighborhood. They assisted Genseric and the Vandals in their invasion of Africa, 429, and frequently rebelled against the Roman emperors. They resisted for a time the progress of the Arab Mohammedans, but were overcome by them in 707; and in 1019 introduced into Spain to support the Arabs, where their arms were long victorious. In 1063 they were defeated in Sicily by Roger Guiscard. The Moorish kingdom of Granada was set up in 1237, and lasted till 1492, when it fell before Ferdinand V. of Castile, mainly owing to internal discord. The expulsion of the Moors from Spain was decreed, but not fully carried into effect till 1609, when the bigotry of Philip III. inflicted this great injury to his country. About 1518 the Moors established the piratical states of Algiers and Tunis (which see). In the history of Spain, the Arabs and Moors must not be confounded.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY, defined as the knowledge of our duty, the science of ethics, the art of being virtuous and happy. Socrates (about 430 B.C.) is regarded as the father of ancient, and Grotius (about 1623) of modern moral philosophy. See Philosophy.

MORAT (Switzerland), where Charles the Bold of Burgundy was completely defeated by the Swiss, June 22, 1476. A monument, constructed of the bones of

A man named Thomas Craddock, a baker, precipitated himself from its summit, July 7, 1780. Mr. Lyon Levy, a Jewish diamond merchant, of considerable respectability, threw himself from it, Jan. 18, 1810, as did more recently three other persons; in consequence of which, a fence was placed round the railings of the gallery in 1839.

the vanquished, was destroyed by the French in 1798, who erected a stone column in its place.

MORAVIA, an Austrian province, occupied by the Slavonians about 548, and conquered by the Avars and Bohemians, who submitted to Charlemagne. About 1000 it was subdued by Boleslas of Poland, but recovered by Ulric of Bohemia in 1030. After various changes, Moravia and Bohemia were amalgamated into the Austrian dominions in 1526.

MORAVIANS, UNITED BRETHREN, said to have been part of the Hussites who withdrew into Moravia in the 15th century, while the Brethren say that their sect was derived from the Greek Church in the 9th century. In 1722 they formed a settlement (called Herrnhut, the watch of the Lord) on the estate of Count Zinzendorf. Their Church consisted of 500 persons in 1727. They were introduced into England by Count Zinzendorf about 1737; he died at Chelsea in June, 1760. In 1851 they had thirty-two chapels in England. They settled at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, in 1746, and immediately begun successful missions among the Indians. They are, indeed, the pioneers of the great missionary movements of this time. In 1850 they had 331 churches in the United States, with a total value of church property estimated at $443,347, and church accommodations for 112,133 persons.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGES. When the left hand is given instead of the right, between a man of superior and a woman of inferior rank, in which it is stipulated that the latter and her children shall not enjoy the rank or inherit the possessions of the former. The children are legitimate. Such marriages are frequently contracted in Germany by royalty and the higher nobility. George I. of England was thus married; and later, the King of Denmark to the Countess of Danner, Aug. 7, 1850.

MORGARTEN (Switzerland), BATTLE OF. Here 1300 Swiss engaged 20,000 Austrians, commanded by the Duke Leopold, whom they completely defeated, Nov. 16, 1515, upon the heights of Morgarten, overlooking the defile through which the enemy was to enter their territory from Zug.

MORICE DANCE, an ancient dance peculiar to some of the country parts of England, and, it is said, also to Scotland: it was performed before James I. in Herefordshire.

MORMONS (calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ, or LATTER-DAY SAINTS). This sect derives its origin from Joseph Smith, an illiterate religious enthusiast, who assumed to be a prophet sent from God, and the receptacle of direct divine revelations. He was living at Palmyra, in New York, when, at the age of 18 years, he announced that he had been visited by the angel Moroni, who told him of a hidden book written on plates of gold, which contained a record of the lost tribes of Israel, and directions for the promulgation of the true Gospel concerning the millennial era. In 1827 he announced that he had found the book—the book of Mormon. Then he had pretended special revelations, by which he procured money and secured followers. The book was translated and published in 1830, under the title of The Book of Mormon. This was afterward proved to have been based upon a sort of religious romance, written in Scripture style, about the year 1813, by an invalid clergyman named Solomon Spaulding, whose manuscript, by some means, fell into the hands of Smith and his confederates.

The Mormon Church was formally established at Manchester, Ontario County, New York, on the 6th of April, 1830. At a conference in June, Smith found himself at the head of a visible church of 30 men and women. This was the "grain of mustard-seed" now grown to a vast shrub. Under the auspices of Sidney Rigdon and others, preparations were made to plant the new church in the Western wilderness. They first settled at Kirtland, Ohio, where, in 1831, they numbered more than 1000. That place was made a "stake," but they chose a place in Missouri for their Zion—the New Jerusalem. Their conduct excited the opposition of the Missourians, as well as those of Ohio, and the "Saints" were greatly persecuted. They were driven out of Missouri. Schisms and quarrels arose among themselves, and for a while "the church was peeled." The Mormons, in 1837, settled in Illinois, on the Mississippi River, where they built a temple in 1841, and named the place Nauvoo—(beautiful city). In 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother Hiram, while in prison on a charge of treason, were murdered by a mob, and Brigham Young was chosen "seer." Harassed by the exasperated people in that vicinity, they resolved to abandon Nauvoo, and flee to the interior of the continent. After an exodus equaled only by the great one of the Israelites out of Egypt, the Mormons entered the Great Salt Lake Valley, full 1000 miles from the Mississippi, in the Territory of Utah, in July, 1847, and there they built a city near the Great Salt Lake. The United States government surveyed that valley in 1849. In the spring of that year the Mormons held a convention, and organized a state which they called Deseret. The United States government erected it into a territory, and appointed Brigham Young governor, which office he still holds (1869). The population in 1851 was 11,354. Polygamy is not only allowed, but practiced and enjoined. Their municipal government is hierarchal. Brigham Young is their spiritual head. They send missionaries to all parts of the world, and converts are continually making their way to the Great Salt Lake. They have applied for admission into the Union as a sovereign state, but their social system is a bar to their recognition. The United States government has had much trouble with them, for, under the direction of Young, they have been very insubordinate. They are represented as a most licentious community. The women are degraded by the system of polygamy, and thousands of the members would escape if they could. Early in 1860 a new movement among them took place. A son of the founder, Joseph Smith, has assumed the prophetic mantle of his father. He is opposed to polygamy, and has expressed his determination to reform the Mormon Church. He has the sympathies of a greater portion of the people. It is supposed that the Mormons, at home and abroad, now number about 200,000 souls.

MOROCCO, an empire in North Africa, formerly Mauritania (which see). In 1051 it was subdued for the Fatimite caliphs by the Almoravides, who eventually extended their dominion into Spain. These were succeeded by the Almohades (1121), the Merinides (1270), and in 1516 by the Sherifs, pretended descendants of Mohammed, the now reigning dynasty. See Tangiers. The Moors have had frequent wars with the Spaniards and Portuguese, due to piracy.

MORTAR, a short gun with a large bore and close chamber, used for throwing bombs; said to have been used at Naples in 1435, and first made in England in 1543. The mortar left by Sout in Spain was fixed in St. James's Park in Aug., 1816. On Oct. 19, 1857, a colossal mortar, constructed by Mr. Robert Mallet, was tried at Woolwich; with a charge of 70 lbs. it threw a shell weighing 2550 lbs. $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile horizontally, and about $\frac{3}{4}$ mile in height.

MORTIMER'S CROSS (Herefordshire). The Earl of Pembroke and the Lancastrians were severely defeated by the young Duke of York, afterward Edward IV., Feb. 2, 1461. He assumed the throne as Edward IV. in March following.

MORTMAIN ACT (mort main, dead hand). When the survey of all the land in England was made by William I., 1085-6, the whole was found to amount to 62,215 knights' fees, of which the Church then possessed 28,015, to which additions were afterward made till the 7th of Edward I., 1279, when the statute of mortmain was passed, from a fear that the estates of the Church might grow too bulky. By this act it was made unlawful to give any estates to the Church without the king's leave; and this act, by a supplemental provision, was made to reach all lay fraternities or corporations in the 15th of Richard II., 1391. Mortmain is such a state of possession as makes it inalienable, whence it is said to be in a dead hand. Several statutes have been passed on this subject; legacies by mortmain were especially restricted by the 10th George II., 1736.

MOSAIC WORK (the Roman opus tessellatum) is of Asiatic origin, and is probably referred to in Esther, ch. v., 6, about 619 B.C. It had attained to great excellence in Greece in the time of Alexander and his successors, when Sosos of Pergamus, the most renowned Mosaic artist of antiquity, flourished. He acquired great fame by his accurate representation of an "unswept floor after a feast." The Romans also excelled in Mosaic work, as evidenced by the innumerable specimens preserved. Byzantine Mosaics date from the 4th century after Christ. The art was revived in Italy by Tañ, Gaddi, Cimabue, and Giotto, who designed Mosaics, and introduced a higher style in the 13th century. In the 16th century, Titian and Veronese also designed subjects for this art. The practice of copying paintings in Mosaics came into vogue in the 17th century; and there is now a workshop in the Vatican where chemical science is employed in the production of colors, and where 20,000 different tints are kept. In 1861, Dr. Salviati, of Venice, had established his manufacture of "Enamel-mosaics," and in July, 1864, he fixed a large Enamel-mosaic picture in one of the spandrels under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. He has since executed commissions for the queen and other persons.

MOSCOW, the ancient capital of Russia, was founded, it is said, by Dolgorouki, about 1147. The occupation of the south of Russia by the Mongols in 1235 led to Moscow becoming the capital, and beginning with Jaroslav II., 1238, its princes became the reigning dynasty. Moscow has been frequently taken in war: it was plundered by Timour in 1382; by the Tartars in 1451 and 1477; and by Ladislas of Poland in 1611. The massacre of Demetrius and his Polish adherents on May 27, 1606, is termed the "Matins of Moscow." This city was entered by Napoleon I. and the French, Sept. 14, 1812, and the Russian governor, Rostopchin, ordered that it should be set on fire in 500 places at once. In this memorable conflagration, 11,840 houses were burnt to the ground, besides palaces and churches. The French, thus deprived of quarters, evacuated Moscow, Oct. 19, and it was re-entered by the Russians Oct. 22 following. Since then, Moscow has been rebuilt with great splendor. Although St. Petersburg (built in 1703) has become the capital, yet Moscow is the more beloved by the Russians, who regard it as a holy city. The railway to St. Petersburg was opened in 1851. An industrial exhibition held at Moscow closed July 16, 1856.

MOSKWA, or BORODINO, BATTLE OF. See Borodino.

MOSQUITO COAST (Central America). The Indians inhabiting this coast were long under the protection of the British, who held Belize and a group of islands in the Bay of Honduras. The jealousy of the United States long existed on this subject. In April, 1850, the two governments covenanted not "to occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise any dominion over any part of Central America." In 1855 the United States charged the British government with an infraction of the treaty, on which the latter agreed to cede the disputed territory to the republic of Honduras, with some reservation.* The matter was finally settled in Feb., 1857.

MOSS-TROOPERS, desperate plunderers and lawless soldiers, secreting themselves in the mosses on the borders of Scotland. They were finally extirpated in 1609.

MOTTOES, ROYAL. Dieu et mon Droit, first used by Richard I., 1198. Ich dien, "I serve," adopted by Edward the Black Prince, at the battle of Cressy, 1346. Honi soit qui mal y pense, the motto of the Garter, 1349. Je maintiendrai, "I will maintain," adopted by William III., to which he added, in 1688, "the liberties of England and the Protestant religion." Semper eadem was assumed by Queen Elizabeth, 1558, and adopted by Queen Anne, 1702. E PLURIBUS UNUM, many in one, was adopted for the great seal of the United States in 1782. See them severally.

MOURNING FOR THE DEAD. The Israelites neither washed nor anointed themselves during the time of mourning, which for a friend lasted seven days; upon extraordinary occasions a month. The Greeks and Romans fasted. The ordinary color for mourning in Europe is black; in China, white; in Turkey, violet; in Ethiopia, brown; it was white in Spain until 1498. —Herrera. Anne of Brittany, the queen of two successive kings of France, mourned in black, instead of the then practice of wearing white, on the death of her first husband, Charles VIII., April 7, 1498. —Hénault.

MOUSQUETAIRES, or MUSKETEERS, horse-soldiers under the old French régime, raised by Louis XIII., 1622. This corps was considered a military school for the French nobility. It was disbanded in 1646, but was restored in 1657. A second company was created in 1660, and formed Cardinal Mazarine's guard. —Hénault.

MUGGLETONIANS, so called from Ludowic Muggleton, a tailor, known about 1641, and prominent about 1656. He and John Reeve affirmed that God the Father, leaving the government of heaven to Elias, came down and suffered death in a human form. They asserted that they were the two last witnesses of God which should appear before the end of the world. Rev. xi., 3. A sect of this name still exists.

MÜHLBERG, on the Elbe, Prussia. Here the German Protestants were defeated by the Emperor Charles V., April 24, 1547.

MÜHLDOERF (Bavaria). Near this place Frederick, duke of Austria, was defeated and taken prisoner by Louis of Bavaria, Sept. 28, 1322.

MULBERRY-TREES. The first planted in England are in the gardens of Sion House. Shakspeare planted a mulberry-tree with his own hands at Stratford-upon-Avon, and Garrick, Macklin, and others were entertained under it in 1742. Shakspeare's house was afterward sold to a clergyman of the name of Gastrel, who cut down the mulberry-tree for fuel, 1765; but a silversmith purchased the whole, and manufactured it into memorials.

MULE, a spinning machine invented in 1779 by Samuel Crompton, born at Bolton, Lancashire, in 1753; named, from Crompton's residence, Hall-in-the-wood-wheel; muslin-wheel, from its giving birth to the British muslin and cambric manufacture; and mule, from its combining the advantages of Hargreaves's spinning jenny and Arkwright's adaptation. It is stated that Crompton at the time knew nothing of the latter. He did not patent his invention, but gave it up in 1780. It produced yarn treble the fineness and very much softer than any ever before produced in England. Parliament voted him £5000 in 1812, now considered a most inadequate compensation. Mr. Roberts invented the self-acting mule in 1825.

MULHOUSE, or MULHAUSEN (N.E. France), an imperial city under Rodolph of Hapsburg; joined the Swiss Confederation in 1515, and annexed to France in 1798.

MUMMIES (from the Arabic mum, wax). See Embalming. The mummies in the British Museum, with other Egyptian antiquities, were placed there about 1803. Mr. Alex. Gordon in 1737 published an essay on three Egyptian mummies, one of which was brought to England in 1722 by Capt. Wm. Lethieullier; two others came in 1734, one of which was retained by Dr. Mead, the other was given to the College of Physicians. In 1834, Mr. T. J. Pettigrew published a "History of Egyptian Mummies."

* St. Juan del Norte (Greytown) was held by the British on behalf of the Mosquitoes till the American adventurers, under Col. Kinney, took possession of it in Sept., 1855. He joined Walker; and on Feb.

10, 1856, their associate Rivas, the president, claimed and annexed the Mosquito territory to Nicaragua.

MUNICH, the beautiful capital of Bavaria, was founded, it is said, 962. It was taken by Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in 1632; by the Austrians in 1704, 1741, and 1743; and by the French under Moreau, July 2, 1800. It abounds in schools, institutions, and manufactories. The University was founded by King Louis in 1826.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, etc. See Corporations.

MÜNSTER (Westphalia). The bishopric, said to have been founded by Charlemagne, 750, was secularized in 1802, and ceded to Prussia in 1815. The Anabaptists, under John of Leyden, the king of Münster, held the city in 1534 and 1536. Here was signed the treaty of Westphalia (which see) or Münster, Oct. 24, 1648.—MUNSTER, the southern province of Ireland. In 1508 a commission was issued for its government by a president and council, and new colonies were founded in 1588.

MURCIA, a province, N.E. Spain, was subdued by the Moors, 713; by Ferdinand of Castile and Aragon, 1305.

MURDER, the highest offense against the law of God (Genesis ix., 6, 2345 B.C.). A court of Ephetae was established by Demophoon of Athens for the trial of murder, 1179 B.C. The Persians did not punish the first offense. In England, during a period of the Heph-tarchy, murder was punished by fines only. So late as Henry VIII.'s time the crime was compounded for in Wales. Murderers were allowed benefit of clergy in 1503. Aggravated murder, or petit treason (a distinction now abolished), happened in three ways: by a servant killing his master; a wife her husband; and an ecclesiastical person his superior, stat. 25 Edw. III., 1350. The enactments relating to this crime are very numerous, and its willful commission has been rarely pardoned by English kings. The act whereby the murderer should be executed on the day next but one after his conviction was repealed 1836. See Executions and Trials.

MURIATIC ACID. See Alkali.

MUSEUM, originally a quarter of the palace of Alexandria, like the Prytaneum of Athens, where eminent learned men were maintained by the public. The foundation is attributed to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who here placed his library about 284 B.C. Besides the British Museum and Sloane's Museum (which see), there are very many others in London.

MUSIC. "Jubal, the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ" (3875 B.C., Gen. iii., 21). Lucetius ascribes its invention to the whistling of the winds in hollow reeds; Fracincinus to the various sounds produced by the hammers of Tubal-Cain; Camoleon Pontique and others to the singing of birds; and Zarlino to the sound of water dropping, etc. The flute, and harmony, or concord in music, are said to have been invented by Hyagnis, 1506.—Arund. Marbles. Vocal choruses of men are first mentioned 556 B.C.—Dufresnoy.

MUSIC IN ENGLAND. Before the Reformation there was but one kind of music in Europe worth notice, namely, the sacred chant, and the descant built upon it. This music, moreover, was applied to one language only, the Latin.—Ashe. The original English music from the period of the Saxons to that era in which our countrymen imbibed the art, and copied the manner of the Italians, was of a character which neither pleased the soul nor charmed the ear. But as all the arts appear to have been the companions of successful commerce, our music soon improved, our taste was chastened, and sweet sounds formed an indispensable part of polite education. Prior to 1600, the chief music was masses and madrigals, but dramatic music was much cultivated from that time. About the end of James I.'s reign, a music professorship was founded in the University of Oxford by Dr. Wm. Hychin; and the year 1710 was distinguished by the arrival in England of George Frederick Handel. Mozart came to England in 1763; Joseph Haydn in 1791; and Carl Maria von Weber in 1825. The study of music has been greatly promoted in this country since 1840 by the labors of John Hullah. The Tonic sol-fa system, in which at first the letters d, r, m, f, s, l, t (for do, re, mi, fa, so, la, ti or si) are used instead of notes, was invented by Miss Glover, of Norwich, and improved by John Curwen about 1847. It has been successfully employed in schools.

MUSICAL NOTES, etc.—The first six are said to have been invented by Guy Aretino, a Benedictine monk of Arezzo, about 1025.—Blair. The notes at present used were perfected in 1338. Counterpoint was brought to perfection by Palestrina about 1555. Gafforio of Lodi read lectures on musical composition in the 15th century, and they effected great improvement in the science. The Italian style of composition was introduced into these countries about 1616. The Musical Pitch was settled in France in 1800. The middle C to be 522 vibrations in a second. At a meeting on the subject, held at the Society of Arts in Nov. 23, 1860, the concert pitch of C was recommended to be 528 vibrations in a second. Mr. Hullah adopted 512 vibrations.

MUSICAL FESTIVALS IN ENGLAND.—Dr. Byssie, chancellor of Hereford, proposed to the members of the choir a collection at the cathedral door after morning service, when forty guineas were collected and appropriated to charitable purposes. It was then agreed to hold festivals at Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, in rotation annually. Until the year 1753, the festival lasted only two days; it was then extended at Hereford to three evenings; and at Gloucester, in 1757, to three mornings, for the purpose of introducing Handel's "Messiah," which was warmly received, and has been performed annually ever since. Musical festivals on a great scale are now annually held at various cathedrals in England. See Handel and Crystal Palace.

MUSICAL INSTITUTIONS.—The Ancient Academy of Music was instituted in 1710. It originated with numerous eminent performers and gentlemen wishing to promote the study of vocal harmony.

The Madrigal Society was established in 1741, and other musical societies followed.

The Royal Society of Music arose from the principal nobility and gentry uniting to promote the performance of operas composed by Handel, 1758.

The Philharmonic Concerts began in 1813.

The Royal Acad. of Music established 1822 (which see).

The Musical Society of London established 1858.

The "Popular Monday Concerts" at St. James's Hall began with a "Mendelssohn night" on Feb. 14, 1859.

The London Academy of Music founded in 1860.

The centenary of the "Noblemen's Catch Club" was kept in July, 1861.

The Cecilian Society, London, founded about 1785; ceased in 1862.

The "Musical Education Committee" of the Society of Arts, London, with the Prince of Wales as chairman, held its first meeting May 22, 1865.

MUSKETS. See Fire-arms.

MUSLIN, a fine cotton cloth, so called, it is said, as not being bare, but having a downy nap on its surface, resembling moss, which the French call mousse. According to others, it was first brought from Moussol,

* He had eleven sons, four of them distinguished musicians.

* Pythagoras (about 555 B.C.) maintained that the motions of the twelve spheres must produce delightful sounds, inaudible to mortal ears, which he called "the music of the spheres." St. Cecilia, a Roman lady, is said to have excelled so eminently in music, that an angel was enticed from the celestial regions by the fascinating charms of her melody, and this hyperbolic tradition has been deemed sufficient authority to make her the patroness of music and musicians. She died in the 3d century.

in India, whence the name. Muslins were first worn in England in 1670.—Anderson. By means of the Mute (which see), British have superseded India muslins.

MUTE. A prisoner is said to stand mute when, being arraigned for treason or felony, he either makes no answer, or answers foreign to the purpose. Anciently, a mute was subjected to torture. By 12 Geo. III., 1772, judgment was awarded against mutes as if they were convicted or had confessed. A man refusing to plead was condemned and executed at the Old Bailey on a charge of murder, 1778, and another on a charge of burglary at Wells, 1792. An act was passed in 1827, by which the court is directed to enter a plea of "not guilty" when the prisoner will not plead.*

MUTINIES, BRITISH. The mutiny throughout the fleet at Portsmouth for an advance of wages, April, 1797. It subsided on a promise from the Admiralty, which, not being quickly fulfilled, occasioned a second mutiny on board the London man-of-war; Admiral Colpoys and his captain were put into confinement for ordering the marines to fire, whereby some lives were lost. The mutiny subsided May 10, 1797, when an act was passed to raise the wages, and the king pardoned the mutineers. A more considerable one at the Nore, which blocked up the trade of the Thames, broke out on May 27, 1797, and subsided June 13, 1797, when the principal mutineers were put in irons, and several executed (including the ringleader, nicknamed Rear-admiral Richard Parker), June 30, at Sheerness. Mutiny of the Danaë frigate: the crew carried the ship into Brest Harbor, March 27, 1800. Mutiny on board Admiral Mitchell's fleet at Bantry Bay, Dec., 1801, and January following (see Bantry Bay). Mutiny at Malta, began April 4, 1807, and ended on the 12th, when the mutineers blew themselves up by setting fire to a large magazine, consisting of between 400 and 500 barrels of gunpowder. The most remarkable mutiny of the United States was in the American naval service, on board the brig Somers, Commander A. S. M'Kenzie, when Midshipman Spencer and two seamen were hanged at the yard-arm. There was a mutiny of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey troops of the Continental Army in 1781; it was fairly justified. The British commander, Sir Henry Clinton, sent emissaries to bring the mutineers to the royal cause. The latter gave these agents up to the American officers, and refused rewards, when offered, for their protection. These emissaries were hanged. See Madras, 1806, and India, 1857.

MUTINY. A statute for the discipline, regulation, and payment of the army, etc., was passed in 1689, and has since been re-enacted annually.

MUTINY OF THE BOUNTY, April 28, 1789. For particulars, see Bounty.

MYCALE (Ionia, Asia Minor), BATTLE OF, fought between the Greeks (under Leotychides, the king of Sparta, and Xanthippus the Athenian) and the Persians, Sept. 22, 479 B.C., being the day on which Marathonius was defeated and slain at Platea by Pausanias.

The Persians (about 100,000 men), who had just returned from the unsuccessful expedition of Xerxes in Greece, were completely defeated, thousands of them slaughtered, and their camp burnt. The Greeks sailed back to Samos with an immense booty.

MYCENÆ, a division of the kingdom of the Argives, in the Peloponnesus. It stood about fifty stadia from Argos, and flourished till the invasion of the Heracleidae.

Perseus removes from Argos, and founds Mycenæ, MYLÆ, a bay of Sicily, where the Romans, under their Consul Duilius, gained their first naval victory over the Carthaginians, and took fifty of their ships, 260 B.C. Here also Agrippa defeated the fleet of Sextus Pompeius, 36 B.C.

MYSORE (S. India) was made a flourishing kingdom by Hyder Ali in 1761, and by his son, Tippee Sahib, who considerably harassed the English. Tippee was chastised by them in 1792, and on May 4, 1799, his capital, Seringapatam, was taken by assault, and himself slain. The English now hold the country.

MYSTERIES. "Mystery" is said to be derived from the Hebrew mistar, to hide. The Sacred mysteries is a term applied to the doctrines of Christianity, the chief of which is the incarnation of Christ, called the "mystery of godliness," 1 Tim. iii., 16. The Pro-fane mysteries were the secret ceremonies performed by a select few in honor of some deity. From the Egyptian mysteries of Isis and Osiris sprang those of Bacchus and Ceres among the Greeks. The Eleusinian mysteries were introduced at Athens by Eumolpus, 1356 B.C.—MYSTERY PLAYS. See Drama.

MYTHOLOGY (Greek mythos, fable), the traditions respecting the gods of any people. Thoth is supposed to have introduced mythology among the Egyptians, 1521 B.C.; and Cadmus the worship of the Egyptian and Phœnician deities among the Greeks, 1493 B.C.

N.

NAAS (E. Ireland), an ancient town. Here a desperate engagement took place between a body of the king's forces and the insurgent Irish during the rebellion of 1798. The latter were defeated with the loss of 300 killed and many wounded, May 24, 1798.

NABONASSAR, ERA OF, received its name from the celebrated Prince of Babylon, under whose reign astronomical studies were much advanced in Chaldæa. The years are vague, containing 365 days each, without intercalation. The first day of the era was Wednesday (said, in mistake, to be Thursday in L'Art de Vérifier les Dates), Feb. 26, 747 B.C.—3967, Julian period. To find the Julian year on which the year of Nabonassar begins, subtract the year, if before Christ, from 748; if after Christ, add to it 747.

NAHUM, FESTIVAL OF. Nahum, the seventh of the twelve minor prophets, about 713 B.C.; the festival is the 24th of December.

* Walter Calverly, of Calverly, in Yorkshire, Esq., having murdered two of his children, and stabbed his wife in a fit of jealousy, being arraigned for his crime at York assizes, stood mute, and was thereupon pressed to death in the castle, a large iron weight being placed upon his breast, Aug. 5, 1695.—Ston's Chron. Major Strangeway suffered death in a similar manner at Newgate in 1657 for the murder of his brother-in-law, Mr. Fussell.

NAJARA or NAVARETE (N. Spain). Here Edward the Black Prince defeated Henry de Trastamere, and re-established Peter the Cruel on the throne of Castile, April 3, 1367.

NAMES. Adam and Eve named their sons (Gen. iv., 25, 26). The popes change their names on their exaltation to the pontificate, "a custom introduced by Pope Sergius, whose name till then was swine-snout," 687.—Platina. Onuphrius refers it to John XII., 956; and gives as a reason that it was done in imitation of SS. Peter and Paul, who were first called Simon and Saul. In France it was usual to change the name given at baptism. The two sons of Henry II. of France were christened Alexander and Hercules; at their confirmation these names were changed to Henry and Francis. Monks and nuns, at their entrance into monasteries, assume new names, to show that they are about to lead a new life. See Surnames.

NAMUR, in Belgium, was made a county in 932, was ceded to the house of Austria by the peace of Utrecht, and was garrisoned by the Dutch as a barrier town of the United Provinces in 1715. Namur was taken by the French in 1746, but was restored in 1748. In 1781 the Emperor Joseph expelled the Dutch garrison. In 1792 it was again taken by the French, who were compelled to evacuate it the following year; but they regained possession of it in 1794. The French, however, delivered it up to the Allies in 1814. It was a site of a severe conflict in June, 1815, between the Prussians and the French under Grouchy, when retreating after the battle of Waterloo.

NANCY (Lorraine, France), founded in the 12th century. Charles the Bold of Burgundy endeavored to conquer Lorraine, and besieged Nancy in 1476; but on Jan. 5, 1477, he was defeated and slain by the Duke of Lorraine and his Swiss allies.

NANKIN, said to have been made the central capital of China, 420. On Aug. 4, 1842, the British ships arrived at Nankin, and peace was made. The rebel Tae-pings took it on March 19, 20, 1853. It was recaptured by the Imperialists, July 19, 1864, and found to be in a very desolate condition.

NANTES. See Edict.

NAPLES, formerly the continental division and seat of government of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, began with a Greek colony named Parthenope (about 1000 B.C.), which was afterward divided into Paleopolis (the old) and Neapolis (the new city), from which latter the present name is derived. The colony was conquered by the Romans in the Samnite War, 326 B.C. Naples, after resisting the power of the Lombards, Franks, and Germans, was subjugated by the Normans under Roger Guiscard, king of Sicily, A.D. 1131. Few countries have had so many political changes and cruel and despotic rulers, or suffered so much by convulsions of nature, such as earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, etc. In 1856, the population of the kingdom of Naples was 6,886,030; of Sicily, 2,251,020; total, 9,117,050. It now forms part of the revived kingdom of Italy.

* It was asserted, but denied by Lord Aberdeen, that his government had given warning of this attempt, of which they had obtained information by opening letters directed to Mazzini.

* The Cagliari, a Sardinian mail steam-boat plying between Genoa and Tunis, sailed from the former port on June 25, 1857, with thirty-three passengers, who, after a few hours' sail, took forcible possession of the vessel, and compelled the two English engineers (Watt and Park) to steer to Ponza. Here they landed, released some prisoners, took them on board, and sailed to Sipri, where they again landed, and restored the vessel to its commander and crew. The latter steered immediately for Naples; but, on the way, the vessel was boarded by a Neapolitan cruiser, and all the crew were landed and consigned to dungeons, where they remained for nine months waiting for trial, suffering great privations and insults. This caused great excitement in England; and after much negotiation, the crew were released and the vessel given up to the British government, £3000 being given as a compensation to the sufferers.

* Occasioned by the extortions of the Spanish viceroys. One day an impost was claimed on a basket of figs, and refused by the owner, with whom the populace took part, headed by Masaniello (Thomas Aniello), a fisherman; they obtained the command of Naples, many of the nobles were slain and their palaces burnt, and the viceroys were compelled to abolish the taxes and to restore the privileges granted by Charles V. to the city. Masaniello became intoxicated by his success, and was slain by his own followers after a few days' rule, on July 16, 1647.

NAPOLEON, CODE. See Codes.

NARBONNE (S.E. France), the Roman colony, Narbo Martius, founded 118 B.C., was made the capital of a Visigothic kingdom, 462. Gaston de Foix, the last vicomte (killed at the battle of Ravenna, April 11, 1512), resigned it to the king in exchange for the Duchy of Nemours.

NARCEINE and NARCOTINE, alkaloids obtained from Opium (which see). Narceine was discovered by Pelletier in 1832, and narcotine by Derosne in 1803.

NARVA (Esthonia, Russia). Here Peter the Great, of Russia, was totally defeated by Charles XII., of Sweden, "the Madman of the North," then in his nineteenth year, Nov. 30, 1700. The army of Peter is said to have amounted to 60,000, some Swedish writers affirm 100,000 men, while the Swedes did not much exceed 20,000. Charles attacked the enemy in his intrenchments, and slew 30,000; the remainder, exceeding that number, surrendered. He had several horses shot under him, and as he was mounting a fresh one he said, "These people seem disposed to give me exercise." The place was taken by Peter in 1704.

NASEBY (Northamptonshire), BATTLE OF, between Charles I. and the Parliament army under Fairfax and Cromwell. The main body of the royal army was commanded by Lord Astley; Prince Rupert led the right wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the left, and the king himself held the body of reserve. The victory was with the Parliament forces, and was decisive against the king, who fled, losing his cannon, baggage, and 5000 prisoners, June 14, 1645.

NASHVILLE (Tennessee, N. America), was occupied by the Confederates in 1861, and taken by the Federals Feb. 23, 1862. It was, in the autumn of 1862, isolated and besieged. General Negley erected several forts, which made the city almost impregnable against assault. On the 15th and 16th of December, 1864, there occurred south of Nashville one of the decisive battles of the war, in which General Thomas attacked and defeated Hood's army.

NASSAU, a German duchy, was made a county by the Emperor Frederick I. about 1180, for Wolfram, a descendant of Conrad I. of Germany, from whom are descended the royal house of Orange now reigning in Holland (see Orange and Holland), and the present Duke of Nassau. Wiesbaden was made the capital in 1839. On April 25, 1860, the Nassau Chamber strongly opposed the conclusion of a concordat with the Pope, and claimed liberty of faith and conscience. Population of the duchy in 1865, 468,311.

1788. Count Frederick-William joins the Confederation of the Rhine, and is made DUKE in 1806.

1814. William-George, August 20.

1839. Adolphus-William-Charles, born July 24, 1817. The PRESENT duke.

NATAL (Cape of Good Hope). Vasco da Gama landed here on Dec. 25, 1497, and hence named it Terra Natalis. The Dutch attempted to colonize it about 1721. In 1823, Lieut. Farewell and a small band of emigrants settled here. It was annexed to the British crown in 1843, and made a bishopric in 1853, and an independent colony in 1856.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY. Upon the proposition of the Abbé Siéyès, the States-General of France constituted themselves as the National Assembly, June 17, 1789. On the 20th, the hall of this new assembly was shut by order of the king, upon which the deputies of the Tiers Etat repaired to the Jeu de Paume, or Tennis-court, and swore not to dissolve until they had digested a Constitution for France. On the 22d they met at the church at St. Louis. This Assembly abolished the state religion, annulled monastic vows, divided France into departments, sold the national domains, established a national bank, issued assignats, and dissolved itself Sept. 21, 1792. See National Convention. In 1848 the Legislature was again termed the National Assembly. It met May 4, and a new Constitution was proclaimed Nov. 12. A new Constitution was once more proclaimed by Louis Napoleon in Jan., 1852, after triumphing over the National Assembly.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS. One was formed in 1584, headed by the Earl of Leicester, to protect Queen Elizabeth from assassination, in consequence of the discovery of various plots. Another, for the defense of William III. against assassins, was established in 1696, of which all persons holding office under government were required to be members. See Social Science and Volunteers for two other national associations.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF FRANCE, constituted in the hall of the Tuileries Sept. 17, and formally opened Sept. 21, 1792, when M. Grégoire, at the head of the National Assembly, repaired thither and announced that that assembly had ceased its functions. It was then decreed "That the citizens named by the French people to form the National Convention, being met to the number of 371, after having verified their powers, declare that the National Convention is constituted." This Convention continued until a new Constitution was organized, and the Executive Directory was installed at the little Luxembourg, Nov. 1, 1795. See Directory. The Chartists (which see) in England formed a National Convention in 1839.

NATIONAL DEBT OF ENGLAND. The first mention of Parliamentary security for a debt of the English nation occurs in the reign of Henry VI. The present national debt occurred in the reign of William III., 1690. It amounted, in 1697, to about five millions sterling, and was then thought to be of alarming magnitude. The sole cause of the increase has been war.

The annual interest in 1850 was £23,862,257; and the total interest, including annuities, amounted to £27,699,740. On Jan. 1, 1851, the total unredeemed debt of Great Britain and Ireland was £769,272,562, the charge on which, for interest and management, was £27,620,449. The total charge on the debt in 1861 was £26,090,260.

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON (containing now about 750 pictures), began with the purchase, by the British government, of the Angerstein collection of 38 pictures for £57,000, in Jan., 1824. The first exhibition of them took place in Pall Mall on May 10, 1824. Sir G. Beaumont (1826), Mr. Holwell Carr (1831), and many other gentlemen, as well as the British Institution, contributed many fine pictures, and the collection has been since greatly augmented by gifts and purchases. The present edifice in Trafalgar Square, designed by Mr. Wilkins, was completed and opened April 9, 1838.

NATIONAL GUARD OF FRANCE was instituted by the Committee of Safety at Paris on July 13, 1789 (the day before the destruction of the Bastille), to maintain order and defend the public liberty. Its first colors were blue and red, to which white was added, when its formation was approved by the king. Its action was soon paralyzed by the revolutionary factions, and it ceased altogether under the Consulate and Empire. It was revived by Napoleon in 1814, and maintained by Louis XVIII., but was broken up by Charles X. after a tumultuous review in 1827. It was revived in 1830, and helped to place Louis Philippe on the throne. In 1848, its reconstitution, and its enlargement from 80,000 to 100,000 men, led to the frightful conflict of June, 1848. Its constitution was entirely changed in Jan., 1852, when it was subjected entirely to the control of the government. Formerly the national guard had many privileges, such as choosing its own officers, etc.—National guards have been established in Spain, Naples, and other countries during the present century.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY OF ENGLAND was established in Feb., 1857, in pursuance of votes from both houses of Parliament. The sum of £2000 was appropriated for the purchase of portraits of persons eminent in British history, and apartments were assigned for their reception.

NATIVITY. There are two festivals in the Roman and Greek churches under this name. The Nativity of Christ, also observed by the Protestants on December 25th (see Christmas); and the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, not observed by the Protestants at all. Pope Sergius I., about 690, established the latter; but it was not generally received in France and Germany till about 1000, nor by the Eastern Christians till the 12th century.

NATURAL HISTORY was studied by Solomon, 1014 B.C. (1 Kings iv., 33) and by Aristotle (384–322 B.C.). See Botany, Zoology, etc.

NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. See Philosophy.

NATURAL SELECTION. See Species.

NATURALIZATION is defined to be “the making a foreigner or alien a denizen or freeman of any kingdom or city, and so becoming, as it were, both a subject and a native of a king or country that by nature he did not belong to.” The first act of naturalization passed in 1437, and various similar enactments were made in most of the reigns from that time, several of them special acts relating to individuals. An act for the naturalization of the Jews passed May, 1753, but was repealed in 1754, on the petition of all the cities in England; for the privileges since granted them, see Jews. The act for the naturalization of Prince Albert passed 3 Vict., Feb. 7, 1840.

NATURE-PRINTING. This process consists in impressing objects, such as plants, mosses, feathers, etc., into plates of metal, causing these objects, as it were, to engrave themselves, and afterward taking casts or copies fit for printing from. Knipphof, of Erfurt, between 1728 and 1757, produced his Herbarium vivum by pressing the plants themselves (previously inked) on paper, the impressions being afterward colored by hand. In 1853, Peter Kyhl, of Copenhagen, made use of steel rollers and lead plates. In 1842, Mr. Taylor printed lace. In 1847, Mr. Twining printed grasses, ferns, and plants; and in the same year Dr. Branson suggested the application of electrotyping to the impressions. In 1849, Professor Leydolt, of Vienna, by the able assistance of Mr. Andrew Worrington, obtained impressions of agates and fossils. The first practical application of this process is in Von Heuffer's work on the Mosses of Arpasch, in Transylvania; the second (the first in this country) in “The Ferns of Great Britain and Ireland,” edited by Dr. Lindley, the illustrations to which were produced under the superintendence of Mr. Henry Bradbury in 1855–6, who also, in 1859–60, printed “The British Sea-weeds,” edited by W. G. Johnstone and Alex. Croall.

NAVAL ASYLUM, UNITED STATES. It was not until the year 1835 that a permanent asylum for disabled and decrepit navy officers, seamen, and marines was established by the Federal government. By an act passed in July, 1798, provision was made for the establishment of naval hospitals, and there are now five of them belonging to the service, situated respectively at Chelsea, near Boston; Brooklyn, New York; Philadelphia; Portsmouth, Virginia; and Pensacola. The Federal Naval Asylum is situated upon the Schuylkill, at Gray's Ferry, near Philadelphia, and is surrounded by 25 acres of land. It consists of three structures, forming a harmonious plan. The main building is three stories in height, and 380 feet front. The establishment is furnished with every thing necessary for the comfort of the inmates. It is proposed to erect another somewhere on the sea-shore.

NAVAL BATTLES. The Argonautic expedition, undertaken by Jason, is the first upon record, 1263 B. C.—Dufresnoy. The first sea-fight on record is that between the Corinthians and Corcyreans, 664 B.C.—Blair. The following are among the most celebrated naval engagements; for the details of which, see separate articles.

In this situation a chain-shot shattered his leg, yet he would not be removed from the quarter deck, but continued fighting till the morning, when the French fleet shored off. He died in Oct. following, of his wounds, at Jamaica, where, soon after his arrival, he received a letter from the French admiral, of which the following is a literal translation:

"Carthage, Aug. 22, 1702.

"Sir,—I had little hopes, on Monday last, but to have supped in your cabin; yet it pleased God to order it otherwise. I am thankful for it. As for those cowardly captains who deserted you, hang them up, for, by God, they deserve it. Du Casse."

NAVARINO (S. W. Greece), BATTLE OF, Oct. 20, 1827, between the combined fleets of England, France, and Russia, under command of Admiral Codrington, and the Turkish navy, in which the latter was almost wholly annihilated. More than thirty ships, many of them four-deckers, were blown up or burnt, chiefly by the Turks themselves, to prevent their falling into the hands of their enemies. This destruction of the Turkish naval power was characterized by the Duke of Wellington as being an "untoward event"—a memorable phrase applied to it to this day.

NAVARRE, now a province of Spain, formed a part of the Roman dominions, and was conquered by Charlemagne, 778. His descendants appointed governors, one of whom, Garcias Ximenes, took the title of king about 860. In 1076, King Sancho IV. was poisoned, and Sancho Ramirez, of Aragon, seized Navarre. In 1134, Navarre became again independent under Garcias Ramirez IV. In 1234, Thibault, count of Champagne, became sovereign of Navarre, as nephew of Sancho VII., and in 1284, by the marriage of the heiress Jane with Philip IV. le Bel, Navarre was united to France.

SOVEREIGNS OF NAVARRE.

1274. Jane I. and (1284) Philip-le-Bel of France.
 1305. Louis X., Hutin, of France.
 1316. Philip V., the Long, of France.

 1328. Jane II. (daughter of Jane I.) and her husband, Philip d'Evreux.
 1349. Charles II., the Bad.
 1387. Charles III., the Noble.
 1425. Blanche, his daughter, and her husband, John of Aragon.
 1441. John II., alone, who became King of Aragon in 1458. He endeavored to obtain the crown of Castile also.
 1479. Eleanor de Foix, his daughter.
 1479. Francis Phœbus de Foix, her son.
 1483. Catharine (his sister) and her husband, John d'Albret. Ferdinand of Aragon conquers and annexes all Navarre south of the Pyrenees, 1512.
 1516. Henry d'Albret.
 1555. Jane d'Albret and her husband, Anthony de Bourbon, who died 1562.
 1572. Henry III., who became in 1589 King of France, to which Lower Navarre was formally united in 1609.

LOWER NAVARRE (in France).

NAVIGATION. It owes its origin to the Phœnicians, about 1500 B.C. The first laws of navigation originated with the Rhodians, 916 B.C. The first account we have of any considerable voyage is that of the Phœnicians sailing round Africa, 604 B.C.—Blair. See under Steam.

NAVIGATION LAWS. A code of maritime laws is attributed to Richard I. of England, said to have been decreed at the Isle of Oleron, 1194 (see Oleron), and farther enactments were made by Richard II. in 1381.—In Oct., 1651, the Parliament of Cromwell passed an act entitled "Goods from foreign parts, by whom to be imported," the principles of which were affirmed by 12 Charles II., c. 18. "An Act for the Encouraging and Increasing of Shipping and Navigation." The latter act restricts the importation and exportation of goods from or to Asia, Africa, or America to English ships, of which the masters and three fourths of the mariners are to be English. This was followed by many acts of similar tenor, which were consolidated by 3 and 4 Will. IV., c. 54 (1833). These acts were in the whole or in part repealed by the act "to amend the Laws in force for the Encouragement of British Shipping and Navigation," passed 12 and 13 Vict., c. 29, June 26, 1849, after much opposition. This last act came into operation Jan. 1, 1850. The Steam Navigation Act, passed 14 and 15 Vict., c. 79, 1851, came into operation Jan. 1, 1852. The act regulating the navigation of the River Thames was passed in 1756.—In Feb., 1865, the emperor recommended the modification of the French navigation laws.

NAVIGATORS (or Navvies). These important helpers in the construction of British railways derived their name (about 1830) from their formerly making the inland navigation in Lincolnshire, etc., and are said to be descendants of the original Dutch canal laborers.

ANNUAL EXPENDITURE OF THE BRITISH NAVY.—In the year 1850, £6,942,397; 1854, £6,640,506; 1855 (to March 31, Russian War), £14,490,105; 1856, £19,654,585; 1859, £9,215,457; 1861, £13,331,663; 1862, £12,598,042; 1863, £11,370,588; 1864, £10,821,596; estimate for year 1865

—£6, £10,392,224.

THE NAVAL SALUTE TO THE BRITISH FLAG began in Alfred's reign, and, though sometimes disputed, may be said to have been continued ever since. The Dutch agreed to strike to the English colors in the British seas in 1673. The honor of the flag-salute at sea was also formally assented to by France in 1704, although it had been long previously exacted by England. See Flag and Salutes at Sea.

NAVAL UNIFORMS.—The first notice of the establishment of a uniform in the British naval service which we have met with occurs in the Jacobite's Journal of March 5, 1748, under the head of "Domestic News," in these terms: "An order is said to be issued, requiring all his majesty's sea-officers, from the admiral down to the midshipman, to wear a uniformity of clothing, for which purpose pattern coats for dress suits and frocks for each rank of officers are lodged at the Navy Office, and at the several dock-yards for their inspection." This is corroborated by the Gazette of July 13, 1757, when the first alteration in the uniform took place, and in which a reference is made to the order of 1748, alluded to in the journal above mentioned, and which, in fact, is the year when a naval uniform was first established. James I. had indeed granted, by warrant of 6th April, 1609, to six of his principal masters of the navy, "liverie coats of fine red cloth." The warrant is stated to have been drawn verbatim from one signed by Queen Elizabeth, but which had not been acted upon by reason of her death. This curious document is in the British Museum; but King James's limited red liverie is supposed to have been soon discontinued.

—Quarterly Review.

THE NAVY PAY OFFICE, organized in 1644, was abolished in 1836, when the army and navy pay departments were consolidated in the paymaster general's office.

THE NAVY LIST was first officially compiled by John Finlaison, the celebrated actuary, and published monthly in 1814.

NAVAL REVIEWS.—The queen reviewed the fleet at Portsmouth in March, 1854, before it sailed to the Baltic, at the commencement of the Russian War; and again at Portsmouth, on the conclusion of peace, in the presence of the Parliament, etc., on April 23, 1856. The fleet extended in an unbroken line of 5 miles, and consisted of upward of 300 men-of-war, with a tonnage of 150,000, carrying 8500 guns, and manned by 40,000 seamen. There were about 100,000 spectators.

NAVAL VOLUNTEERS (or Reserve).—By 16 and 17 Vict., c. 73 (1853), the Admiralty were empowered to raise a body of seafaring men to be called the "Naval Coast Volunteers," not to exceed 10,000, for the defense of the coast, and for actual service if required. On Aug. 13, 1859, an act was passed to enable the Admiralty to raise a number of men, not exceeding 30,000, as a reserve force of seamen, to be called the "Royal Naval Volunteers." In November following the Admiralty issued a statement of the "qualifications, advantages, and obligations" of this reserve. The enrolment commenced on Jan. 1, 1860. The engagement is for five years, and the volunteers are entitled to a pension when incapacitated after the expiration of the term. At the prospect of war with the United States in Dec., 1861, a great number of seamen at Hartlepool, Dundee, London, Aberdeen, etc., offered their services.

NAVY OF FRANCE. It is first mentioned in history, 728, when, like that of England at an early period, it consisted of galleys; in this year the French defeated the Frisian fleet. It was considerably improved under Louis XIV. at the instance of his minister Colbert, about 1697. The French navy was perhaps in its highest splendor about 1781; but it became greatly reduced in the wars with England. See Naval Battles. It has been greatly increased by the present emperor, and in 1859 consisted of 51 ships of the line (14 sailing vessels and 37 steamers), and 398 other vessels, in all 449, including vessels building, converting, or ordered to be built. The new French iron-plated frigate Gloire, launched in 1860, has been subjected to much criticism, but appears to be generally considered as successful.* The Solferino and Magenta were launched in June, 1861. Other iron vessels are in course of construction.

NAVY OF THE UNITED STATES. In the year 1863 the Navy of the United States contained:

Since the close of the war the navy has been much reduced, and a great many of the vessels laid up or sold.

NEBRASKA, a N.W. Territory of North America, was organized May 30, 1854. Capital, Omaha City. Admitted as a state, March 1, 1867.

NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS, put forth by Sir Wm. Herschel in 1811, supposes that the universe was formed out of shapeless masses of nebulae or clusters of small stars. It has not been generally received. In Oct., 1860, Mr. Lassell strictly scrutinized the dumb-bell nebula, and stated that the brightest parts did not appear to be stars. In 1865 Mr. Wm. Huggins reported that he had analyzed certain nebulae by their spectra, and believed them to be entirely gaseous.

NECTARINE, the Amygdalis Persica, originally came from Persia about 1562. Previously, presents of nectarines were frequently sent to the court of England from the Netherlands; and Catharine, queen of Henry VIII., distributed them among her friends.

The Prince of Wales (afterward George IV.), the Duke of Clarence (afterward William IV.), and other royal dukes; almost all the peers of England, and the lord mayor and corporation of London, with thousands of military and naval officers and distinguished men, followed the funeral car to St. Paul's. The military assembled on this occasion amounted to near 10,000 regulars, independent of volunteers. The regulars consisted chiefly of the regiments that had fought and conquered in Egypt.

NEMEAN GAMES, celebrated at Nemea, in Achæia, were originally instituted by the Argives in honor of Archæmus, who died by the bite of a serpent, and Hercules some time after renewed them, 1226 B.C. The conqueror was rewarded with a crown of olives, afterward of green parsley, in memory of the adventure of Archæmus, whom his nurse laid down on a sprig of that plant. They were celebrated every third year, or, according to others, on the first and third year of every Olympiad, 1226 B.C.—Herodotus. They were revived by the Emperor Julian, A.D. 362, but ceased in 396.

NEPAUL (India). The East India Company's war with the state of Nepal commenced Nov. 1, 1814, and terminated April 27, 1815. A treaty of peace was signed between the parties Dec. 2, 1815. War renewed by an infraction of the treaty by the Nepalese, Jan., 1816; and after several contests, unfavorable to the Nepalese, the former treaty was ratified, March 15, 1816. An extraordinary embassy from the King of Nepal to the Queen of Great Britain arrived in England, landing at Southampton, May 25, and remained till Aug., 1850; it consisted of the Nepalese prince, Jung Bahadur, and his suite, to whom many honors were paid. He supported the English during the English mutiny in 1857.

NEPHALIA, sacrifices of sobriety among the Greeks, when they offered mead instead of wine to the sun and moon, to the nymphs, to Aurora, and to Venus; and burnt any wood but that of the vine, fig-tree, and mulberry-tree, esteemed symbols of drunkenness, 613 B.C.

NEPTUNE, a primary planet, first observed on Sept. 23, 1846, by Dr. Galle, at Berlin, in consequence of a letter from M. Le Verrier, who had conjectured, from the anomalous movements of Uranus, that a distant planet might exist nearly in the position where Neptune is situated. Calculations to the same effect had been previously made by Mr. J. Couch Adams. Neptune is said to have been seen by Lalande, and thought to be a fixed star.

NESTORIANS, the followers of Nestorius, bishop of Constantinople (428-431), who is represented as a heretic for maintaining that though the Virgin Mary was the mother of Jesus Christ as man, yet she was not the mother of God, since no human creature could impart to another what she had not herself; he also held that God was united to Christ under one person, but remained as distinct in nature and essence as though he had never been united at all. He was opposed by Eutyches, and died 439. See Eutychians, Nestorian Christians in the Levant administer the sacrament with leavened bread and in both kinds, permit their priests to marry, and use neither confirmation nor auricular confession.—Du Pin. A Nestorian priest and deacon were in London in July, 1862.

NEUFCHÂTEL, a canton in Switzerland, formerly a lordship, afterward a principality. The first known lord was Ulrich de Fenis, about 1032, whose descendants ruled till 1373, after which, by marriages, it frequently changed governors. On the death of the last of the Longuevilles, the Duchess de Nemours, in 1707, there were many claimants; among them William III. He and the Allies, however, gave it to Frederick I. of Prussia with the title of prince. In 1806 the principality was ceded to France, and Napoleon bestowed it on his General Berthier, who held it till 1814, when it fell to the disposal of the Allies. They restored the King of Prussia the title of prince with certain rights and privileges, but constituted it a part of the Swiss Confederation.*

NEUSTRIA, or WEST FRANCE, a kingdom allotted to Cloatair by his father Clovis at his death in 711. His descendant, Charlemagne, became sole king of France in 771.

NEUTRAL POWERS. By the treaty of Paris, signed by the representatives of Great Britain, France, Austria, Russia, Prussia, Turkey, and Sardinia, on April 16, 1856, it was determined that privateering should be abolished; that neutrals might carry an enemy's goods not contraband of war; that neutrals goods not contraband were free even under an enemy's flag; and that blockades, to be binding, must be effective. The President of the United States acceded to these provisions in 1861.

NEVADA, a Western Territory of the United States of N. America, organized March 2, 1861. Capital, Carson City. Admitted as a state, October 31, 1864.

NEVILLE'S CROSS, or DURHAM, BATTLE OF, between the Scots under King David Bruce, and the English under Philippa, consort of Edward III., and Lord Percy, Oct. 17, 1346. More than 15,000 of the Scots were slain, and their king taken prisoner.

NEVIS, ISLAND OF (W. Indies), planted by the English in 1628; taken by the French, Feb. 14, 1782; restored to the English in 1783. The capital is Charleston. Nevis was the birthplace of the celebrated General Alexander Hamilton, born 1757, died 1804.

NEWARK (Nottinghamshire), BATTLE OF, in which the royal army under Prince Rupert repulsed the army of the Parliament, besieging the town, March 21, 1644. The church was erected by Henry IV. Here, in the midst of troubles, died King John, Oct. 9, 1216; and here, May 5, 1646, Charles I., after his defeat at Naseby, put himself into the hands of the Scotch army, who afterward gave him up to his enemies. Newark was first incorporated by Edward VI., and afterward by Charles II.

NEWBERN (North Carolina), BATTLE OF, fought Feb. 14, 1862. After the capture of Roanoke Island, on the 5th, Burnside advanced on Newbern. The Confederates under General Branch—consisting of eight regiments and 500 cavalry—occupied works five miles below Newbern, a mile in extent, protected on the river bank by 13 guns, and by redoubts on the opposite sides. After four hours' fighting the Confederates were repulsed, and, abandoning Newbern, retreated upon Goldsborough. The national loss was 91 killed and 466 wounded; the Confederate 500, besides 200 prisoners.

* After an unsuccessful attempt in 1831, the inhabitants in 1848 repudiated their allegiance to Prussia, and proclaimed Neufchâtel a free and independent member of the Swiss Confederation. The King of Prussia protested against this; and in 1852 a protocol was signed between England, France, and Austria, recognizing his claims. In Sept., 1856, some of his adherents, headed by the Count de Pourtalès, broke out into insurrection against the Republican authorities, who, however, quickly subdued and imprisoned them, with the intention of bringing them to trial. War was threatened by the King of Prussia, and great energy and determination manifested by the Swiss. On the intervention of the English and French governments, after many delays, a treaty was signed on June 11, 1857, by which the King of Prussia virtually renounced his claims on receiving a pecuniary compensation, which he eventually gave up. He retains the title of Prince of Neufchâtel, without any political rights. The prisoners of Sept., 1856, were released without trial, Jan. 15, 1857.

NEW BRUNSWICK was taken from Nova Scotia, and received its name as a separate colony in 1785. In 1865 it opposed the plan for uniting all the British North American colonies in a confederation.

NEWBURY (Berkshire). Near here were fought two desperate battles: (1.) Sept. 20, 1643, between the army of Charles I. and that of the Parliament under Essex; it terminated somewhat favorably for the king. Among the slain was the amiable Lucius Cary, viscount Falkland, deeply regretted. (2.) A second battle of dubious result was fought between the Royalists and the Parliamentarians, Oct. 27, 1644.

NEW CALEDONIA (Pacific Ocean), discovered by Cook on Sept. 4, 1774, was seized by the French and colonized in 1852. The French government, in Dec., 1864, redressed the outrages committed upon the British missionaries at a station established here in 1854.

NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE (Northumberland), the Roman Pons Ælia. The first coal port in the world,* and the metropolis of the north of England. The coal-mines were discovered here about 1234. The first charter granted to the townsmen for digging coal was by Henry III. in 1239.

NEW COLLEGE (St. John's Wood, London), erected by the Independent dissenters for the education of their ministers, 1850-1, is founded on the union of Homerton, Highbury, and Coward colleges. See Oxford.

NEW ENGLAND (N. America), originally comprising the states of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, was settled by the Puritans who were driven from England. The first attempt to form a settlement was made in 1607, which was named New England by Captain Smith in 1614.

* In 1306 the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London by royal proclamation, chiefly because it injured the sale of wood for fuel, great quantities of which were then growing about the city; but this interdiction did not long continue, and we may consider coal as having been dug and exported from this place for more than 500 years.

Settlement of the Plymouth Colony in 1620. It now includes, besides the four original states, two others, Vermont and New Hampshire.

NEW FOREST (Hampshire), was made ("afforested") by William the Conqueror, 1079-85. Many populous towns and villages, and, indeed, the whole country for above thirty miles in compass, were laid waste, and no less than thirty-six churches were destroyed. William Rufus was killed in this forest by an arrow, shot by Walter Tyrrel, that accidentally glanced against a tree, Aug. 2, 1100, the site of which is now pointed out by a triangular stone. The New Forest Deer Removal Act was passed 14 & 15 Vict., c. 76, Aug. 7, 1851.

NEWFOUNDLAND (N. America), discovered by Sebastian Cabot, who called it Prima Vista, June 24, 1497. It was formally taken possession of by Sir Henry Gilbert, 1533. In the reign of Elizabeth, other nations had the advantage of the English in the fishery. In 1577 there were 100 fishing vessels from Spain, 50 from Portugal, 150 from France, and only 15, but of larger size, from England.—Hakluyt. But the English fishery in some years afterward (1625) had increased so much that the ports of Devonshire alone employed 150 ships, which sold their fish in Spain, Portugal, and Italy. The sovereignty of England was recognized in 1713. Nearly 1000 English families reside here all the year; and in the fishing season (May to September) more than 15,000 persons resort to Newfoundland (one of our finest nurseries for seamen). It obtained the privilege of a colonial legislation in 1845, and the bishopric was established in 1839.—Appalling fire at St. John's, a great portion of the town destroyed, the loss estimated at £1,000,000 sterling, June 9, 1846.*

NEWGATE, LONDON. The prison derives its name from the gate which once formed a part of it, and stood a little beyond the Sessions-house in the Old Bailey. It was used as a prison for persons of rank as early as 1213, but was rebuilt about two centuries afterward by the executors of Sir Richard Whittington, whose statue with a cat stood in the niche till the time of its demolition by the great fire of London in 1666. It was then reconstructed in its late form; but the old prison, being an accumulation of misery and inconvenience, was pulled down and rebuilt between 1773 and 1780. During the riots in the latter year the interior was destroyed by fire, but shortly afterward restored. In 1857 the interior was pulled down, to be re-erected on a plan adapted to the reformatory system. The market, established in 1651, was ordered to be abolished by an act passed in 1861. A meat and poultry market is to be erected in Smithfield.

NEW GRANADA (S. America), discovered by Ojeda in 1499, and conquered and settled by the Spaniards in 1536. It formed part of the new republic of Bogota, established in 1811; and, combined with Caraccas, formed the republic of Colombia in Dec. 17, 1819. See Colombia.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, one of the original United States of N. America, was settled in 1623, and separated from Massachusetts in 1679. Capital, Concord.

NEW HEBRIDES (S. Pacific Ocean), discovered by Quiros, who, believing them to be a continent, named them Tierra Australis del Espíritu Santo in 1606. Bougainville in 1763 found them to be islands; and in 1774 Cook gave them their present name.

NEW HOLLAND. See Australia, New South Wales, etc.

* On Jan. 14, 1857, a convention was concluded between the English and French governments, confirming certain French privileges of fishery in exchange for others. The English colonists were dissatisfied with this convention.

NEW JERSEY, one of the United States, was first settled at Bergen, by some Danish families from New York, in 1622, and by the Dutch, on the Delaware, in 1623. In 1631, a colony of Swedes settled on the Delaware from Cape May to Burlington. The province was granted to the Duke of York in 1664, and by him conveyed to Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret, who established a government there in 1665. With New York, it was surrendered to the Dutch in 1673, and surrendered by them to the English in 1674. In 1676, the province was divided into East and West Jersey; Carteret taking the former, and William Penn and others the latter by purchase. They afterward purchased East Jersey. After much difficulty, the province was surrendered to the crown in 1702, and continued a royal government until the Revolution. The independent state was organized in 1776, and in 1787 adopted the Federal Constitution.

NEW LANARK (W. Scotland). Here Robert Owen endeavored to establish socialism in 1801.

NEWMARKET (Cambridgeshire), renowned for its horse-races. It is first mentioned in 1227, and probably derived its name from the market then recently established. James I. erected a hunting-seat here, called the king's house, to which Charles I. was taken as a prisoner in 1647, when the Parliamentary army was quartered in the neighboring village of Kennet. Charles II., who was fond of racing, built a stand-house for the sake of the diversion, about 1367,* and from that period races have been annual to the present time; and many extraordinary races have been run. See Races.

NEW MEXICO (N. America), ceded to the United States in 1848, and organized as a territory Sept. 9, 1850. Capital, Santa Fé.

NEW ORLEANS, the chief city of Louisiana, N. America (which see), founded in 1717, under the regency of the Duke of Orleans. In 1788, seven eighths of the city were destroyed by fire; but it is now rebuilt. New Orleans was surrendered to the Federals in April, 1862. The strong feeling of the inhabitants in favor of the Confederates induced General Butler to rule them with military rigor, May to October, 1862. He was replaced by General Banks, Dec. 16, 1862.

NEW ORLEANS, BATTLE OF, was the last important engagement of the last war between the United States and Great Britain. It occurred just below the city of New Orleans, on the 8th of January, 1815. The Americans were on both sides of the Mississippi. There were 4700 men, under the immediate command of General Jackson, on the east side, where the battle was fought, and over 1000 on the west bank. The British troops that came to the attack as invaders were 8400 strong, under the command of General Pakenham. They were repulsed with great loss. The general-in-chief was killed, with 291 others, and 1262 were wounded; 17 officers and 453 men were made prisoners. The Americans were protected by breastworks, and had only 7 killed and 6 wounded in the main battle, and 8 killed and 32 wounded on the west bank of the river.

NEWPORT (Monmouthshire). Chartist riots here were suppressed Nov. 4, 1839.†

NEWPORT (Rhode Island), a celebrated watering-place. Here the eminent Bishop Berkeley, and also Smybert, the earliest professional portrait painter in America, resided for a while. It is near the entrance of Narragansett Bay, and was the scene of many stirring events during the American Revolution, being occupied alternately by British, American, and French troops, the latter, under Rochambeau, having landed there in 1780.

NEW RIVER. An artificial river for the supply of London with water, commenced in 1609, and finished in 1613, when the projector, Hugh Myddelton, was knighted by James I.—Strype. This river, which rises in Hertfordshire, and which, with its windings, is forty-two miles long, was brought to London, and opened Sept. 29, 1613. So little was the benefit of it understood, that for above thirty years the seventy-two shares into which it was divided netted only £5 apiece. Each of these shares was sold originally for £100. Within the last few years they were sold at £9000 a share, and some lately at £10,000.

NEW ROSS (Wexford), S.E. Ireland. Here General Johnston totally defeated the rebels under Beauchamp D. Bagenal Harvey, June 4, 1798.

NEWRY (N. Ireland). In the rebellion of 1641, Newry was reduced to a ruinous condition; it was surprised by Sir Con. Magenis, but was retaken by Lord Conway. After the Restoration the town was rebuilt. It was burnt by the Duke of Berwick when flying from Schomberg and the English army, and only the castle and a few houses escaped, 1689.

NEW SOUTH WALES, the principal colony of Australia (which see). The eastern coast of New Holland was explored and taken possession of by Captain Cook in 1770. At his recommendation a convict colony was first formed here. Captain A. Phillip, the first governor, arrived at Botany Bay with 800 convicts, Jan. 20, 1788; but he subsequently preferred Sydney, about seven miles distant from the head of Port Jackson, as a more eligible situation for the capital. A new Constitution was granted in 1855 (18 & 19 Vict., c. 54). See Sydney. Population in 1856, 269,722; in 1859, 342,062; in 1862, 367,495. The imports for 1859 amounted to £6,597,053; the exports to £4,763,049. Governor, Sir John Young, appointed 1860.

NEWSPAPERS. The Roman Acta Diurna were issued, it is said, 691 B.C. In modern times, a Gazette, which derived its name from its price, a small coin, was published in Venice (about 1536). The Gazette de France, now existing, first appeared in April, 1631, edited by Renaudot, a physician. It was patronized by the king, Louis XIII., who wrote one article for it, and by Richelieu. The first real newspaper published in England* was established by Sir Roger L'Estrange in 1663; it was entitled the Public Intelligencer, and continued nearly three years, when it ceased, on the appearance of the Gazette. In the reign of James I., 1622, appeared the London Weekly Courant; and in the year 1643 (the period of the Civil War) were printed a variety of publications, certainly in no respect entitled to the name of newspapers, of which the following were the titles:

England's Memorable Accidents.
The Kingdom's Intelligencers.
The Diurnal of Certain Passages in Parliament.
The Mercurius Aulicus.
The Scotch Intelligencer.
The Parliament's Scout.
The Parliament's Scout's Discovery, or Certain Information.
The Mercurius Civicus, or London's Intelligencer.
The Country's Complaint, etc.
The Weekly Accounts.
Mercurius Britannicus.

A paper called the London Gazette was published Aug. 22, 1642. The London Gazette of the existing series was published first at Oxford, the court being there on account of the plague, Nov. 7, 1665, and afterward at London, Feb. 5, 1666.

Printing of newspapers and pamphlets prohibited, 31 Charles I., 1680.—Salmon's Chron. The regular newspapers commenced on the abolition of the censorship of the press in 1695. Daily Courant first published in 1709. Newspapers first stamped in 1713.

* Some copies of a publication are in existence called the English Mercury, professing to come out under the authority of Queen Elizabeth in 1588, the period of the Spanish Armada. The researches of Mr. T. Watts, of the British Museum, have proved these to be forgeries, executed about 1766. The full title of No. 50 is "The English Mercury, published by authority, for the prevention of false reports, imprinted by Christopher Barker, her highness's printer, No. 50." It describes the Spanish Armada, giving "A journal of what passed since the 21st of this month, between her majesty's fleet and that of Spayne, transmitted by the Lord High Admiral to the Lordes of Council."

† On May 22, 1787, a London Gazette Extraordinary was forged, with a view of affecting the funds.

* During the races on March 22, 1683, Newmarket was nearly destroyed by an accidental fire, which occasioned the hasty departure of the company then assembled, including the king, the queen, the Duke of York, the royal attendants, and many of the nobility; and to this disaster historians have ascribed the failure of the Rye-House Plot, the object of which was said to be the assassination of the king and his brother on the road from Newmarket to London, if the period of their journey had not been thus anticipated. See Rye-House Plot.

† The Chartists (which see), collected from the mines and collieries in the neighborhood to the number of 10,000, armed with guns, pikes, clubs, etc., arrived at Newport, Nov. 4, 1839. They divided themselves into two bodies—one, under the command of Mr. John Frost, an ex-magistrate, proceeded down the principal street; while the other, headed by his son, took the direction of Stow Hill. They met in front of the Westgate hotel, where the magistrates were assembled, with about 30 soldiers of the 45th regiment, and several special constables. The rioters commenced breaking the windows of the house, and fired on the magistrates, by which the mayor, Mr. (now Sir Thomas) Phillips, and several other persons, were wounded. The soldiers returned the fire, and succeeded in dispersing the mob, which, with its leaders, fled from the town, leaving about 20 rioters dead, and many others dangerously wounded. A detachment of the 10th Royal Hussars having arrived from Bristol, the town became tranquil. Frost was apprehended on the following day, together with his printer, and other influential persons among the Chartists. He and several others were tried and convicted in Jan., 1840, and sentenced to death; afterward commuted to transportation. An amnesty was granted them on May 3, 1856, and they returned to England in Sept. following.

[In 1850 there were also issued supplement stamps at $\frac{1}{2}d.$, 11,684,423.]

In the year ending Jan. 5, 1851, there were 159 London newspapers, in which appeared 891,650 advertisements; 222 English provincial newspapers, having 575,631 advertisements. In Scotland, same year, 110 newspapers, having 249,141 advertisements. In Ireland, 102 newspapers, having 236,128 advertisements. The number of stamps issued was, in England, 65,741,271 at 1d., and 11,684,423 supplement stamps at $\frac{1}{2}d.$; in Scotland, 7,645,045 stamps at 1d., and 241,264 at $\frac{1}{2}d.$; in Ireland, 6,302,728 stamps at 1d., and 43,358 at $\frac{1}{2}d.$

Reduction of newspaper duty from 4d. to 1d. took effect on Sept. 15, 1836.

The distinctive die came into use Jan. 1, 1837.

Duty on advertisements abolished, 1853.

IRISH NEWSPAPERS.

The first was the Dublin News-Letter, by Joseph Ray, 1685; Pue's Occurrences, 1700. Faulkner's Journal was established by George Faulkner, "a man celebrated for the goodness of his heart and the weakness of his head," 1728. The oldest of the existing Dublin newspapers are Saunders's (then Esdaille's News-Letter, 1745; and Freeman's Journal, founded as the Public Register, by the patriot Dr. Lucas, about 1755. The Limerick Chronicle, the oldest of the provincial prints, 1768.

PROVINCIAL NEWSPAPERS.

By the act passed June 15, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict., c. 27), the stamp on newspapers, as such, was totally abolished, and will be employed henceforth only for postal purposes. Many new papers were then started, which were but of short duration.

In 1857, 71 million newspapers passed through the post-office. In Jan., 1860, 1060 newspapers, and in Jan., 1862, 1165 newspapers were in course of publication in the United Kingdom.

On Oct. 1, 1861, when the paper duty came off, the Times, Daily News, and Morning Post reduced their price to 3d. each copy unstamped.

NEWSPAPERS, AMERICAN. On April 24th, 1704, appeared the first regular newspaper published in the United States, the "Boston News-Letter," although in September, 1690, an adventurous printer had made a like attempt in the same town, the publication of which was suppressed by the authorities, and only one copy is now known to be in existence.

New York Herald	1835
New York Tribune	1841
New York Times	1850

The above table gives the dates on which some of the more prominent of the earlier papers were started. The total circulation of the New York dailies can not now (1859) be less than 450,000 copies, and some of the weekly papers, as Harpers' Weekly, Harpers' Bazar, Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, Bonner's New York Ledger, have an immense circulation.

The increase of newspaper literature in the United States is marvelous enough. In 1830, with a population of 23½ millions, the number of newspapers published was 852 (50 of these being dailies), with a yearly issue of 63,117,796 copies; in 1840, the number of newspapers had increased to 1631, with a yearly issue of 195,588,673 copies; in 1850, the number of papers published was 2526, with an issue of 426,409,973 copies; in 1860, the date of the last census, the number of newspapers published had risen to 40,051, with an annual issue of 925,000,000 copies, being an increase of 118 per cent. for 1860 over the preceding decennial period.

NEW STYLE. Pope Gregory XIII., in order to rectify the errors of the current calendar, published a new one, in which ten days were omitted—Oct. 5, 1552, becoming Oct. 15. The new style was adopted in France, Italy, Spain, Denmark, Flanders, Portugal, in 1582, and in Great Britain in 1751. In 1752 eleven days were left out of the calendar—Sept. 3, 1752, being reckoned as Sept. 14.

NEW TESTAMENT. See Bible.

NEWTONTIAN PHILOSOPHY, the doctrines respecting gravitation, etc., taught by Sir Isaac Newton in his "Principia," published in 1687. He was born Dec. 25, 1642; became Master of the Mint, 1699; President of the Royal Society, 1703; and died March 20, 1727. A statue of him in marble by Roubilliac was set up at Trinity College, Cambridge, July 14, 1755, and one in bronze by Theed, at Grantham, Sept. 21, 1858, when Lord Brougham delivered an excellent discourse on the life and works of Newton. The latter statue cost £1600, which sum was obtained by public subscription.

NEWTOWNBARRY RIOT (S. E. Ireland). On a seizure of stock for tithes, a lamentable conflict ensued here between the yeomanry and the people, when thirty-five persons were killed or wounded, June 18, 1831. The jury at the coroner's inquest was unable to agree on a verdict.

NEWTOWN-BUTLER (N. Ireland). On July 30, 1689, the Enniskilleners under Gustavus Hamilton thoroughly defeated the adherents of James II., commanded by General M'Carty, taking him prisoner with his artillery, arms, and baggage.

* On this day the Romans sacrificed to Janus a cake of new sifted meal, with salt, incense, and wine, and all the mechanics began something of their art of trade; the men of letters did the same as to books, poems, etc.; and the consuls, though chosen before, took the chair and entered upon their office this day. Nonius Marcellus refers the origin of NEW-YEAR'S GIFTS among the Romans to Titus Tatius, king of the Sabines, who, having considered as a good omen a present of some branches cut in a wood consecrated to Strenia, the goddess of strength, which he received on the first day of the new year, authorized the custom afterward, and gave these gifts the name of Strenae, 747 B.C.

June 22, 1807, and made peace with him and Prussia. He crossed the Niemen to invade Russia, June 24, 1812, and recrossed with the remains of his army, Dec. 28.

NIGER EXPEDITION, undertaken with a view to plant an English colony in the centre of Africa, and supported by a government grant of £60,000, started in the summer of 1841, and commenced the ascent of the river, Aug. 20, in that year. The expedition consisted of the Albert, Wilberforce, and Soudan. Fever broke out among the crews, Sept. 2, when these vessels had arrived at Iddah. The confluence of the Niger and the Chadda (270 miles from the sea) was reached Sept. 11. The Soudan then returned with the sick; the Wilberforce ascended the Chadda, and the Albert the Niger. But the Wilberforce was almost immediately compelled to return, and follow the track of the Soudan. The Albert arrived at Egga, on the Niger (320 miles from the sea), Sept. 28; but so great had been the progress of disease, that orders were now given for the third vessel to return, which she did, after the necessary delay for procuring firewood, on Oct. 4. This last vessel cast anchor in Clarence Cove, Fernando Po, Oct. 17, all the same year.

NIGHTINGALE FUND. On Oct. 21, 1854, Miss Florence Nightingale left England with a staff of thirty-seven nurses, and arrived at Scutari Nov. 5; they rendered invaluable services to the army; she returning to London Sept. 8, 1856. In memory, a meeting was held at Willis's Rooms on Nov. 29, 1855, to raise funds to establish an institution for the training of nurses and other hospital attendants. Madame Jenny Lind Goldschmidt sang at Exeter Hall on March 11, 1856, and gave the proceeds (£1872) to the fund. The subscriptions closed April 24, 1857, amounting to £44,039. The queen gave Miss Nightingale a valuable jewel.

NILA CONTESTS. See Circus.

NIL DARPAN. See India, June, 1861.

NILE (Egypt). This great river rises in the Mountains of the Moon, in about ten degrees of N. lat., and in a known course of 1250 miles receives no tributary streams. The travels of Bruce were undertaken to discover the source of the Nile; he set out from England in June, 1768; on the 14th of November, 1770, he discovered the source of the Blue Nile, and returned home in 1773.—This river overflows regularly every year, from about the 15th of June to the 17th of Sept., when it begins to decrease, having given fertility to the land. It must rise 16 cubits to insure that fertility. In 1829, the inundations of the Nile rose to 26 instead of 22, by which 30,000 people were drowned and immense property lost. Mr. Petherick set out early in 1861 to explore the country at the source of the Nile. For recent discoveries, see Africa, 1863-5.

NILE, BATTLE OF THE (or Aboukir), Aug. 1, 1798, near Rosetta, between the Toulon and British fleets, the latter commanded by Lord (then Sir Horatio) Nelson. Nine of the French line-of-battle ships were taken, two were burnt, and two escaped. The French ship L'Orient, with Admiral Brueys and 1000 men on board, blew up, and only 70 or 80 escaped. Nelson's exclamation upon commencing the battle was, "Victory or Westminster Abbey!"

NIMEGUEN (Holland). Here was signed the treaty of peace between France and the United Provinces, 1678. The French were successful against the British under the Duke of York before Nimeguen, Oct. 28, 1794, but were defeated by the British Nov. 8 following.

NINETY-SIX, SIEGE OF. In May, 1781, Gen. Greene commenced the siege of Fort Ninety-six, in Abbeville District, South Carolina, with less than a thousand regulars, and a few raw militia. The garrison was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Cruger, a New York Loyalist. The siege continued from the 22d of May until the 18th of June, when an unsuccessful attempt was made to take the works by storm. The siege was raised on the following evening, and the Americans retreated beyond the Saluda River. Greene lost 150 men during the siege.

NINEVEH, the capital of the Assyrian Empire (see Assyria), founded by Ashur, who called it after himself, about 2245 B.C. Ninus reigned in Assyria, and called this city also after himself, Nineveh, 2069 B.C.—Abbé Lenglet. Jonah preached against Nineveh (about 862 B.C.), which was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 606 B.C. The discoveries of Mr. Layard and others in the neighborhood of Mosul, the supposed site of this ancient capital, since 1839, have in a manner disinterred and reaped a city which for centuries has not only ceased to figure on the page of history, but whose very locality had long been blotted out of the map of the earth.* In 1848 Mr. Layard published his "Nineveh and its Remains," and in 1853 an account of his second visit in 1849-50.

NISBET or NESBIT (Northumberland). Here a battle was fought between the English and Scotch armies, the latter greatly disproportioned in strength to the former. Several thousand of the Scots were slain upon the field and in the pursuit, May 7, 1402.

NISMES (Nîmes), S. France, was the flourishing Roman colony Nemausus. Its noble amphitheatre was ruined during the English occupation in 1417. Nîmes embraced Protestantism, and suffered much persecution in consequence, and has frequently been the scene of fierce religious contests. The treaty termed the Pacification of Nîmes (July 14, 1629) gave religious toleration for a time to the Huguenots.

NITRE. See Saltpetre.

NITRIC ACID, a compound of nitrogen and oxygen, formerly called aqua fortis, first obtained in a separate state by Raymond Lully, an alchemist, about 1287; but we are indebted to Cavendish, Priestley, and Lavoisier for our present knowledge of its properties. Mr. Cavendish demonstrated the nature of this acid in 1785. Nitrous acid was discovered by Scheele about 1774. Nitrous gas was accidentally discovered by Dr. Hales. Nitrous oxide gas was discovered by Dr. Priestley in 1776.

NITROGEN, or AZOTE (from the Greek a, no, and zōē, I live), an irrespirable elementary gas. Before 1777, Scheele separated the oxygen of the air from the nitrogen, and almost simultaneously with Lavoisier discovered that the atmosphere is a mixture of these two gases. Nitrogen combined with hydrogen forms the volatile alkali ammonia, so freely given off by decomposing animal and vegetable bodies.

NOBILITY. The Goths, after they had seized a part of Europe, rewarded their heroes with titles of honor, to distinguish them from the common people. The right of peerage seems to have been at first territorial. Patents to persons having no estate were first granted by Philip the Fair of France, 1095. George Neville, duke of Bedford (son of John, marquess of Montague), ennobled in 1470, was degraded from the peerage by Parliament on account of his utter want of property, 19 Edw. IV., 1478. Noblemen's privileges were restrained in June, 1773. See Lords, and the various orders of the nobility.

NOBILITY OF FRANCE preceded that of England. On June 18, 1790, the National Assembly decreed that hereditary nobility could not exist in a free state; that the titles of dukes, counts, marquesses, knights, barons, excellencies, abbots, and others, be abolished; that all citizens take their family names; liveries and armorial bearings also to be abolished. The records of the nobility, 600 volumes, were burnt at the foot of the statue of Louis XIV., June 25, 1792. A new nobility was created by the Emperor Napoleon I., 1808. The hereditary peerage was abolished Dec. 27, 1831.

NOBLE, an ancient English coin, first struck in the reign of Edward III. about 1337. It was stamped with a rose, and was thence called a rose noble; value 6s. 8d.

NONCONFORMISTS. The Protestants in England are divided into conformists and nonconformists, or churchmen and dissenters. The first place of meeting of the latter, in England, was established at Wandsworth, near London, Nov. 2, 1572. The name of nonconformists was taken by the Puritans when the Act of Uniformity came into operation on Aug. 24, 1662 (termed "Black Bartholomew's day"), when 2000 ministers of the established religion resigned, not choosing to conform to the statute passed "for the uniformity of public prayers and administration of the sacraments." See Puritans and Dissenters. The laws against them were relaxed in 1690.—The Nonconformist newspaper (edited by Mr. Edward Miall) began in 1841.

NONES, in the Roman calendar, were the fifth day

* The forms, features, costume, religion, modes of warfare, and ceremonial customs of its inhabitants stand before us as distinct as those of a living people; and it is anticipated that, by help of the sculptures and their cuneiform inscriptions, the researches of the learned may go far in filling up the vast blank in Assyrian annals. Among the sculptures that enrich the British Museum may be mentioned the winged bull and lion, and numerous hunting and battle-pieces, but perhaps the most interesting, as confirmatory of the truth of Holy Scripture, is the bas-relief of the eagle-headed human figure, presumed to be a representation of the Assyrian god Nisroch (from Nir, an eagle or hawk), whom Sennacherib was in the act of worshipping when he was assassinated by his two sons about 710 B.C.—2 Kings, xix., 37.

of each month, excepting March, May, July, and October, when the nones fell on the seventh day.

NON-JURORS. In 1689, they considered James II. to have been unjustly deposed, and refused to swear allegiance to William III. Among them were Sancroft, archbishop of Canterbury; Ken, bishop of Bath and Wells, and the bishops of Ely, Gloucester, Norwich, and Peterborough, and many of the clergy who were deprived, Feb. 1, 1691. Non-jurors were subjected to a double taxation, and were obliged to register their estates, May, 1723. They formed a separate communion, which existed till the beginning of the present century.

NON NOBIS, DOMINE! ("Not unto us, O Lord!" etc., Psalm cxv., 1), a musical canon, sung as a grace at public feasts, was composed by W. Bird in 1618.

NON-RESISTANCE OATH, occurring in the Corporation Act, 1661, was repealed in 1719.

NOOTKA SOUND (Vancouver's Island), discovered by Captain Cook in 1778. It was settled by the British in 1796, when a few British merchants in the East Indies formed a settlement to supply the Chinese market with furs; but the Spaniards in 1759 captured two English vessels and took possession of the settlement. The British ministry demanded reparation, and the affair was amicably terminated by a convention, and a free commerce was confirmed to England in 1790.

"NO-POPERY RIOTS." See Gordon.

NORDLINGEN (Bavaria). Here the Swedes under Count Horn were defeated by the Austrians, Aug. 27, 1634, and the latter by Turenne in 1645.

NORE MUTINY. See Mutinies.

NORFOLK (Virginia), an excellent interior port, with a navy yard at Gosport, opposite. It was destroyed by the British under the direction of the royal governor, Lord Dunmore, on the first of January, 1776. See Fires in America. Its neighborhood suffered severely during the remainder of the war. During the Civil War in 1861 it became the property of the rebels, and the navy yard there was at the same time destroyed by fire, with a large amount of property. Reoccupied by the Union forces under General John E. Wool on the 10th April, 1862.

NORFOLK ISLAND, a penal colony of England, discovered in 1774 by Captain Cook, who found it uninhabited except by birds. The settlement was made by a detachment from Port Jackson under Governor Phillip in 1788, in Sydney Bay, on the south side of the island. This was at one time the severest penal colony of Great Britain. The island was abandoned in 1809, but reoccupied as a penal settlement in 1825. The descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty were removed to it in June, 1856, from Pitcairn's Island (which see).

NORMANDY (N. France), part of Neustria, a kingdom founded by Clovis in 511 for his son Clotaire, which, after various changes, was united to France by Charles the Bald in 837. From the beginning of the 9th century it was continually devastated by the Scandinavians, called Northmen or Normans, to purchase repose from whose irruptions Charles the Simple of France ceded the duchy to their leader Rollo, 905. From its conquerors it received its present name. Rollo, the first duke, held it as a fief of the crown of France, and several of his successors after him, until William, the seventh duke, acquired England, in 1066. It remained a province of England with some intermissions till the reign of King John, 1204, when it was reunited to France. It was reconquered by Henry V., 1418, and held by England partially till 1450. The English still possess the islands on the coast, of which Jersey and Guernsey are the principal.

DUKES.

- 912. Rollo (or Raoul), baptized as Robert.
- 920 or 927. William I., Longsword.
- 943. Richard I., the Fearless.
- 996. Richard II., the Good.
- 1027. Richard III.
- 1028. Robert I., the Devil.
- 1035. William II. (I. of England).
- 1037. Robert II., Courthouse (his son), after a contest despoiled by his brother.
- 1106. Henry I. (king of England).
- 1135. Stephen (king of England).
- 1144. Matilda and Geoffrey Plantagenet.
- 1151. Henry II. (king of England in 1154).
- 1189. Richard IV. (I. of England).
- 1199-1203. Arthur and John of England.

NORTH ADMINISTRATION, formed by Lord

North, Jan., 1770. After his retirement from office, March 30, 1782, Lord North entered into a league with the Whigs: this led to the short-lived Coalition ministry (1783). He succeeded to the earldom of Guildford in 1790, and died in 1792. See "Coalition."

Frederick, Lord North, First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Earl Gower, Lord President.

Earl of Halifax, Priny Seal.

Lord Rochford, Lord Weymouth (succeeded by Lord Sandwich), and Lord Hillsborough, Secretaries of State.

Sir Edward Hawke, Admiralty.

Marguise of Granby, Ordnance.

Sir Gilbert Elliot, Lord Hertford, Duke of Ancaster, Lord Carteret, etc.

NORTHALLERTON (Yorkshire). Near here was fought the "battle of the Standard," where the English totally defeated the Scotch armies, Aug. 22, 1138. The Archbishop of York brought forth a consecrated standard on a carriage at the moment when they were hotly pressed by the invaders, headed by King David.

NORTHAMPTON, England, was burnt by the Danes in 1010. Here Henry III. proposed to found a university in 1260, and held a Parliament in 1269. On July 10, 1460, a conflict took place between the Duke of York and Henry VI. of England, in which the unfortunate monarch was defeated and made prisoner (the second time), after a sanguinary fight, which took place in the meadows below the town. Northampton was ravaged by the plague in 1637. It was seized and fortified by the Parliamentary forces in 1642. The memorable fire, which almost totally destroyed the town, occurred Sept. 3, 1675.

NORTH BRITON NEWSPAPER, No. 45* (Wilkes's number), dated Saturday, April 23, 1763, was, by order of both houses of Parliament, publicly burnt in London by the hands of the common hangman, Dec. 3, 1763. Wilkes, by this newspaper (commenced in 1762), increased the antipathy to the Scotch, then very prevalent in England, having been greatly favored by the minister, the Earl of Bute.

NORTH CAROLINA. See Carolina.

NORTHMEN or NORSEMEN. See Scandinavia and Normandy.

NORTH POINT (Baltimore), BATTLE OF. The British troops, to the number of about 8000, under General Ross, landed at North Point, 14 miles below Baltimore, on the 12th of Sept., 1814, and proceeded to march toward the city. General Stryker, with over 3000 militia and volunteers, opposed him. A skirmish ensued, when Ross was killed. Colonel Brooke took his place, and pressed forward, when a severe battle commenced. The Americans fell back toward the city. That night the British slept on their arms, and toward the morning of the 14th withdrew, and went on board their ships. The Americans lost in killed and wounded, 163; the British, 290.

NORTHUMBRIA, a Saxon kingdom, founded by Ida, 547.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE. The attempt to discover a northwest passage was made by a Portuguese named Corte Real about 1500. In 1585, a company was formed in London called the "Fellowship for the Discovery of the Northwest Passage." From 1745 to 1818 Parliament offered £20,000 for this discovery. In 1818 the reward was modified by proposing that £5000 should be paid when either 110°, 120°, or 130° W. long. should be passed; one of which payments was made to Sir E. Parry. For their labors in the voyages enumerated in the list below, Parry, Franklin, Ross, Back, and Richardson were knighted.

Sir Hugh Willoughby's expedition to find a north-east passage to China sailed from the Thames

May 20, 1553

* Number 45 contained a commentary on the king's speech, couched in such caustic terms that a prosecution was commenced against Wilkes. Having been arrested on a general warrant, he was brought by a writ of Habeas corpus before Chief Justice Pratt, of the Common Pleas, who declared the judgment of that court that general warrants were illegal, and he was consequently discharged. But, not content with this escape, he reprinted the obnoxious number, which produced a regular prosecution to conviction. See Warrants, General.

† The gallant Sir Hugh Willoughby took his departure from Ratcliffe on his fatal voyage for discovering the northeast passage to China. He sailed with great pomp by Greenwich, where the court then resided. The council and courtiers appeared at the windows, and the people covered the shores. The young king, Edward VI., alone lost the noble and novel sight, for he then lay on his deathbed; so that the principal object of the parade was disappointed. Sir Hugh Willoughby was unfortunately entangled in the ice, and frozen to death on the coast of Lapland. See Hakluyt.

NORWAY, until the 7th century, was governed by petty rulers. About 630, Olaf Trætrelia, of the race of Odin, termed Ynglings or youths, expelled from Sweden,

* Sir John Franklin died June 11, 1847 (see Franklin); Sir E. Parry died July 8, 1855, aged 65; and Sir John Ross died Aug. 30, 1856, aged 80.

† In 1831 he discovered Boothia Felix; on June 31, same year, he came to a spot which he considered to be the true magnetic pole, in 70° 5' 17" N. lat., and 98° 46' 45" W. long.
* Capt. McClure sailed in the Investigator in company with Com. Collinson in the Enterprise in search of Sir John Franklin, Jan. 20, 1850. On Sept. 6 he discovered high land, which he named Baring's Land; on the 9th, other land, which he named after Prince Albert; on the 30th the ship was frozen in. Entertaining a strong conviction that the waters in which the Investigator then lay communicated with Barrow's Straits, he set out on Oct. 21, with a few men, in his sledge, to test his views. On Oct. 26 he reached Point Russell (73° 31' N. lat., 114° 14' W. long.), where, from an elevation of 600 feet, he saw Parry or Melville Sound beneath them. The strait connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans he named after the Prince of Wales. The Investigator was the first ship which traversed the Polar Sea from Behring Straits to Behring Island. Intelligence of this discovery was brought to England by Com. Inglefield, and the Admiralty chart was published Oct. 14, 1853. Capt. McClure returned to England Sept., 1854. In 1855, £5000 were paid to Captain (afterward Sir Robert) McClure, and £5000 were distributed among the officers and crew. On Jan. 20, 1855, the Admiralty notified that the Arctic medal would be given to all persons engaged in the expeditions from 1818 to 1855.

den, established a colony in Vermeland, the nucleus of a monarchy, founded by his descendant, Halfdan III., the Black, a great warrior and legislator, whose memory was long revered.

Olaf Trætrelia, 630; slain by his subjects, 640. Halfdan I., 640; Eysteinn I., 700; Halfdan II., 730; Gudrod, 784; Olaf Geirstade and Halfdan III., 824.

Halfdan recovers his inheritance from his brother, whom he subdues, together with the neighboring chiefs, 840; accidentally drowned, 863.

The chiefs regain their power during the youth of his son, Harold Hårfager, or fair-haired, who vows neither to cut nor comb his hair till he recovers his dominion, 865.

He defeats his enemies at Håfursford, 885; dies, 934. Eric I. (the bloody Axe), his son, a tyrant, expelled; and succeeded by Hako the Good, 940.

Hako endeavors in vain to establish Christianity; dies, 963.

Harold II., Graafeld, son of Eric, succeeds; killed in battle with Harold of Denmark, 977.

Hako, Jarl, made governor of several provinces; becomes king; his licentiousness leads to his ruin; deposed by Olaf I., Trygvæson; and slain by his slave, 995.

Olaf I. establishes Christianity by force and cruelty, 998; defeated and slain, during an expedition against Pomerania, by the kings of Denmark and Sweden, who divide Norway between them, 1000.

Olaf II., the saint (his son), lands in Norway, 1012; defeats his enemies and becomes king, 1015; fiercely zealous in the diffusion of Christianity, 1018-21.

Successful invasion of Canute, who becomes king, 1028, 1029; Olaf expelled; returns, and is killed in battle, 1030.

Sweyn, at the death of Canute, succeeds as king of Norway, but is expelled in favor of Magnus I., bastard son of Olaf II., 1035; Magnus becomes King of Denmark, 1036; dies, 1047.

Harold Hardrade, king of Norway, 1047, invades England; defeated and slain by Harold II. at Stamford Bridge, Sept. 25, 1066.

Olaf III. and Magnus II. (sons), kings, Sept. 25, 1066; Olaf alone (pacific), 1069-1093; Olaf III. founds Bergen, 1070.

Magnus III. (barefoot), son of Olaf, 1093; invades the Orkneys and Scotland, 1096; killed in Ireland, 1103.

Sigurd I., Eysteinn II., and Olaf IV. (sons), 1103; Sigurd visits the Holy Land as a warrior-pilgrim, 1107-10; becomes sole king, 1122; dies, 1130.

Magnus IV. (his son) and Harold IV., 1130; Magnus dethroned, 1134.

Harold IV. murdered; succeeded by his sons, Sigurd II., etc.; civil war rages, 1136.

Nicolas Breakspear (afterward Pope Adrian IV.), the papal legate, arrives, reconciles the brothers, and founds the archbishopric of Trondheim, 1152.

Numerous competitors for the crown; civil war; Inge I., Eysteinn III., Hako III., Magnus V., 1136-62.

Magnus V. alone, 1162; rise of Swerro, an able adventurer, who becomes king; Magnus defeated; drowned, 1186.

Swerro rules vigorously; dies, 1202.

Hako, his son, king, 1202; Guthrum, 1204; Inge II., 1205.

Hako IV., bastard son of Swerro, 1207; unsuccessfully invades Scotland, where he dies, 1263.

Magnus VI., his son (the legislator), dies, 1280.

Eric II., the priest-hater, marries Margaret of Scotland; their daughter, the Maid of Norway, becomes heiress to the throne of Scotland, 1286.

Hako V., his brother, king, 1299-1319.

Decline of Norwegian prosperity.

Magnus VII. (III. of Sweden) king, 1319-43.

Hako VI., 1343-80.

Olaf V. of Norway (II. of Denmark), 1380-87.

Norway united with Denmark and Sweden under Margaret, 1389.

At an assembly at Calmar the three states are formally united, 1397.

Sweden and Norway separated from Denmark, 1448; reunited, 1450.

Denmark and Norway separated from Sweden, 1523.

Christiania, the modern capital, built by Christian IV., 1624.

NORWICH (Norfolk), mentioned in history in the Saxon Chronicle at the period when Sweyn, king of Denmark, destroyed it by fire, 1004. Artisans from the Low Countries established here the manufacture of baizes, arras, etc., about 1132. A great plague in 1348 carried off many thousand persons; and in 1505 Norwich was nearly consumed by fire. The Cathedral was first erected in 1088 by Bishop Herbert Losinga, and was completed by Bishop Middleton about 1280. The church of the Black friars, now St. Andrew's Hall, was erected in 1415. The public library was instituted in 1784. The Norwich new canal and harbor were opened June 3, 1831.

NOTABLES. An assembly of the notables of France was convened by Calonne, the minister of Louis XVI., on Feb. 22, 1787, on account of the deranged state of the king's finances, and again in 1788, when Calonne opened his plan; but any reform militated too much against private interest to be adopted; Calonne was dismissed, and soon after retired to England. Louis, having lost his confidential minister, De Vergennes, by death, called De Brienne, an ecclesiastic, to his counsels. The notables were reassembled on Nov. 6, 1788. In the end, the States-General were convoked, Dec. 5; and from this assembly sprang the National Assembly (which see). The notables were dismissed by the king, Dec. 12, 1788.—The Spanish notables assembled and met Napoleon (conformably with a decree issued by him commanding their attendance) at Bayonne, May 25, 1808.

NOTARIES PUBLIC, said to have been appointed by the primitive fathers of the Christian Church to collect the acts or memoirs of the lives of the martyrs in the 1st century.—Du Fresnoy. This office was afterward changed to a legal employment, to attest deeds and writings, so as to establish their authenticity in any other country. An important statute to regulate notarial transactions was passed in 1800, and some statutes on the subject have been enacted since.

"NOTES AND QUERIES," a medium of intercommunication for literary men and general readers, was first published in England on Nov. 3, 1849.

NOTRE DAME, the cathedral at Paris, was founded in 1163.

NOTTINGHAM. The castle here was defended by the Danes against King Alfred and his brother Ethelred, who retook it, 865. It was rebuilt by William I. in 1068, and ultimately became a strong fortress. It was burnt by rioters during the Reform excitement, Oct. 10, 1831. The riots at Nottingham, in which the rioters broke frames, etc., commenced Nov. 14, 1811, and continued to Jan., 1812. Great similar mischief was done in April, 1814. The Watch and Ward Act was enforced Dec. 2, 1816. The British Association met here in 1866.

NOVARA, BATTLE OF, March 23, 1849, when the Austrian Marshal Radetzky totally defeated King Charles Albert and the Sardinian army. The contest began at 10 A.M., and lasted till late in the evening; the Austrians took 396 killed, and had about 1850 wounded; the Sardinians lost between 3000 and 4000 men, 27 cannon, and 3000 prisoners. The king soon after abdicated in favor of his son, Victor Emmanuel.

NOVA SCOTIA (N. America). Settled in 1622 by the Scotch under Sir William Alexander, in the reign of James I. of England, from whom it received the name of Nova Scotia. In 1710 the French included it in Acadia. Since its first settlement it has more than once changed proprietors, and was not confirmed to England till the peace of Utrecht, in 1713. It was taken in 1745 and 1758, but was again confirmed to England in 1760. Nova Scotia was divided into two provinces in 1784, and was erected into a bishopric in August, 1787. King's College, Windsor, was founded in 1788. See Baronets. Gold was found in Nova Scotia in 1861.

NOVATIANS, a sect which denied restoration to the Church to those who had relapsed during times of persecution, begun with Novatian, a Roman presbyter, in 250.

NOVELS (Novelle), a part of Justinian's Code, published 535. See Romances.

NOVEMBER (novem, nine), anciently the ninth month of the year. When Numa added January and February in 713 B.C., it became the eleventh, as now. The Roman senators wished to name this month, in which Tiberius was born, by his name, in imitation of Julius Cæsar and Augustus; but the emperor refused, saying, "What will you do, conscript fathers, if you have thirteen Cæsars?"

NOVGOROD (Central Russia), made the seat of his government by Ruric, a Varangian chief, in 862, is held to be the foundation of the Russian Empire. In memory of the event, the czar inaugurated a national monument at Novgorod on Sept. 20, 1862.

NOVI (N. Italy), BATTLE OF, in which the French army, commanded by Joubert, was defeated by the Russians under Suwarrow, with immense loss, Aug. 15, 1799. Among 10,000 of the French slain was their leader, Joubert, and several other distinguished officers.

NOVUM ORGANON, the great work of Lord Bacon, containing his system of philosophy, was published 1620.

NOYADES. See Drowning.

NUBIA, the ancient Æthiopia supra Ægyptum, said to have been the seat of the kingdom of Meroë, received its name from a tribe named Nubes or Nubates. The Christian kingdom, with Dongola, the capital, lasted till the 14th century, when it was broken up into Mohammedan principalities. It is now subject to the viceroy of Egypt, having been conquered by Ibrahim Pacha in 1822.

NUMANTINE WAR. The war between the Romans and the Celtiberians (Celts who possessed the country near the Iber, now the Ebro) began 140 B.C., on account of the latter having given refuge to their allies the Sigdians, who had been defeated by the Romans. Numantia, an unprotected city, withstood a long siege. The army of Scipio Africanus, 60,000 men, was bravely opposed by no more than 4000 men able to bear arms. The Numantines fed upon horseflesh, and afterward on their own dead, and at last drew lots to kill one another. At length they set fire to their houses, and destroyed themselves, so that not even one remained to adorn the triumph of the conqueror, 133 B.C.

NUMIDIA (N. Africa), the seat of the war of the Romans with Jugurtha, which began 111 B.C., and ended with his subjugation and captivity, 106. The last king, Juba, joined Cato, and was killed at the battle of Thapsus, 46 B.C., when Numidia became a Roman province. See Mauritania.

NUMISMATICS, the science of coins and medals, an important adjunct to the study of history. In England, Evelyn (1697), Addison (1726), and Pinkerton (1789) have published works on medals. Ruding's Annals is the great work on British Coinage (new edition, 1840).—The Numismatic Society in London was founded by Dr. John Lee in 1836. It publishes the Numismatic Chronicle.—Mr. Yonge Akerman's Numismatic Manual (1840) is a useful introduction to the science. Foreign works are numerous.

NUNCIO, an envoy from the pope of Rome to Catholic states. The pope deputed a nuncio to the Irish rebels in 1645. The arrival in London of a nuncio, and his admission to an audience by James II., July, 1687, is stated to have hastened the Revolution.

NUNNERY. The first founded is said to have been that to which the sister of St. Anthony retired at the close of the 3d century. The first founded in France, near Poitiers, by St. Marcellina, sister to St. Martin, 360.—Du Fresnoy. The first in England was at Folkestone, in Kent, by Eadbald, or Edwald, king of Kent, 630.—Dugdale's Monasterium Anglicanum. See Abbeys and Monachism. The nuns were expelled from their convents in Germany in July, 1785. They were driven out of their convents in France in Jan., 1790. In Feb., 1861, monastic establishments were abolished in Naples, compensation being made to the inmates. For memorable instances of the constancy and fortitude of nuns, see Acre and Coldingham.

NUREMBERG, a free imperial German city in 1219. In 1522 the diet here demanded ecclesiastical reforms and a general council, and in 1532 secured religious liberty to the Protestants.

O.

OAK, styled the monarch of the woods, and an emblem of strength, virtue, constancy, and long life. That produced in England is considered to be best calculated for ship-building. The constellation Robur Caroli, the oak of Charles, was named by Dr. Halley in 1676, in memory of the oak-tree in which Charles II. saved himself from his pursuers, after the battle of Worcester, Sept. 3, 1651. See Boscobel. Herne's oak, Windsor Park, mentioned in Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor, was finally destroyed by the wind, Aug. 31, 1663. The evergreen oak, Quercus Ilex, was brought from the south of Europe before 1551. The scarlet oak, Quercus Coccinea, was brought from North America before 1691. The chestnut-leaved oak, Quercus Prunus, from North America before 1730. The Turkey oak, Quercus Erris, from the south of Europe, 1735. The agaric of the oak, in pharmacy, was known as a styptic in 1750. In June, 403, the "Synod of the oak" was held at Chalcedon.

OATES'S PLOT. Titus Oates, at one time chaplain of a ship of war, was dismissed for immoral conduct, and became a lecturer in London. In conjunction with Dr. Tongue, he invented a plot against the Roman Catholics, who he asserted had conspired to assassinate Charles II., and extirpate the Protestant religion. He made it known Aug. 12, 1678, and in consequence about eighteen Roman Catholics were accused, and upon false testimony convicted and executed; among them the aged Viscount Stafford, Dec. 29, 1680. Oates was afterward tried for perjury (in the reign of James II.), and, being found guilty, was fined, put in the pillory, publicly whipped from Newgate to Tyburn, and sentenced to imprisonment for life, May, 1685. On the accession of William and Mary he was pardoned, and a pension of £3 a week granted him, 1689.

OATHS were taken by Abraham, B.C. 1892 (Gen. xxi., 24), and authorized (B.C. 1491) Exod. xxii., 11. The administration of an oath in judicial proceedings was introduced by the Saxons into England, 600.—Kapin. That administered to a judge was settled 1344.

OBELISK. (Greek obelos, a spit, monolithos, a single stone.) The first mentioned in history was that of Rameses, king of Egypt, about 1455 B.C. The Arabians called them Pharaoh's Needles, and the Egyptians priests the Finger of the Sun; they differed very much as to their costliness, magnitude, and magnificence. Several were erected at Rome; one was erected by the Emperor Augustus in the Campus Martius, on the pavement of which was a horizontal dial that marked the hour, about 14 B.C. Of the obelisks brought to Rome by the emperors, several have been restored and set up by various popes, especially Sixtus V. In London are three obelisks: first in Fleet Street, at the top of Bridge Street, erected to the famous John Wilkes, lord mayor of London in 1775; and immediately opposite to it, at the south end of Farringdon Street, stands another of granite, to the memory of Robert Walpole, lord mayor in 1824, erected June 25, 1833; and the third, at the south end of the Blackfriars Road, marks the distance of one mile and a fraction from Fleet Street. An obelisk from Luxor was set up in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, in Oct., 1836.

OBLIVION. In England, in 1660, was passed an act of "free general pardon, indemnity, and oblivion for all treasons and state offenses committed between Jan. 1, 1637, and June 24, 1660." The regicides and certain Irish popish priests were excepted.

OBSERVATORIES. The first is said to have been erected on the top of the Temple of Belus at Babylon. On the tomb of Osymandias, in Egypt, was another, and it contained a golden circle 200 feet in diameter; that at Benares was at least as ancient as these. The first in authentic history was at Alexandria, about 300 B.C., erected by Ptolemy Soter.

OCANA (Central Spain), near which the Spaniards were defeated by the French, commanded by Mortier and Soult, Nov. 19, 1809.

OCEAN MONARCH, an American emigrant ship, left Liverpool, bound for Boston, Aug. 24, 1848, having 396 passengers on board. She had not advanced far into the Irish Channel, being within six miles of Great Ormshead, Lancashire, when she took fire, and in a few hours was burnt to the water's edge, and 178 persons perished.*

OCTARCH, the chief of the kings of the Heptarchy, was called Rex gentis Anglorum. Hengist was the first octarch, 455, and Egbert the last, 800. See Britain. Some authors insist that the English Heptarchy should have been called the Oetarchy, and that Heptarchy is not the correct term.

OCTOBER, the eighth month in the year of Romulus, as its name imports, and the tenth in the year of Numa, 713 B.C. October still retained its first name, although the senate ordered it to be called Favstinus, in honor of Faustina, wife of Antoninus the emperor; and Commodus called it Invictus and Domitianus. October was sacred to Mars.

OCTROIS (from the low Latin auctorium, authority), a term applied to concessions from sovereigns, and to the taxes levied at the gates of towns in France on articles of food before entering the city. These octrois, of ancient origin, were suppressed in 1791, but re-established in 1797, and were reorganized in 1816, 1842, and 1852. In 1859, the octrois of Paris produced above 54 million francs. * The Brazilian steam frigate Alfonso happened to be out on a trial trip at the time, with the Prince and Princess de Joinville and the Duke and Duchess d'Anmale on board, who witnessed the catastrophe, and aided in rescuing and comforting the sufferers with exceeding humanity. They, with the crews and passengers of the Alfonso and the yacht Queen of the Ocean, so effectually rendered their heroic and unwearying services as to save 156 persons from their dreadful situation, and 62 others escaped by various means.

came very popular in July, 1860, by abolishing the Oc-trois.

ODES are nearly as old as the lyre; among the Greeks they were extempore compositions sung in honor of the gods. Anacreon's odes were composed about 532 B.C.; Pindar's, 498 to 446; and Horace's from 24 to 13, all B.C. Anciently odes were divided into strophe, antistrophe, and epode. See Poets Laureate and Lyric Poetry.

ODESSA, a port on the Black Sea, built by the Empress Catharine of Russia in 1784-1792, after the peace of Jassy. In 1817 it was made a free port, since when its prosperity has rapidly increased. It was partially bombarded by the British April 21, 1854, in consequence of the Russian batteries having fired on a flag of truce, April 6. On May 12 the English frigate Tiger stranded here, and was destroyed by Russian artillery. The captain, Giffard, and many of his crew, were killed, and the rest made prisoners.

ODONTOLOGY (from the Greek odontes, teeth), the science of the teeth, may be said to have really begun with the researches of Professor Richard Owen, who in 1839 made the first definite announcement of the organic connection between the vascular and vital soft parts of the frame and the hard substance of a tooth. His comprehensive work, "Odontology" (illustrated with beautiful plates), was published in 1840-5.

ODYL, the name given in 1845 by Baron von Reichenbach to a so-called new "imponderable or influence," said to be developed by magnets, crystals, the human body, heat, electricity, chemical action, and the whole material universe. The odylic force is said to give rise to luminous phenomena, visible to certain sensitive persons only. The baron's "Researches on Magnetism, etc., in relation to the Vital Force," translated by Dr. Gregory, were published in 1850. Emanuel Swedenborg (died 1772) described similar phenomena.

ECUMENICAL BISHOP (from the Greek oikoumenē, the habitable understood globe), "universal bishop," a title assumed by John, bishop of Constantinople, 557.

OFFA'S DIKE, the intrenchment from the Wye to the Dee, made by Offa, king of Mercia, to defend his country from the incursions of the Welsh, 779.

OGDENSBURGH, CAPTURE OF, by a British force of 1200 men, on the 22d of February, 1813. Only about 300 men, under Captain Forsyth, were there to oppose the British. The Americans lost 3 killed and 17 wounded; the British lost 7 killed and 48 wounded.

OGYGES, DELUGE OF (which laid Attica waste for more than two hundred years afterward, and until the arrival of Cecrops), is stated to have occurred 1746 B.C. See Deluge.

OGULNIA LAW, carried by the tribunes Q. and Cn. Ogulnii, increased the number of the pontiffs and augurs, and made plebeians eligible to those offices, B.C. 300.

OHIO, one of the United States, was first settled by a land company under the directions of General Rufus Putnam, at Marietta, in 1788. Other settlements were planted soon afterward. The first territorial Legislature met at Cincinnati in 1799. The Western Reserve, or Five Lands, held by Connecticut, was sold to the government of Ohio, for the benefit of the school fund of the former, in 1800. Ohio was admitted into the Union in 1820.

OHM'S LAW for determining the quantity of the electro-motive force of the Voltaic battery was published in 1827. It is in conformity with the discovery that the earth may be employed as a conductor, thus saving the return wire in electric telegraphy.

OIL was used for burning in lamps as early as the epoch of Abraham, about 1921 B.C. It was the custom of the Jews to anoint with oil persons appointed to high offices, as the priests and kings, Psalms cxxxiii. 2; 1 Sam. x. 1; xvi. 13. The fact that oil, if passed through red-hot iron pipes, will be resolved into a combustible gas, was long known to chemists; and after the process of lighting by coal-gas was made apparent, Messrs. Taylor and Martineau contrived apparatus for producing oil-gas on a large scale, 1815.—Oil Springs. See Petroleum.

OLBERS, the asteroid, discovered by M. Olbers in 1802, is now termed Pallas.

OLD BAILEY SESSIONS COURT is held for the trial of criminals, and its jurisdiction comprehends the county of Middlesex as well as the city of London. It is held eight times in the year by the royal commission of oyer and terminer. The judges are the lord mayor, those aldermen who have passed the chair, the recorder, and the common sergeant, who are attended by both the sheriffs, and one or more of the national judges. The court-house was built in 1773,* and enlarged in 1808. See Central Criminal Court.

OLIVES are named in the earliest accounts of Egypt and Greece; and at Athens their cultivation was taught by Cecrops, 1556 B.C. They were first planted in Italy about 562 B.C. The olive has been cultivated in England since 1648 A.D.; the Cape olive since 1730.

OLTENITZA, BATTLE OF. A large Turkish force having crossed the Danube, under Omar Pasha, established themselves at Oltenitza, in spite of the vigorous attacks of the Russians, who were repulsed with loss, Nov. 2 and 3, 1853. On the 4th a most desperate attempt to dislodge the Turks by General Danneberg, with 9000 men, was defeated with great loss.

OLUSTEE (Florida), BATTLE OF. Fought Feb. 20, 1864. General Truman Seymour was defeated by the Confederates. The battle was fought against the spirit of the instructions given by General Gillmore.

OLYMPIADS, the era of the Greeks, which dates from July 1, 776 B.C., being the year in which Coroebus was successful at the Olympic games. This era was reckoned by periods of four years, each period being called an Olympiad, and in marking a date the year and Olympiad were both mentioned. The computation of Olympiads ceased with the 305th, A.D. 440.

OLYMPIC GAMES, so famous among the Greeks, are said to have been instituted by the Idæi Dactyli, 1453 B.C., or by Pelops, 1307 B.C.; revived by Iphitus, 884 B.C., in honor of Jupiter, and were held at the beginning of every fifth year, on the banks of the Alpheus, near Olympia, in the Peloponnesus, now the Morea, to exercise the youth in five kinds of combats. The conquerors in these games were highly honored. The prize contended for was a crown made of a kind of wild olive, appropriated to this use. In 1858, M. Zappas, a wealthy Peloponnesian, gave funds to re-establish these games, under the auspices of the Queen of Greece, to commence in Oct., 1859.—OLYMPIC THEATRE. See Theatres.

OLYNTHUS, a city, N. Greece, subdued in war by Sparta in 382-379 B.C. It resisted Philip of Macedon, 350 B.C., by whom it was destroyed, 347.

OMENS. See Augury. Amphictyon was the first who is recorded as having drawn prognostications from omens, 1497 B.C. Alexander the Great and Mithridates the Great are said to have studied omens. At the birth of the latter, 131 B.C., there were seen for seventy days together two large comets, whose splendor eclipsed that of the noonday sun, occupying so vast a space as the fourth part of the heavens; and this omen, we are told, directed all the actions of Mithridates throughout his life.—Justin.

OMMIADES, a dynasty of Mohammedan caliphs, beginning with Moawiyah, of whom fourteen reigned in Arabia, 661-750, and eighteen at Cordova, in Spain, 750-1031. Their favorite color was green.

* During some trials in the old court, the lord mayor, one alderman, two judges, the greater part of the jury, and numbers of spectators, caught the jail distemper, and died May, 1750. Again, this disease was fatal to several in 1772. Twenty-eight persons were killed at the execution of Mr. Steele's murderers at the Old Bailey, Feb. 22, 1807.

Paris in April, 1828. The idea of such conveyances is ascribed to Pascal, about 1662, when similar carriages were started, but soon discontinued. They were revived in Paris, April 11, 1828, and introduced into London by a coach proprietor named Shillibeer. The first omnibus started from Paddington to the Bank of England on Saturday, July 4, 1829. In Sept., 1865, it was stated that there were then running about 620 omnibuses belonging to the General Omnibus Company, and 450 belonging to private proprietors. In the United States, horse-cars, running on a rail like a steamer, but drawn by horses, has very much lessened the travel by omnibuses, being thought by most persons a smoother and more agreeable way of travel.

OPERAS. Adam de la Hale, a Trouvère, surnamed "le Bossu d'Arras," born in 1240, is, as far as has yet been ascertained, the composer of the first comic opera, Li Gieus (Le Jeu) de Robin et de Marion. The Italian opera began with the Il Satrio of Cavallieri, and the Dafne of Rinuccini, with music by Peri, about 1590. Their Euridyce was represented at Florence, 1600, on the marriage of Marie de Medicis with Henry IV. of France. L'Orfeo, Favola in Musica, composed by Monteverde, was performed in 1607, and is supposed to have been the first opera that was ever published. About 1669 the Abbot Perrin obtained a grant from Louis XIV. to set up an opera at Paris, where, in 1672, was acted Pomona.—Rossini's Barbire and Otello appeared 1816; Gazza Ladra, 1817; Semiramide, 1823; Guillaume Tell, 1829. Weber's Der Freischütz, 1821; Oberon, 1826. Donizetti's Luceria Borgia, 1840. Meyerbeer's Robert le Diable, 1831; Huguenots, 1836; Prophète, 1849.

OPERAS IN ENGLAND. Sir William Davenant introduced a species of opera in London in 1684. The first regularly performed opera was at York buildings in 1692. The first at Drury Lane was in 1705. The operas of Handel were performed in 1735, and they became general in several of the theatres a few years after. Gay's Beggars' Opera first performed in 1727 at the Lincoln's Inn theatre. It ran for sixty-three successive nights, but so offended the persons in power that the lord chamberlain refused a license for the performance of a second part of it entitled "Polly." This resentment induced Gay's friends to come forward on its publication with so handsome a subscription that his profits amounted to £1200, whereas the Beggars' Opera had gained him only £400.—Life of Gay. See Theatres.

OPERA-HOUSE, THE ITALIAN, or Queen's Theatre. The original building is generally supposed to have been constructed by Sir John Vanbrugh, though Mr. Pennant attributes it to Sir Christopher Wren. It was built, according to this authority, in 1704, and opened April 9, 1705; and burnt down June 17, 1759. The foundation of the new theatre was laid April 3, 1790; and the house was opened Sept. 22, 1791, on an improved plan; the present exterior was erected in 1818, from designs by Mr. Nash.—THE ENGLISH OPERA (or Lyceum) was opened June 15, 1816. It was entirely destroyed by fire, Feb. 16, 1830. The new English Opera-house, or Lyceum, was erected from designs by Mr. S. Beazley, and opened in July, 1834. See Theatres.

OPHTHALMIC HOSPITALS. See Hospitals.

OPHTHALMOSCOPE, an apparatus for inspecting the interior of the eye, invented by Professor H. Helmholtz, and described by him in 1851.

OPIMUM, the juice of the white poppy, was known to the ancients, its cultivation being mentioned by Homer, and its medicinal use by Hippocrates. It is largely cultivated in British India, and was introduced into China by merchants. It conduced to the war of 1839-41. The revenue derived from opium by the Indian government in 1862 was about £7,500,000. Laudanum, a preparation of opium, was employed early in the 17th century. A number of alkaloids have been discovered in opium: narcotine by Derosne, and morphia by Sertürner, in 1803.

OPORTO (W. Portugal), the ancient Calle, by nature one of the most impregnable cities in Europe; the great mart of Portuguese wine known as "Port." A chartered company for the regulation of the port wine trade was established in 1756. The French, under Marshal Soult, were surprised here by Lord Wellington, and defeated in an action fought May 11, 1809. The Miguelites attacked Oporto, and were repulsed by the Pedrites, with considerable loss, Sept. 19, 1832. It has since been the scene of civil war. See Portugal. The Oporto Wine Company was abolished in 1834, but re-established by a royal decree, April 7, 1838. An international exhibition was opened here by the king, Sept. 18, 1865.

ORACLES. The most ancient was that of Dodona, but the most famous was that of Delphi, 1263 B.C. See Delphi and Dodona.

ORANGE. The sweet, or China orange, was first brought into Europe from China by the Portuguese in 1547; and it is asserted that the identical tree, whence all the European orange-trees of this sort were produced, is still preserved at Lisbon, in the gardens of one of its nobility. Orange-trees were first brought to England, and planted, with little success, in 1595; they are said to have been planted at Beddington Park, near Croydon, Surrey.

ORANGE, a principality in S.E. France, formerly a lordship in the 9th or 10th century. It has been ruled by four houses successively: that of Giraud Adhemar (to 1174); of Baux (1182 to 1393); of Chalon (to 1530); and of Nassau (1530 to 1713). See Nassau. Philibert the Great, prince of Orange, the last of the house of Chalon, having been wronged by Francis I. of France, entered the service of the Emperor Charles V., to whom he rendered great services by his military talents. He was killed at the siege of Florence, Aug. 3, 1530. He was succeeded by his nephew-in-law, René of Nassau. See Princes of Orange under Holland. The eldest son of the King of Holland is styled the Prince of Orange, although the principality was ceded to France in 1713.

ORANGE RIVER, a free state in South Africa. The British government transferred (by Sir George Clerk) their powers over this territory to a provisional government, March 29, 1854. A Volksraad (Legislative Council) and governor have been appointed.

ORANGEMEN. The battle of the Diamond, fought in Armagh in Sept., 1795, and the treachery experienced by the Protestants on that occasion, convinced them they would become an easy prey to the Roman Catholics, from their small numbers, unless they associated for their defense. The first Orange lodge was formed in Armagh, Sept. 21, 1795; but the name of Orangemen already existed. An Orange lodge was formed in Dublin; the members published a declaration of their principles (the maintenance of Church and State) in Jan., 1798. It is stated that in 1836 there were 145,000 Orangemen in England, and 125,000 in Ireland, the Duke of Cumberland being grand-master. After a parliamentary inquiry, Orange clubs were broken up at the request of the House of Commons, but revived in 1845. In Oct., 1857, the lord chancellor of Ireland ordered that justices of the peace should not belong to Orange clubs. The Orangemen in Canada were greatly excited during the visit of the Prince of Wales in Sept., 1860. Orange demonstrations in Belfast have led to desperate riots. See Belfast.

ORATOR HENLEY. An English clergyman of some talents and great eccentricity obtained this name by opening what he called his "Oratory" in London in 1726. He had a kind of chapel in Newport Market, where he gave lectures on theological topics on Sundays, and on other subjects on Wednesdays, every week. Novelty procured him a multitude of hearers; but he was too imprudent to gain any permanent advantage from his project. After having served as a butt for the satirical wits, poets, and painters of his time, he removed his oratory to Clare Market, and sank into comparative obscurity and contempt previously to his death in 1756.

ORATORIAN (from the Latin orare, to pray), a regular order of priests, established by St. Philip Neri about 1564, and so called from the oratory of St. Jerome, at Rome, where they prayed. They had a foundation in France, commenced by Father de Berulle, afterward cardinal, 1612.—The Rev. Frederick Faber and others, as "Fathers of the Oratory," established themselves first in King William Street, Strand, in 1848, and afterward at Brompton.

ORATORIO, a kind of sacred drama, the subject of it being generally taken from the Scriptures, set to music.—Mason. The origin of oratories, so named from having been first performed in an oratory, is ascribed to St. Philip Neri, about 1550. The first oratorio in London was performed in Lincoln's Inn Theatre, in Portugal Street, in 1732. Handel's oratorio of "Israel in Egypt" was produced in 1738, and the "Messiah" in 1741; Haydn's "Creation" in 1798; Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in 1837, and "Elijah" in 1846.

ORCHOMENUS, a small Greek state in Boeotia, was destroyed by the Thebans 368 B.C.; restored by Philip II. of Macedon, 354, and given up by him to Thebes, 346.

ORDEAL was known among the Greeks and Jews (Num. v., 2). It was introduced into England by the Saxons. A prisoner who pleaded not guilty might choose whether he would put himself for trial upon God and his country, by twelve men, as at this day, or upon God only. The ordeal was abolished in 1261.

ORDERS. See Knighthood.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL were issued by the British government Jan. 7, and Nov. 11, 1807, prohibiting trade with the ports occupied by the French. They were reprisals for Napoleon's Berlin decree (which see). These restrictions greatly checked the progress of manufactures in this country, and caused much distress till their removal in 1814.

ORDINATION of ministers in the Christian Church began with Christ and his apostles. See Mark iii., 14, and Acts vi. and xiv., 23. In England, in 1549, a new form of ordination of ministers was ordered to be prepared by a committee of six prelates and six divines.

ORDNANCE OFFICE. Before the invention of guns, this office was supplied by officers under the following names: the bowyer; the cross-bowyer; the galeater, or purveyor of helmets; the armorer; and the keeper of the tents. Henry VIII. placed it under the management of a master general, a lieutenant, surveyor, etc. The master general was chosen from among the first generals in the service of the sovereign. The appointment was formerly for life; but since the Restoration, was held durante bene placito, and not infrequently by a cabinet minister.—Beaton. The letters-patent for this office were revoked May 25, 1555, and its duties vested in the minister of war, Lord Panmure. The last master general was Lord Fitzroy Somerset, afterward Lord Raglan.

ORDNANCE SURVEY. The trigonometrical survey of England was commenced by Gen. Roy in 1783, continued by Col. Colby, and completed by Col. (now Sir Henry) James in 1856. The publication of the maps commenced in 1819, under the direction of Col. Mudge, and was completed in 1862; the southern part on the scale of one inch to the mile, the northern six inches to the mile; a large part of these maps have been colored geologically. The survey of Ireland has been completed and published; that of Scotland is still going on.

OREGON TERRITORY. A dispute respecting boundaries arose in 1845 between the British government and that of the United States, which was settled by treaty, June 12, 1846. Oregon was admitted as a state by the Union in Feb., 1859.

ORGANIC SYNTHESIS. See Chemistry.

ORGANS. Their invention is attributed to Archimedes about 220 B.C.; and to one Ctesibius, a barber of Alexandria, about 100 B.C. The organ was brought to Europe from the Greek Empire, and was first applied to religious devotions in churches in A.D. 657.—Bellarmino. Organs were used in the Western churches by Pope Vitalianus in 658.—Ammonius. It is affirmed that the organ was known in France in the time of Louis I., 815, when one was constructed by an Italian priest. The organ at Haarlem is one of the largest in Europe: it has 60 stops and 8000 pipes. At Seville is one with 1000 stops and 5300 pipes. The organ at Amsterdam has a set of pipes that imitate a chorus of human voices. Of the organs in England, that at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, by Mr. Willis, is the largest; next in order, that at York minster, and that in the Music Hall, Birmingham. In London, the largest is perhaps that of Spitalfields church; and that in Christ Church is nearly as extensive. The erection of the famous Temple organ was competed for by Schmidt and Harris: after long disputes, the question was referred to vote, and Mr. Jefferies, afterward chief justice, gave the casting vote in favor of Schmidt (called Father Smith) about 1682. A monster organ was erected in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, in June 1857. In Boston, Mass., there is an organ, second only in size to the one in Haarlem. It was first opened on occasion of the great fair for the benefit of our soldiers, Christmas week, 1863.

ORIEL COLLEGE (Oxford), founded in 1327 by Adam de Brome, archdeacon of Stow, and almoner to King Edward II. This college derives its name from a tenement called l'Orïole, on the site of which the building stands.

ORIFLAMME. See Auriflamma.

ORIGENISTS pretended to draw their opinions from the writings of Origen (who lived 185-253). They maintained that Christ was the Son of God no other way than by adoption and grace; that souls were created before the bodies; that the sun, moon, stars, and the waters that are under the firmament, had all souls; that the torments of the damned shall have an end; and that the fallen angels shall, after a time, be restored to their first condition. They were condemned by councils, and the reading of Origen's works was forbidden.—Burke. These doctrines were condemned by the Council of Constantinople in 553.

ORKNEY AND SHETLAND ISLES (North of Scotland) were conquered by Magnus III. of Norway, 1099, and were ceded to James III. as the dowry of his wife Margaret in 1469. The Orkneys were the ancient Orkades: united with Shetland, they now form one of the Scotch counties. The bishopric of Orkney, founded by St. Servanus early in the 5th century, some affirm by St. Colm, ended with the abolition of episcopacy in Scotland, about 1689. See Bishops.

ORLEANS (a city in Central France), formerly Aurélianum; gave title to a kingdom, 491, and afterward to a duchy, usually held by one of the royal family. It was besieged by the English under John Talbot, afterward Earl of Shrewsbury, Oct. 12, 1428, and was bravely defended by Gaucour, the more so, as its fall would have ruined the cause of Charles VI., king of France. It was relieved by the heroism of Joan of Arc, afterward surnamed the Maid of Orleans, April 29, 1429, and the siege was raised. See Joan of Arc.

Siege of Orleans, when the Duke of Guise was killed, 1563.

DUKES OF ORLEANS.

Louis contended for the regency with John the Fearless, duke of Burgundy, by whose instigation he was assassinated in 1407.

Charles taken prisoner at Agincourt, 1415; released, 1440; died, 1465.

Louis became Louis XII. of France in 1498, when the duchy merged in the crown.

BOURBON BRANCH.

Philip, youngest son of Louis XIII., born 1640, died 1701.

Philip II., son, born 1673; becomes REGENT 1715; dies 1723.

Louis, son, born 1703, died 1752.

Louis Philippe, son, born 1725, died 1785.

Louis Philippe Joseph, son, born 1747; opposed the court in the French Revolution; takes the name Egalité, Sept. 11, 1792; voted for the death of Louis XVI.; was guillotined Nov. 6, 1793.

Louis Philippe, son, born Nov. 6, 1773; chosen King of the French, Aug. 9, 1830; abdicated Feb. 24, 1848; died Aug. 26, 1850. See France.

Ferdinand Philippe, son, duke of Orleans, born Sept. 3, 1810; died, through a fall, July 13, 1842.

Louis Philippe, son, count of Paris, born Aug. 24, 1838, married Maria Isabella, daughter of the Duke of Montpensier, May 30, 1864. A daughter, Maria Amelia, born Sept. 28, 1865.

ORMULUM, a metrical version of the Gospels and Acts, in early English, made by Orm, an ecclesiastic, in the 12th century, printed at Oxford in 1852, from a MS. in the Bodleian.

ORNITHOLOGY. See Birds.

ORNITHORHYNCHUS, the duck-billed platypus, or water-mole, a singular compound of the mammal and the bird, a native of Australia, was first described by Dr. Shaw in 1819.

ORPHAN HOUSES. The Emperor Trajan first formed establishments for this purpose. Pliny relates in his Panegyric that Trajan had caused five thousand free-born children to be sought out and educated, about 105. Orphan houses, properly so called, are mentioned for the first time in the laws of the Emperor Justinian. At the court of Byzantium, the office of inspector of orphans, orphanothropos, was so honorable that it was held by the brother of the Emperor Michael IV. in the 11th century. See Foundling Hospitals.

ORRERY, a planetary machine to illustrate and explain the motions of the heavenly bodies, appears to have been coeval with the clepsidra. Ptolemy devised the circles and epicycles that distinguish his system about 130. The planetary clock of Finée was begun 1563. The planetarium of De Rheita was formed about 1650. The planetarium, now termed the orrery, it is said, was constructed by Rowley, after a pattern devised by the clock-maker George Graham, at the expense of Charles Boyle, earl of Orrery, about 1715.

ORSIN'S PLOT against the Emperor Napoleon III. See France, Jan., 1858.

ORTHEZ or ORTHEZ (S. France), BATTLE OF, between the British and Spanish armies on one side, and the French on the other, the former commanded by Wellington, and the latter by Marshal Soult. In this engagement the British gained a great and decisive victory, Feb. 27, 1814. The victory was soon followed by the battle of Toulouse (which see).

OSBORNE HOUSE (Isle of Wight), was purchased by the queen in 1845, and rebuilt by Mr. Cubitt.

OSMIUM, the heaviest known metal, discovered in platinum ore by Tennant in 1804.

OSSORY (S. E. Ireland), BISHOPRIC OF, was first planted at Saiger, about 402; translated to Aghavoe, in Upper Ossory, in 1052; and to Kilkenny about the end of the reign of Henry II. It was united to Ferns and Leighlin in 1842.

OSTEND (Belgium) is famous for the long siege it sustained against the Spaniards, from July, 1601, to Sept., 1604, when it honorably capitulated. On the death of Charles II. of Spain, the French seized Ostend; but in 1706, after the battle of Ramilles, it was retaken by the Allies. It was again taken by the French in 1745, but restored in 1748. In 1756, the French garrisoned this town for the Empress-queen Maria Theresa. In 1792, the French once more took Ostend, which they evacuated in 1793, and repossessed in 1794. The English destroyed the works of the Bruges Canal; but the wind shifting before they could re-embark, they surrendered to the French, May 19, 1798. See Cuba, note.

OSTRACISM (from the Greek ostrakon, a potsherd or shell), a mode of proscription at Athens, is said to have been first introduced by the tyrant Hippias; by others it is ascribed to Cleisthenes, about 510 B.C. The people wrote the names of those whom they most suspected upon small shells; these they put in an urn or box, and presented it to the senate. Upon a scrutiny, he whose name was oftenest written was sentenced by the council to be banished from his altar and hearth. 6000 votes were required. Aristides, noted for his justice, Miltiades, for his victories, etc., were ostracized. It was abolished by ironically proscribing Hyperbolus, a mean person.

OSTROGOTHS, or EASTERN GOTHs, were distinguished from the Visigoths (Western Goths) about 350. After ravaging Eastern Europe, Thrace, etc., their great leader, Theodoric, established a kingdom in Italy, which lasted from 493 to 553. See Italy.

OSTROLENKA, BATTLE OF, between the Poles and Russians, May 26, 1831. The slaughter was immense, but the Poles remained masters of the field.

OSTRICH (the struthio of the ancients), a native of Africa (see Job xxxix., 14). Ostriches were hatched and reared at San Donato, near Florence, 1859-60.

OSWEGO, FORT. This fort, at Oswego, on Lake Ontario, was built by the English. It was captured by Montcalm in 1756, and was nearly demolished. There was a small garrison there in the spring of 1813, when, on the 5th of May, 1814, a British fleet, with 3000 men, appeared before it. Of these, 1750 landed, and attacked the fort. They were repulsed by the garrison under Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell. The Americans lost, in killed, wounded, and missing, 69; that of the British, in killed, wounded, drowned, and missing, 235.

OTAKEITE, or TAUTU, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, seen by Byron in 1765, and visited in 1767 by Captain Wallis, who called it George the Third Island. Captain Cook came hither in 1768 to observe the transit of Venus; sailed round the whole island in a boat, and staid three months; it was visited twice afterward by that celebrated navigator. See Cook. Omai, a native of this island, was brought over to England by Captain Cook, and carried back by him in his last voyage. In 1799, King Pomare ceded the district of Matavai to some English missionaries. Queen Pomare was compelled to put herself under the protection of France, Sept. 9, 1843. She retracted, and Otakeite and the neighboring islands were taken possession of by Admiral Dupetit-Thouars in the name of the French king, Nov., 1843. The French imprisoned Mr. Prichard, the English consul, March 5, 1844, but the act was censured in France.

OTTAWA (formerly BYTOWS), on the River Ottawa, received its name when it was appointed to be the capital of Canada by the queen in August, 1853. The executive council met here Nov. 22, 1865. Population in 1861, 14,669.

OTTERBURN (Northumberland). In 1388 the Scots besieged Newcastle, and were driven off by Henry Percy (Hotspur), son of the Earl of Northumberland. Percy pursued them to Otterburn, where a battle was fought on Aug. 10, in which the Earl of Douglas was killed and Percy taken prisoner. On this battle the ballad of Chevy Chase is founded.

OTTOMAN EMPIRE. See Turkey.

OUDE (North India), formerly a viceroyalty held by the vizier of the Great Mogul. About 1760 it was seized by the Vizier Sujah-ud-Dowlah, ancestor of the late king.

Oude is said to be prospering under British rule.

OUDENARDE (Belgium), where, on July 11, 1708, the English and allies under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene thoroughly defeated the French besiegers.

OUTLART (S.E. Ireland), where a body of 5000 Irish insurgents attacked the king's troops, in small number, May 27, 1798. The North Cork militia, after great feats of bravery, were cut to pieces, five men only escaping.—Musgrave.

OUNCE, the sixteenth part of the pound avoirdupois, and twelfth of the pound troy. The word is from uncia; and its precise weight was fixed by Henry III., who decreed that an English ounce should be 640 dry grains of wheat; that twelve of these ounces should be a pound; and that eight pounds should be a gallon of wine, 1233.

OURIQUE (Portugal), where Alfonso, count or duke of Portugal, encountered five Saracen kings and a prodigious army of Moors, July 25, 1139, and signally defeated them. He was hailed king upon the spot. Lisbon, the capital, was taken, and he soon after was here crowned as the first king, the Moorish dominion being overthrown.

OUZEL GALLEY SOCIETY. In 1700, the case of a ship in the port of Dublin, the Ouzel Galley, excited great legal perplexity, and was referred to an arbitration of merchants, whose prompt decision was highly approved. This led to the formation of the present society in 1705.

OVATION, an inferior triumph which the Romans allowed those generals of their army whose victories were not considerable. Publius Posthumus Tubertus was the first who was decreed an ovation, 503 B.C. A sheep (ovis) was offered by the general instead of a bull.

OVERSEERS of the poor for parishes were appointed in 1601. See Poor Laws.

OWHYHEE or HAWAII, an island in the N. Pacific Ocean, discovered in 1775 by Capt. Cook. On Feb. 14, 1779, he here fell a victim to a sudden resentment of the natives. A boat having been stolen by one of the islanders, the captain went on shore to seize the king, and keep him as a hostage till the boat was restored. The people would not submit to this insult, and their resistance brought on hostilities, and Captain Cook and some of his companions were killed. Great progress has been recently made in civilization here; and an order of nobility and a representative assembly were instituted in 1860. The population then was about 120,000.

OXALIC ACID, which exists in several plants, especially in sorrel, is now abundantly obtained, for use in the arts, from sawdust acted upon by caustic potash or soda, according to Dr. Dale's process, patented in 1862.

Divinity, Law, Medicine, Hebrew, Greek, 1540, etc.

RECENT CHANCELLORS.

- 1809. Lord Grenville.
- 1834. The Duke of Wellington.
- 1892. The Earl of Derby.

OXFORD'S ASSAULT ON THE QUEEN. A youth named Edward Oxford, who had been a servant in a public house, discharged two pistols at her majesty Queen Victoria and Prince Albert as they were proceeding up Constitution Hill in an open phaeton from Buckingham Palace, June 10, 1840. He stood within a few yards of the carriage; but, fortunately, neither her majesty nor the prince was injured. Oxford was subsequently tried at the Old Bailey (July 10), and, being adjudged to be insane, was sent to Bethlehem Hospital.

OXYGEN, a gas (named from the Greek oxus, sharp, as being generally found in acids), is the most abundant of all substances, constituting about one third of the solid earth, and forming by weight nine tenths of water and one fourth of the atmosphere. It was first separated from red oxide of mercury by Priestley, Aug. 1, 1774, and by Scheele, who was ignorant of Priestley's discovery, in 1775. It is the chief supporter of animal life by respiration, and of combustion.* See Ozone.

OYER AND TERMINER, a commission directed to the judges of the courts, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, felonies, etc., 1285.

O YES! A corruption of the French oyez, hear ye! The ancient term used by a public crier to enjoin silence and attention.

OYSTER (the Latin Ostrea edulis), is said to have its capital in Britain; for, though found elsewhere on the coasts of Europe, in no part of them does it attain such perfection as in British seas. British oysters are celebrated by the Roman satirist Juvenal (Sat. iv., 140) about 100. The robbery of oyster-beds is prohibited by 7 & 8 Geo. IV., c. 29 (1826). About 15,000 bushels of oysters are said to be produced from the Essex beds alone. In 1853 M. Coste commenced rearing oysters in great numbers on the coast of Brittany, and his plan has been found successful.

OZONE (from ozein, to yield an odor), a name given in 1840 by M. Schönbein, of Basel, to the odor in the atmosphere developed during the electric discharge. It is considered to be a modification of the oxygen (which see), and when occurring naturally, to have an effect on health. It is also produced by the action of moist air on phosphorus. In 1853 ozonometers had been constructed by Dr. Lankester and others. M. Schönbein has since discovered another modification of oxygen, which he terms antozone (1859), which hitherto has been found only in the compound state (in peroxides of sodium, potassium, etc.). On Dec. 4, 1865, the French Academy of Sciences appointed a committee of eminent philosophers to inquire into the nature and relations of ozone.

PACIFICATION, EDICTS OF. The name usually given to the edicts of toleration granted by the French kings to the Protestants. See Ghent.

First edict, by Charles IX., permitting the exercise of the Reformed religion near all the cities and towns in the realm.....Jan., 1562
The Reformed religion permitted in the houses of lords justiciaries, and certain other persons, March, 1563

These edicts revoked, and all Protestant ministers ordered to quit France in fifteen days.....1568
Edict allowing lords and others to have service in their houses, and granting public service in certain towns.....1570

[In August, 1572, the same monarch authorized the massacre of St. Bartholomew. See Bartholomew.]
Edict of Pacification by Henry III., April; revoked Dec., 1576; renewed for six years.....Oct., 1577
[Several edicts were published against the Protestants after the six years expired.]

Edict of Henry IV., renewing that of Oct., 1577, 1591
Edict of Nantes (which see), by Henry IV., April 13, 1598
Pacification (which see) of Nismes.....July 14, 1629

PACIFIC OCEAN. See Magellan.—STEAM VESSEL. See Steam, 1851; Wrecks, 1856.

PADLOCKS are said to have been invented by Becher at Nuremberg, 1540, but are mentioned much earlier.

PADUA, the Roman Patavium, in Venetia, N. Italy, said to have been founded by Antenor soon after the fall of Troy, 1183 B.C. It flourished under the Romans. Patavian Latin was considered very corrupt, and is traced in Livy, a native of Padua. After being an independent republic, Padua was ruled by the Carrara family from 1318 till 1405, when it was seized by the Venetians. The University was founded about 1228.

PAGANS, the heathen, idolaters, gentiles, worshippers of idols, not agreeing in any set form or points of belief. Constantine ordered the pagan temples to be destroyed throughout the Roman Empire, 331; his nephew, Julian, attempted their restoration, 361; but Paganism was renounced by the Roman senate in 335, and finally overthrown in the reign of Theodosius the Younger, about 391.

PAINS AND PENALTIES. See Queen Caroline.

* An oxygen gas company was announced in Dec., 1864: its object is the cheap manufacture of oxygen for its application to the production of perfect combustion in lamps, stoves, furnaces, etc.

PAINTING. Osymandyas (in Egypt) caused his exploits to be represented in painting, 2100 B.C.—Usher. Pausanias of Sicily was the inventor of the encaustic, a method of burning the colors into wood or ivory, about 360-330 B.C. The ancients considered Sicily the nursery of painters. Antipholes, an Egyptian, is said to have been the inventor of the grotesque, 332 B.C.—Pliny. The art was introduced at Rome from Etruria by Quintus Fabius, styled Pictor, 291 B.C.—Livy.* The first excellent pictures were brought from Corinth by Mummius, 146 B.C. After the death of Augustus, not a single painter of eminence appeared for several ages; Ludius, who was very celebrated, is supposed to have been the last, about A.D. 14. Painting on canvas seems to have been known at Rome in 66. Bede, the Saxon historian, who died in 735, knew something of the art. It revived about the end of the 13th century, and to Giovanni Cimabue, of Florence, is awarded the honor of its restoration. It was at once encouraged and generously patronized in Italy. John van Eyck, of Bruges, and his brother Hubert, are regarded as the founders of the Flemish school of painting in oil, 1415.—Dufresnoy. Paulo Ucello was the first who studied perspective. About 1523 Henry VIII. patronized Holbein, and invited Titian to his court.†

* Parrhasius of Ephesus and Zeuxis were contemporary painters. These artists once contended for pre-eminence in their profession, and when they exhibited their respective pieces the birds came to peck the grapes which Zeuxis had painted. Parrhasius then produced his piece, and Zeuxis said, "Remove the curtain, that we may see the painting." The curtain itself was the painting, and Zeuxis acknowledged himself to be conquered, exclaiming, "Zeuxis has deceived the birds, but Parrhasius has deceived Zeuxis!" Parrhasius dressed in a purple robe, and wore a crown of gold, calling himself king of painters, 415 B.C.—Plutarch.

† In Aug., 1860, the sale of Lord Northwick's pictures occupied eighty-one days. It produced £35,725. A Carlo Dolce fetched £2010, and a Murillo £1400. The Bicknell collection, sold in April, 1863, produced £25,900.

PALACES. See Buckingham, St. James's, Parliament, Escorial, Tuileries, St. Cloud, Versailles, etc.

PALEOLOGY, a family which reigned as emperors of the East from 1260 to 1453. George Paleologus raised Alexius Comnenus to the throne in 1081, and thereby founded his own family. Andrew, the last Paleologus, son of Thomas, ruler of the Morea, after the overthrow of his father, became a Mohammedan at Constantinople about 1533.

PALEONTOLOGY (from the Greek palaios, ancient, and onta, beings) treats of the evidences of organic beings in the earth's strata. It is a branch of geology (which see). Cuvier, Mantell, Agassiz, Owen, Edward Forbes, and Blainville, all of the present century, may be reckoned as fathers of this science. The Palæontographical Society, which publishes elaborate monographs of British organic remains, was founded in 1847. Professor Owen's "Palæontology" was published in 1860. "Nearly 40,000 species of animals and plants have been added to the Systema Nature by palæontological research."—Huxley. See Man.

PALATINATE OF THE RHINE, one of the seven ancient electorates of Germany. It was long united to Bavaria, but was separated in 1294.—Frederick V., the elector palatine in 1610, married in 1613 Elizabeth, the daughter of James I. of England, and thus became the ancestor of Queen Victoria. See Hanover. In 1619 he was elected King of Bohemia, but lost all by his defeat by the Austrians at Prague in 1620. The Palatinate was horribly ravaged by Tilly in 1622, and by the French in 1688.* The elector palatine, Charles Theodore, inherited Bavaria in 1778, since when the two electorates have been united. See Bavaria.

PALATINE. William the Conqueror made his nephew, Hugh D'Abrucis, Count Palatine of Chester, with the title of earl, about 1070. Edward III. created the Palatine of Lancaster, 1359. See Lancaster, duchy of. The bishoprics of Ely (963) and Durham were also made county palatines. The latter was vested in the crown in 1536. There is also mention of the county palatine of Hexham, in 33 Henry VIII., c. 10, which then belonged to the Archbishop of York, but by the 14th of Elizabeth it was dissolved, and made part of the county of Northumberland. The palatine jurisdiction of Durham was separated from the diocese, and vested in the crown, 6 William IV., c. 19, June 21, 1836.

PALERMO (N.W. Sicily), the ancient Panormus. It has been held by the Carthaginians, 415 B.C.; taken by the Romans, 254 B.C.; by the Saracens, A.D. 832; and by the Normans, 1072. Here Roger II. was crowned King of Sicily, 1130. Palermo was the scene of the Sicilian Vespers (which see), March 30, 1282. It suffered from earthquake in 1726 and 1740. King Ferdinand resided at Palermo from 1806 to 1815, while Naples was ruled by Joseph Bonaparte and Joachim Murat. It revolted against the tyranny of Ferdinand II., Jan. 12, 1848. It was attacked by General Filangieri, March 29, 1849, and surrendered on May 14. It was taken by Garibaldi, June 6, 1860.

PALESTINE. See Jews. After being several times conquered by the Saracens, and retaken from the 7th to the 10th century, and after being the scene of the wars of the Crusades (which see), and other conflicts, Palestine was united to the Ottoman Empire by Selim I. in 1516. See Bible (note),† Holy Places, and Syria.

PALESTRO (N. Italy), where the Sardinians defeated the Austrians, May 30, 31, 1859.

PALL, PALLIUM, in the Roman Church an ensign of dignity conferred by the pope upon archbishops. By a decretal of Pope Gregory XI. (about 1370), no archbishop could call a council, bless the chrism, consecrate churches, ordain a clerk, or consecrate a bishop, till he had received his pall from the See of Rome. The pall was first worn by an Irish archbishop in 1152, when Gelasius was recognized as primate of all Ireland.

PALLADIUM, the statue of Pallas. Some authors say it fell from heaven near the tent of Ius, as he was building Ilium, and that on its preservation depended the safety of Troy, which the oracle of Apollo declared should never be taken so long as the Palladium was found within its walls. This being made known, the Greeks stole it away during the Trojan War, 1184 B.C., though some maintain that it was only a statue of similar size and shape, and that the real Palladium was conveyed from Troy to Italy by Æneas, 1183 B.C., and preserved by the Romans with the greatest secrecy in the Temple of Vesta, and esteemed the destiny of Rome.—Palladium is a rare metal discovered in platinum ore by Dr. Wollaston in 1803.

PALLAS,† the planet, was discovered by Olbers, at Bremen, March 28, 1802.

* About 7000 of poor Protestants, from the banks of the Rhine, driven from their habitations by the French, arrived in England, and were encamped at Blackheath and Camberwell: a brief was granted to collect alms for them. Five hundred families went under the protection of the government to Ireland, and settled chiefly about Limerick, where Parliament granted them £24,000 for their support. Three thousand were sent to New York and Hudson's Bay; but, not having been received kindly, they went to Pennsylvania, and being there greatly encouraged by the Quakers, they invited over some thousands of German and Swiss Protestants, who soon made this colony flourishing, 7 Anne, 1709.—Anderson.

† By means of the Palestine exploration fund, Captain Wilson and a party left England for Palestine in November, 1865, and arrived at Damascus on the 20th of December following.

‡ It is distant from the sun about 263 millions of miles, and completes its revolution in four years seven months and one third of a month. Schroeter, a German astronomer, estimated its diameter to be 2099 miles, and consequently near the size of our moon. It presents a ruddy aspect, and is surrounded with a nebulousity. It is distinguished from all the other planets by the very great inclination of its orbit to the plane of the ecliptic, which is no less than 34 degrees 35 minutes.

PALL MALL, a street near St. James's palace, London, is named from a French game at ball (paillle maille, being a wooden mallet) having been played there about 1621. Among eminent inhabitants were Neil Gwyn and Dr. Thomas Sydenham.

PALMERSTON ADMINISTRATION.* The resignation of the Aberdeen administration was announced Feb. 1, 1855, but nearly all its members returned to office soon after under Lord Palmerston, Lord Derby and Lord John Russell having each in vain endeavored to form an administration. On Feb. 22, Mr. Gladstone, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Sidney Herbert resigned on account of the Sebastopol inquiry. Lord John Russell resigned July 13. Lord Canning was appointed Governor General of India, July 4, 1855. This cabinet resigned Feb. 20, 1858, in consequence of a vote of censure upon the government for introducing the Foreign Conspiracy Bill. It was succeeded by the Derby administration (which see).

First Lord of the Treasury, Henry Viscount Palmerston. Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth.

President of the Council, Earl Granville.

Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Argyll; Earl of Harrowby; afterward the Marquess of Clanricarde.

Secretaries—Home, Sir George Grey; Foreign, Earl of Clarendon; Colonial, Sidney Herbert (resigned Feb. 22); afterward Lord J. Russell (resigned July 13); Sir William Molesworth (died Oct. 22, 1855); next, Henry Labouchere; War, Lord Panmure.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, W. Gladstone (resigned Feb. 22); next, Sir G. Cornwall Lewis.

First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir James Graham (resigned Feb. 22); next, Sir Charles Wood.

Board of Control, Sir Charles Wood; next, R. Vernon Smith.

Public Works, Sir W. Molesworth; next, Sir B. Hall (appointed July 22, 1855).

Postmaster General, Viscount Canning (appointed Governor General of India, July 4); next, Duke of Argyll.

President of the Board of Trade, Lord Stanley of Alderley.

Marquess of Lansdowne, without office.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, M. T. Baines (appointed Nov. 24, 1855).

PALMERSTON-RUSSELL ADMINISTRATION. The Derby administration (which see) resigned June 11, 1859. Earl Granville was requested by the queen to form an administration, and obtained the support of Lord Palmerston, but not of Lord John Russell: the last two then united to form a cabinet, which came into office June 18, 1859. On the decease of Lord Palmerston, Oct. 18, 1865, Earl Russell became premier. See Russell.

First Lord of the Treasury, Henry Viscount Palmerston. Lord High Chancellor, John Lord Campbell (died June 23, 1861); succeeded by Sir Richard Bethell, made Lord Westbury, who resigned July 4, 1865; succeeded by Lord Cranworth.

Lord President of the Council, Earl Granville.

Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Argyll.

Secretaries—Foreign Affairs, Lord John (afterward Earl) Russell; Colonies, Duke of Newcastle; succeeded by Edward Cardwell, April 8, 1864; Home, Sir G. Cornwall Lewis, succeeded by Sir George Grey; War, Sidney (afterward Lord) Herbert, succeeded by Sir G. C. Lewis (died April 13, 1863), and by Earl De Grey (May 1); India, Sir Charles Wood. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Wm. Ewart Gladstone.

First Lord of the Admiralty, Duke of Somerset.

President of the Board of Trade, Thos. Milner Gibson.

[This office was offered to Mr. R. Cobden, and declined by him.]

Secretary of State for Ireland, Edward Cardwell, succeeded by Sir R. Peel (not in the cabinet).

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Sir George Grey, Bart., succeeded by Edward Cardwell, and by Earl Clarendon, April 8, 1864.

Postmaster General, Earl of Elgin (proceeded to China in April, 1860); succeeded by Lord Stanley of Alderley, appointed Sept., 1860.

Poor-law Board, Charles P. Villiers (July 9, 1860).

PALM SUNDAY. When Christ made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, multitudes of the people who were come to the feast of the Passover took branches of the palm-tree, and went forth to meet him, with acclamations and hosannas, 33. It is usual, in some countries, to carry palms on the Sunday before Easter, hence called Palm Sunday.

PALMYRA (Syria). The ruins, chiefly of white marble, discovered by some English travelers in 1678, prove Palmyra to have been more extensive and splendid than even Rome itself. It was supposed to have been the Tadmor in the wilderness built by Solomon, but was manifestly Grecian. The brilliant part of the history of Palmyra was under Odenatus and his queen Zenobia. Odenatus died, and Zenobia assumed the title of Queen of the East in 267. Aurelian defeated her at Adessa, and made her captive, 273. From that time Palmyra ceased to make a figure in history. It is now inhabited by only a few Arab families. The ruins were visited in 1751 by Mr. Wood, who published an account of them in 1753. Mr. Dawkins also visited Palmyra; and Mr. Bruce, on ascending a neighboring mount, was overcome with the magnificent sight.

PALO ALTO, BATTLE OF. General Taylor, in command of the army of occupation in Texas, marched from Point Isabel on the evening of the 7th of May, 1846, to the relief of Fort Brown, opposite Matamoras. See Fort Brown. At noon the next day he discovered a Mexican army, under General Arista, full 6000 strong, drawn up in battle order upon a beautiful prairie called Palo Alto. Taylor, with little more than 2000 men, attacked him. The contest lasted five hours. At twilight the Mexicans gave way and fled. The Americans lost, in killed and wounded, 53; the Mexican loss was about 600. See Mexican War.

PAMPELUNA (N. E. Spain, taken by the French on their invasion of Spain) was invested by the British, between whom and the French obstinate conflicts took place, July 27 and 29, 1813. It surrendered to the British Oct. 31 in that year.

PAMPHLET. The first appearance of pamphlets among us is generally thought to have been in opposition to the errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome. Those who were first convinced of the reasonableness of the "new learning," as it was then called, propagated their opinions in small pieces, which were cheaply printed, and (what was then of great importance) easily concealed. Political pamphlets began in Edward VI.'s time, and were very numerous in the 17th century. Large collections are in the libraries of the British Museum and the Royal and London Institutions.

PANAMÁ, the isthmus which joins the two Americas. Across this a ship canal has been proposed; and a railway was opened in 1855. In that year a new state, New Granada, was divided into eight federal states, one of which is named PANAMÁ. A revolution took place in Panamá on March 9, 1865; the government was deposed, and Don Jil Colunje became president.

PANDECTS. A digest of the civil law made by order of Justinian, about 529. It is stated that these Pandects (which condensed all the then known laws) were accidentally discovered in the ruins of Amalfi, 1137; were removed from Pisa in 1415, and now preserved in the library of the Medici at Florence, as the Pandectæ Florentinæ.

PANICS, COMMERCIAL, generally the result of over-speculation. See Bubbles, South Sea, Law's. The last in England were in 1826, through bubble companies; in 1847, through the railway mania; in 1857, through American failures; and in April, 1859, through the fear of a Continental War.

PANNONIA, part of Illyria, now Hungary, was finally subdued by Tiberius, 8.

PANORAMAS, the invention of Robert Barker, are bird's-eye views painted in distemper round the wall of a circular building. In 1788 he exhibited at Edinburgh a view of that city, being the first picture of the kind. He then commenced similar exhibitions in London, having adopted the name 'Panorama' to attract notice, and was ultimately enabled to build commodious premises in Leicester Square for that purpose. He died in April, 1806.

PANTHEON AT ROME. A temple built by Augustus Caesar, some say by Agrippa, his son-in-law, 27 B. C. It was in a round form, having niches in the wall, where the image or representation of a particular god was set up; the gates were of brass, the beams covered with gilt brass, and the roof covered with silver plate. Pope Boniface III. dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, and all the saints, by the name of S. Maria della Rotonda, or "ad Martyres," A.D. 608.—The PANTHEON in London was erected by subscription, and opened Jan. 25, 1772. It was formed into an opera-house; burnt down Jan. 14, 1792; was rebuilt in 1795 and 1812; and made a bazar in 1854.

* Henry John Temple was born Oct. 20, 1784; was educated at Harrow, Edinburgh, and Cambridge; succeeded his father, Viscount Palmerston, 1802; became M. P. and a junior Lord of the Admiralty, 1807; was Secretary at War, 1809-28, and a Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Nov., 1830-34, April, 1835, to Sept., 1841, and July, 1846, to Dec., 1851; and Home Secretary, Dec., 1852, to March, 1855, when he became First Lord of the Treasury. He was created Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, March 31, 1861, and Master of the Corporation of the Trinity House, June 16, 1862. He died Oct. 18, 1865. He sat for Tiverton, 1835-65.

PANTOMIMES were representations by gestures and attitudes among the ancients, and were introduced on the Roman stage by Pylades and Bathylus, 22 B.C. Comic masques were introduced here from Italy about 1700. The first regular English pantomime is said to have been "Harlequin executed," produced by Rich at the Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre, Dec. 26, 1717.

PAOLI, MASSACRE AT. On the night of the 20th of September, 1777, a corps of 1500 Americans, under General Wayne, were attacked in their camp, near the Paoli tavern, in Pennsylvania, by a party of British and Hessians under General Greig, and about 300 of them were killed or mortally wounded in the gloom. Fifty-three of them were found upon the ground the next morning, and were buried in one grave. A marble monument stands over that sepulchre.

"PAPAL AGGRESSION." In a consistory holden in Rome, Sept. 30, 1850, the Pope (Pius IX.) named fourteen new cardinals, of whom four only were Italians. Among the ten foreigners raised to the dignity of cardinal was Dr. Wiseman, Roman Catholic vicar apostolic of the London district, who was at the same time created Lord Archbishop of Westminster. On Oct. 27 following, Dr. Ullathorne was enthroned as Roman Catholic bishop of Birmingham in St. Chad's cathedral in that town. The same day a pastoral letter from Dr. Wiseman was read in all the Roman Catholic chapels of his see; and on its becoming generally known to the British people that all England had been parceled out similarly into Romish dioceses, the strongest indignation of the assumption of the pope was expressed throughout the empire.* The answer of the Bishop of London (Dr. Blomfield) to a memorial from the Protestant clergy of Westminster against the pope's creation of a Romish hierarchy in this country was followed by the celebrated "Durham" letter from Lord John Russell, then chief minister of the crown (Nov. 4), to the Bishop of Durham, in which is severely censured not only the papal aggression, but also the proceedings of the tractarian clergy of the Church of England; and immediately from every quarter of England addresses poured into her majesty the queen, calling upon her and the government to resist the usurpation. As many as 6700 addresses, it is said, had been voted from nearly as many influential meetings up to Dec. 31, 1850. The great agitation on this subject produced the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, 14 & 15 Vict., c. 60 (passed Aug., 1851), which prohibited the constitution of bishops of pretended provinces under a penalty of £100. This statute, however, has not yet been acted upon.

PAPAL STATES. See Rome and Papes.

PAPER. See Papyrus. Paper is said to have been invented in China, 170 B.C. It was first made of cotton about A.D. 1000, and of rags about 1300.† White coarse paper was made by Sir John Spelman, a German, at Dartford, in England, 35 Eliz., 1590; and here the first paper-mills were erected.—Stow. Paper for writing and printing manufactured in England, and an act passed to encourage it, 2 Will. III., 1690; before this time we paid for these articles to France and Holland £100,000 annually. The French refugees taught our people; they had made coarse brown paper almost exclusively until they came among us. White paper was first made by us in 1690.—Anderson. Paper-making by a machine was first suggested by Louis Robert, who sold his model to the celebrated M. Didot, the great printer. The latter brought it to England, and here, conjointly with M. Fourdrinier, he perfected the machinery. M. Fourdrinier obtained a patent for paper-making machinery in 1801, and for manufacturing paper of an indefinite length in 1807; it had previously been made tediously by the hand. The machinery was also improved by Mr. Bryan Donkin. A sheet of paper 13,800 feet long, and 4 feet wide, was made at Whitehall Mills, Derbyshire, in 1830, and one 21,000 feet long, and 6 feet 3 inches wide, was made at Colyton in Devon in 1860. The paper duty imposed in 1694 (producing latterly about £1,400,000 annually), after having been the subject of agitation for several years, was repealed in 1861. Esparto, a Spanish grass, first imported in 1857, has been largely employed in the paper manufacture since 1864. See Parchment Paper.

PAPER-HANGINGS, etc. Stamped paper for this purpose was first made in Spain and Holland about 1555. Made of velvet and floss, for hanging apartments, about 1620. The manufacture of this kind of paper rapidly improved in this country during the present century.—PAPER BRICKS have been made in America; and paper tubing for water and gas, made by Jalouséan of Paris, was shown in 1860.

PAPER MONEY. See Banks.

PAPIER-MACHÉ. This manufacture (of paper-pulp combined with gum and sometimes China clay) has existed for above a century. Martin, a German snuff-box maker, is said to have learned the art from one Lefevre about 1740. In 1745 it was taken up by Baskerville, the printer at Birmingham, and soon spread over that district. Papier-maché is now largely employed in ornamenting the interior of buildings, etc.

PAPYRUS. The reed from which was made the celebrated paper of Egypt and India, used for writings until the discovery of parchment, about 190 B.C. Ptolemy prohibited the exportation of it from Egypt, lest Eumenes of Pergamos should make a library equal to that of Alexandria, 263 B.C. A manuscript of the Antiquities of Josephus on papyrus of inestimable value was among the treasures seized by Bonaparte in Italy, and sent to the National Library at Paris, but was restored in 1815.

PARACHUTE. See Balloons.

PARADISE LOST, the great English epic by John Milton, appeared first in ten books in 1667; in twelve books in 1674.

PARAFFINE (from parum affinis, having little affinity with any thing), also called photogen, a solid substance, somewhat like spermaceti, produced by distillation of coal, and first obtained by Reichenbach in 1830. It was procured from mineral oil by Mr. James Young about 1847, and is also obtained from Irish peat. It makes excellent candles. Much litigation has ensued through interference with Mr. Young's patent-right.

PARAGUAY, a republic in S. America, discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1526, and conquered by Alvarez Nuñez in 1535, and civilized by the Jesuits, who in 1608 commenced their missions there and established an exclusive government, which they held till their expulsion in 1768. Paraguay rose against the Spanish yoke in 1811. In 1814 Dr. Francia was elected dictator; he ruled well; he was succeeded on his death in 1840 by Vival. From 1814 to 1844 the country was rigidly closed against foreigners. The president, C. A. Lopez, elected in 1844, was succeeded by his son, C. A. Lopez, in Sept., 1862. Paraguay was recognized as an independent state by the Argentine Confederation in 1852, and by Great Britain in 1853. Hostilities between Paraguay and Brazil began on Nov. 11, 1864, when a Brazilian steamer was captured as an intruder on the Paraguay. Brazil was invaded in December. On April 14, 1865, Lopez invaded the territories of the Argentine Republic, which immediately made alliance with Brazil. The army of Lopez, having been defeated in September, retreated. On Oct. 18, the allies captured Urugayana and an army of Paraguayans. There were prospects of peace in Dec., 1865.

PARASOLS were used by the ancient Egyptians. In their present form (said to have been devised by the Duchess of Rutland) they came into general use about 1820.

PARCHMENT.* Invented for writing books by Eumenes (some say by Attalus), of Pergamus, the founder of the celebrated library at Pergamus, form-

* Among other considerations that followed, and continued the excitement, was that of Dr. Briggs, created Roman Catholic bishop of Beverley, and enthroned in St. George's Chapel at York, Feb. 13, 1851; Dr. Brownie created Bishop of Clifton, and Dr. Burgess Bishop of Shrewsbury; both consecrated in St. George's Cathedral, Southwark, July 27, 1851; and other priests were similarly raised to new Roman Catholic prelacies.

† Mr. Joseph Hunter (in the Archæologia, xxxvii.) states that the earliest paper which he had seen was a MS. account-book, dated 1302, probably of Bordeaux manufacture. He gives engravings of manufacturers' marks, French and English, the dates of which range from 1330 to 1431. He also gives an extract from a work by Bartholus, a writer of the middle of the 14th century, in which mention is made of a paper manufactory in the Marches of Ancona.

* Parchment paper (or vegetable parchment) was invented and patented in 1837 by Mr. W. E. Gaine, C. E., who discovered that when paper is exposed to a mixture of two parts of concentrated sulphuric acid and one part of water for no longer time than is required to draw it through the fluid, it is immediately converted into a strong, tough, skin-like material. It must be instantly washed with water. Its great strength points out many applications of this material, e.g., maps, school and account books, and drawing-paper. In 1859 it appeared that a similar invention had been made in Paris by Figuier and Fournereau in 1846.

PARK'S TRAVELS. Mungo Park set sail on his first voyage to Africa, under the patronage of the African Society, to trace the source of the River Niger.

May 22, 1795, and returned Dec. 22, 1797, after having encountered great dangers, without his journey through intertropical regions having enabled him to achieve the great object of his ambition. He again sailed from Portsmouth on his second voyage, Jan. 30, 1804, appointed to a new expedition by government, but never returned. The accounts of his murder at Broussa on the Niger were a long time discredited, but at length were too well authenticated.

PARKS. The Romans attached parks to their villas. Fulvius Lupinus, Pompey, and Hortensius, among others, had large parks. In England, the first great park of which particular mention is made was that of Woodstock, formed by Henry I., 1125. The parks of London are in a high degree essential to the health of its immense population. St. James's Park was drained by Henry VIII. about 1537. It was improved, planted, and made a thoroughfare for public use, 1665. The Green Park forms a part of the ground inclosed by Henry VIII. In Hyde Park, the sheet of water called the Serpentine River, although in the form of a parallelogram, was made between 1730 and 1733, by order of Queen Caroline, consort of George II. This queen once inquired (it is said) of the first Mr. Pitt (afterward Earl of Chatham) how much it would cost to shut up the parks as private grounds. He replied, "Three crowns, your majesty." She took the hint, and the design was never afterward entertained. See Green, Hyde, St. James's, Regent's, Victoria, Battersea, Alexandra, and People's Parks.

PARLIAMENT (from the French, parlement, discourse) derives its origin from the Saxon general assemblies, called Wittenagemot. The name was applied to the general assemblies of the state under Louis VII. of France, about the middle of the 12th century, but it is said not to have appeared in our law till its mention in the statute of Westminster I., 3 Edw. I., 1272; and yet Coke declared in his Institutes, and spoke to the same effect, when speaker (1592), that this name was used even in the time of Edward the Confessor, 1041. The first clear account we have of the representatives of the people forming a House of Commons was in the 43d Hen. III., 1258, when it was settled by the statutes of Oxford that twelve persons should be chosen to represent the commons in the three Parliaments, which, by the sixth statute, were to be held yearly.—Burton's Annals. The general representation by knights, citizens, and burgesses took place 49 Henry III., 1268.—Dugdale's Summons to Parliament, edit. 1685. See Commons and Lords. The power and jurisdiction of Parliament are so transcendent and absolute that it can not be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in making and repealing laws. It can regulate or new-model the succession to the crown, as was done in the reigns of Henry VIII. and William III. It can alter and establish the religion of the country, as was done in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth.—Sir Edward Coke. The fourth edition of May's "Practical Treatise on Parliament" was published in 1559. * When the royal assent is given to a public bill, the clerk says "Le roi le veut." If the bill be a private bill, he says "Soit fait comme il est dit." If the bill have subsidies for its object, he says "Le roi renvoie les subsides, accepte les autres, et ainsi le veut." If the king does not think proper to assent to the bill, the clerk says "Le roi s'avisera," which is a mild way of giving a refusal. It is singular that the sovereign of England should still make use of the French language to declare her intentions to her Parliament.

* Termined the "Palace of Westminster." The first contract for the embankment of the river was taken in 1837 by Messrs. Lee; this embankment, faced with granite, is 886 feet in length, and projected into the river in a line with the inner side of the third pier of old Westminster Bridge. Sir Charles Barry (born 1795, died 1860) was the architect of the sumptuous pile of buildings raised since 1840. The whole stands on a bed of concrete twelve feet thick; to the east it has a front of about 1000 feet, and covers an area of nine statute acres. It contains 1100 apartments, 100 staircases, and two miles of passages or corridors. The great Victorian tower at southwest extremity is 346 feet in height, and towers of less magnitude crown other portions of the building.

in 1173. Writs for knights of the shire were issued in 1295. The Irish Parliament last met on Aug. 2, 1800, the bill for the Union having passed.

PARLIAMENT OF PARIS was made the chief court of justice in France by Philip IV.; at his suggestion it revoked a bull of Pope Boniface VIII., 1302. It was suppressed by Louis XV., 1771; restored by Louis XVI., 1774; demanded a meeting of the States-General in 1787; and was suspended by the National Assembly, Nov. 3, 1789.

PARLIAMENT OF SCOTLAND consisted of barons, prelates, and abbots, and occasionally of burgesses. A great national council was held at Scone by John Balliol, Feb. 9, 1292; and by Robert Bruce, at Cambuskenneth, in 1326. A House of Commons was never formed in Scotland. The Parliament of Scotland sanctioned the Act of Union on Jan. 16, 1707, and met for the last time on April 22, same year.

PARRICIDE. There was no law against it in Athens or Rome, such a crime not being supposed possible. About 172 B.C., L. Ostius having killed his father, the Romans first scourged the parricide, then sewed him up in a leathern sack made air-tight, with a live dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thus cast him into the sea. Miss Blandy was executed at Oxford for the murder of her father, April, 1752.

PARSEES, the followers of Zerdusht, dwelt in Persia till 638, when, at the battle of Kadseah, their army was decimated by the Arabs, and the monarchy annihilated at the battle of Nâharand in 641. Many submitted to the conquerors, but others fled to India, and their descendants still reside at Bombay, where they numbered 114,698 in 1849. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, a Parsee merchant, has been several years professor of Gujarati at University College, London.

PARTHENON (from Greek parthenê, virgin), a temple at Athens dedicated to Minerva, erected 442 B.C. In it Phidias placed his renowned statue of that goddess, 438.

PARTHENOPEAN REPUBLIC was established by the French at Naples (anciently called Parthenope), Jan., 1799, and overthrown in June, same year.

PARTHIA (Asia). The Parthians were originally a tribe of Scythians, who, being exiled, as their name implies, from their own country, settled near Hyrcania. Arsaces laid the foundation of an empire which ultimately extended over a large part of Asia, 250 B.C.; the Parthians were never wholly subdued by the Romans. The last king, Artabanus V., was killed A.D. 226; his territories were annexed to the new kingdom of Persia founded by Artaxerxes, who had revolted against Parthia.

PARLIAMENT OF IRELAND began with conferences of the English settlers, it is said, on the Hill of Tara,

* Called the Addle Parliament. It remonstrated with the king on his levying benevolences, and passed no acts. He dismissed it in anger, and imprisoned some of the members.

PARTITION TREATIES. The first treaty between England and Holland for regulating the Spanish succession (declaring the Elector of Bavaria next heir, and ceding provinces to France) was signed Aug. 19, 1698, and the second (between France, England, and Holland, declaring the Archduke Charles presumptive heir of the Spanish monarchy, Joseph Ferdinand having died in 1699), March 13, 1700. Treaty for the partition of Poland; the first was a secret convention between Russia and Prussia, Feb. 17, 1772; the second between the same powers and Austria, Aug. 5, same year; the third was between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, Nov. 25, 1795.

PARTNERSHIP. The laws respecting it were amended in 1863. See Limited Liability.

PASQUINADES.* Small satirical poems obtained this name about 1533.

PASSAROWITZ TREATY concluded 1718, by which the house of Austria ceded certain commercial rights, and obtained the Banat of Temeswar, Belgrade, and part of Servia and Wallachia.

PASSAU (Germany), TREATY OF, whereby religious freedom was established, was ratified between the Emperor Charles V. and the Protestant princes of Germany, July 31, 1552.—Hénault. In 1662 the cathedral and great part of Passau were consumed by fire.

PASSION-WEEK, the name given since the Reformation to the week preceding Easter was formerly applied to the fortnight. Archbishop Laud says the two weeks were so called "for a thousand years together," and refers to an epistle by Ignatius, in the 1st century, in which the practice is said to have been "observed by all."

PASSOVER, the most solemn festival of the Jews, instituted 1491 B.C. in commemoration of their coming out of Egypt; because, the night before their departure, the destroying angel, who put to death the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the houses of the Hebrews without entering them, the door-posts being marked with the blood of the Paschal Lamb killed the evening before. The Passover was celebrated in the new temple, April 18, 515 B.C.—Usher.

PASSPORT SYSTEM forbids subjects to quit one country or enter another without the consent of the sovereign thereof. In 1858 the system was somewhat changed in England, and the stamp duty on passports was reduced from 5s. to 6d. Passports were abolished in Norway in 1859; in Sweden in 1860; and (with regard to British subjects) in France, Dec. 16, 1860; in Italy, June 26, 1862; in Portugal, Jan. 23, 1863; and are falling into disuse in other countries. The passport system was established in the United States on Aug. 19, 1861.

PASTON LETTERS, the correspondence of a respectable family, 1422-53, giving a picture of social life in England, were edited by Sir John Fenn, and published in five volumes, quarto, 1757-1823. Their authenticity was questioned Sept., 1865, but has been satisfactorily vindicated.

PATAY (France), where Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, was present when the Earl of Richemont signally defeated the English, June 18, 1429. Talbot was taken prisoner, and the valiant Fastolf was forced to fly. In consequence, Charles VII. of France entered Rheims in triumph, and was crowned July 17, following year, Joan of Arc assisting in the ceremony in full armor, and holding the sword of state. See Joan of Arc.

PATENTS. Licenses and authorities granted by the king. Patents granted for titles of nobility were first made 1344, by Edward III. They were first granted for the exclusive privilege of printing books in 1591. The property and right of inventors in arts and manufactures were secured by letters-patent by an act passed in 1623. The later laws regulating patents are very numerous; among them are 5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 83 (1835), and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83 (1852).—By the latter, COMMISSIONERS OF PATENTS were appointed, viz., the lord chancellor, the master of the rolls, the attorney general for England and Ireland, the lord advocate, and the solicitor generals for England, Scotland, and Ireland. Since 1852, a journal has been published under their authority, and indexes of patents, from March, 1617, to the present time. Specifications of patents may be consulted by the public at the Free Library and Reading-room, in Southampton buildings, March 5, 1854. A museum containing models, portraits, etc., was established in 1859 at South Kensington, mainly by the exertions of Mr. Bennet Woodcroft.*

PATENTS IN THE UNITED STATES. A larger number of patents are granted than in any other country, and under the same general laws as in Great Britain. The Commissioner of Patents is appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, and has a numerous and thoroughly qualified staff of assistants, who occupy, in Washington, D. C., one of the finest buildings in the country, now filled almost to its capacity with thousands of models of every kind and description. The Commissioner of Patents makes a yearly report to the Secretary of the Interior, published at public expense. The number of patents granted by the United States government up to March 18, 1861, was 31,070. In the years from 1840 to 1849 the average number of applications for patents was 1000; of patents granted, 550. For the succeeding seven years the average number of applications was 3500; of patents granted, 1750. In 1858 the number of patents granted was 3710; in 1859, 4538; in 1860, 4519; and the number is annually on the increase. The receipts from fees are considerably in excess of expenditures.

PATRIARCHS. The dignity among the Jews is referred to the time of Nerva, 97. The ecclesiastical historian Socrates gives this title to the chiefs of Christian dioceses about 440. It was first conferred on the five grand sees of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. The Latin Church had no patriarchs till the 6th century. The first founders or heads of religious orders are called patriarchs.

PATRICIANS, the senators of Rome; their authority began with the city itself. See Rome.

PATRICK, ST., KNIGHTS OF, an order instituted by King George III., Feb. 5, 1783; the statutes were signed Feb. 28. The number, originally fifteen, was increased in 1821, 1831, and 1833, and is now twenty-two.

PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, St. (Dublin), was erected in 1190 by Archbishop Comyn, on the site of an old church. The cathedral was desecrated in 1546, and used as a law court till 1564. It has been restored by the munificence of Mr. Guinness. See Dublin.

PATRIOTIC FUNDS IN THE UNITED STATES. On account of the distress of the Continental army in 1780, the ladies of Philadelphia made a successful effort to collect a fund for their relief, in the purchase of clothing. Some of the leading women were at the head of the movement, among them Mrs. Bache, Dr. Franklin's daughter. All ranks of society seem to have joined in the liberal effort, from Phillis the colored woman, with her humble seven shillings and sixpence, to Mrs. Washington, who gave $20,000 in Continental money, equivalent at that time to about $350, and Lafayette $500, in the name of his wife, the marchioness. In Philadelphia and vicinity nearly $8000 were subscribed; and Robert Morris made the princely donation of the contents of a ship just captured by one of his privateers, fully laden with clothing and military stores.

During the Civil War of 1861-65 enormous sums were given by private individuals, together with every sort of clothing, comfort, and luxury for the relief of our wounded troops, the care of Union refugees from the South, and the emancipated blacks. It has been estimated that not less than $500,000,000 in money was given in small sums, as voluntary contributions, by all classes of people during the war.

PAULICIANS, a sect of Christian reformers, arose about 652. Although they were severely persecuted, they spread over Asia Minor in the 9th century, and finally settled at Montfort, in Italy, where they were attacked by the Bishop of Milan in 1028. Severe decrees against them were made in 1163, and they gradually dispersed; very probably sowing the seeds of the great reformation of the 16th century.

PAUL JONES, a Scotchman, born 1742; died at Paris, 1792. He commanded an American privateer during the American War, and was memorable for his daring depredations on British commerce. He landed and pillaged the house of Lord Selkirk, near Kirkcubright, and at Whitehaven burnt shipping in the harbor, April, 1778. The Dutch permitted Paul Jones to

* This name originated in the 16th century. At the death of a cobler named Pasquin, at Rome, a number of idle persons used to assemble to listen to his pleasant sallies, and to relate little anecdotes in their turn, and indulge themselves in raillery at the expense of the passers-by. After the cobler's death the statue of a gladiator was found near his stall, to which the people gave his name, and on which the wits of the time, secretly at night, affixed their lampoons upon the statue, and their neighbors.

* In 1844, the detected defalcations of Mr. Edmunds, a clerk in the patents office and an official of the House of Lords, led to his retirement. He obtained a pension of £500, which was taken from him by a vote of the House of Lords on May 9, 1865.

PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, Sr. (London), the noblest Protestant church in the world. Sir Christopher Wren's opinion, that there had been a church on this spot, built by the Christians in the time of the Romans, was confirmed when he searched for the foundations for his own design. He explodes the notion of there having been a Temple of Diana.

PAULUS'S HOOK, CAPTURE OF. The British had a small garrison at Paulus's Hook (now Jersey City), opposite the city of New York, in the summer of 1779. The post was attacked at 3 o'clock in the morning of the 19th of August by Major Henry Lee. Thirty of the garrison were killed, and 160 made prisoners. The post fell into the hands of the Americans, and Congress awarded Lee with thanks and a gold medal.

PAUPERS. See Poor.

PAVEMENT. The Carthaginians are said to have been the first who paved their towns with stones. The Romans, in the time of Augustus, had pavement in many of their streets; but the Apian Way was a paved road, and was constructed 312 B.C. In England there were few paved streets before Henry VII.'s reign. London was first paved about 1533. It was paved with flag-stones between 1815 and 1825. Wood and asphalt paving was tried in 1839, and have been disused since 1847. See Wood Paving.

PAVIA (N. Italy), the ancient Ticinum or Papia. Its university, founded by Charlemagne, is the oldest in Europe. Pavia was built by the Gauls, who were driven out by the Romans, and these, in their turn, were expelled by the Goths. In 563 it was taken by the Lombards, and became the capital of their kingdom. In the 12th century it was erected into a republic, but soon after was subjected to Milan, and followed its fortunes. On Feb. 24, 1545, a battle was fought near here between the French and the Imperialists, when the former were defeated, and their king, Francis I., after fighting with heroic valor, and killing seven men with his own hand, was at last obliged to surrender himself a prisoner. Francis wrote to his mother, Louisa of Savoy, regent of the kingdom during his absence, saying, Tout est perdu, Madame, fors l'honneur (All is lost, madam, except honor).

PAWNBROKING. The origin of borrowing money by means of pledges deposited with lenders is referred to Perugia, in Italy, about 1462. The institutions were termed monti di pietà (which see). Soon afterward, it is said that the Bishop of Winchester established a system of lending on pledges, but without interest. The business of pawnbrokers was regulated in 1756, and licenses issued in 1753. The rate of interest on pledges was fixed in 1800. In London there were, in 1851, 334 pawnbrokers; and in England, exclusively of London, 1127; the number is increasing in proportion to the population. In 1860 an act was passed enabling pawnbrokers to charge a halfpenny for every ticket describing things pledged for a sum under 5s. The acts relating to pawnbrokers were amended in 1856.

PEABODY FUND. On March 12, 1862, Mr. George Peabody, the American merchant, gave £150,000 to ameliorate the condition of the London poor. The first block of buildings for working classes in Commercial Street, Spitalfields, opened Feb. 29, 1864; others erecting in Islington, Shadwell, Chelsea, and Bermondsey; they have been found to be self-supporting. Mr. Peabody presented £100,000 in addition, January, 1866. Mr. Peabody has exhibited equal consideration for his native country: in 1867 he gave one million of dollars in gold to promote education in the Southern States, which sum will be largely increased by the enhancement of Mississippi bonds, given for the same object. Mr. Peabody has also given 1,000,000 dollars to the Baltimore Institute of Science, besides many other large sums to various literary and educational institutions in the Northern States.

PEACE. A temple was dedicated to Peace by Vespasian, 75. See Fire-works, Treaties, Justices, etc.—A PEACE SOCIETY was founded in 1816 for the promotion of universal peace. It held its 45th anniversary in May, 1861. A congress of the friends of peace, from all parts of the world, commenced its sittings at Paris, Aug. 22, 1849. It met in London at Exeter Hall, Oct. 30, following; and at Frankfort, in St. Paul's Church, Aug. 22, 1850; at Birmingham, Nov. 28, 1850; and at Exeter Hall, July 22, 1851. A meeting was held at Manchester, Jan. 27, 1853; and at Edinburgh, Oct. 12, 1853. Mr. Bright and the late Mr. Cobden were among the most conspicuous members of the society. A deputation from the Peace Society, consisting of Messrs. J. Sturge, Pease, and another Quaker friend, stated their views to the Emperor of Russia at St. Petersburg, at an interview granted them in Feb., 1854.

PEA RIDGE (Arkansas), BATTLE OF, fought March 7-8, 1862. On the 6th General S. R. Curtis held Pea Ridge. Sigel was seven miles south, at Bentonville. Upon Van Dorn's advance Sigel joined Curtis, and the next day Van Dorn attacked. The result of the first day's battle was indecisive. The Confederates, victorious on the left, had been defeated on the right, and Generals M'Intosh and M'Culloch had been killed. But the supplies of the national troops were nearly exhausted, and the enemy had gained a strong position in their rear. From this position Van Dorn was driven on the 8th, after two hours' fighting, and the victory rested with General Curtis. The Confederate forces numbered 20,000, one fifth of whom were Indians. Curtis had four divisions on the field. The loss on either side was about 1000.

PEARLS. The formation of the pearl has embarrassed both ancient and modern naturalists to explain. M. Reaumur, in 1717, alleged that pearls are formed like other stones in animals. An ancient pearl was valued by Pliny at £80,000 sterling. One which was brought in 1574 to Philip II., of the size of a pigeon's egg, was valued at 14,400 ducats, equal to £13,996. A pearl named the Incomparable, spoken of by De Boote, weighed thirty carats, equal to five pennyweights, and was about the size of a muscadine pear. The pearl mentioned by Tavernier as being in possession of the Emperor of Persia was purchased of an Arab in 1633, and is valued at a sum equal to £110,400.

PEDESTRIANISM. Euechidas, a citizen of Platæa, went from thence to Delphi to bring the sacred fire. This he obtained, and returned with it the same day before sunset, having traveled 125 English miles. No sooner had he saluted his fellow-citizens and delivered the fire, than he fell dead at their feet. After the battle of Marathon, a soldier was sent from the field to announce the victory at Athens. Exhausted with fatigue, and bleeding from his wounds, he had only time to cry out, "Rejoice, we are conquerors!" and immediately expired.

Foster Powell, the English pedestrian, performed many astonishing journeys on foot. His expedition from London to York and back again, in 1788, is said to have been completed in 140 hours. Captain Barclay, for a wager (on which many thousands of pounds depended), walked 1000 miles in 1000 successive hours, each mile in each hour, in forty-two days and nights (less 8 hours). His task was accomplished on July 10, 1869.

Richard Maule, a native of Warwickshire, undertook (in imitation of Captain Barclay) to walk 1000 miles in 1000 hours; the place chosen was the Barrack Tavern Cricket-ground, in Sheffield; he commenced on Monday, June 17, 1850, and completed the 1000 miles, July 29, following, winning a considerable sum.

On Oct. 7, 1861, a 12 miles foot-race was held, when Levett, the champion of England, ran 7 miles in 37 minutes 27 seconds; Deerfoot, a Seneca Indian, ran 12 miles in 65 minutes 5 seconds; and Mills ran 10 miles in 54 minutes 10 seconds; other races followed.

On May 11, 1863, Deerfoot was beaten by White, who ran 10 miles in 52 minutes 14 seconds.

PEEL ADMINISTRATIONS.* The first succeeded the Melbourne administration, which was broken up on the retirement of Lord Althorpe, the chancellor of the Exchequer, in Nov., 1834. Sir R. Peel, then in Italy, was summoned home, the Duke of Wellington holding the seals of office in the interim. They resigned in April, 1835. In May, 1841, Sir R. Peel carried a vote of want of confidence in the Melbourne cabinet, but did not take office; and in Sept. of that year he became again premier.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION (Dec., 1834).

Henry Goulburn, Duke of Wellington, and Earl of Aberdeen, Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries of State.

Earl De Grey, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Lord Ellenborough and Alexander Baring, Board of Control and Trade.

Sir Edward Knatchbull, Paymaster of the Forces.

J. C. Herries, Secretary at War.

Sir George Murray, Master General of the Ordnance, etc. [Terminated April, 1835.]

SECOND ADMINISTRATION (Sept., 1841).

Sir Robert Peel, First Minister.

Duke of Wellington, in the cabinet without office.

Duke of Buckingham, Lord Privy Seal.

Sir James Graham, Earl of Aberdeen, and Lord Stanley, Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries.

Henry Goulburn, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Earl of Haddington, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Earl of Ripon, Board of Trade.

[Terminated June 29, 1846, by Sir Robert's resignation.]

PEELITES, a name given to gentlemen, Whigs and Tories, who adhered to Sir Robert Peel after his defeat by the Conservative party, on account of his free-trade measures carried in 1846. The principal were Henry Goulburn, W. E. Gladstone, Sidney (afterward Lord) Herbert, Sir James Graham, Edward Cardwell, Sir George Clerk, Lord Lincoln (afterward Duke of Newcastle), Lords Canning and Elgin, and others.

PEEL'S BILLS. Among the most important were the Bank Acts of 1819 and 1844, and the act repealing the Corn Laws in 1846.

PEERS. See Lords.

PEGU, a province of the Burmese Empire, discovered by the Portuguese in 1520. Pegu, the capital, was taken by Major Cotton, with 300 men, in June, 1852, without loss, and afterward abandoned. It was again occupied by the Burmese and strongly fortified, with a garrison of 4000 men. It was recaptured by General Godwin with 1200 men and two guns, in two hours, with the loss of six killed and thirty-two wounded. The province was annexed to the British Indian possessions, by proclamation, Dec. 20, 1852, and has since prospered. In Feb., 1862, it was united with Arracan and Tenasserin as British Burmah.

PEIHO. See China, 1859, 1860.

* Sir Robert Peel was born Feb. 5, 1788; entered Parliament in 1809; became under-secretary of the colonies in 1811, chief secretary for Ireland in 1812; M.P. for Oxford in 1818 (when he resigned his office), secretary for justice in 1822; resigned office and reappointed in 1827, resigned again in 1829; became premier in 1834 and 1841 (see above). He was thrown from his horse June 29, and died July 2, 1850. He greatly relaxed the severity of our criminal code in 1827, et seq.; established the new police, and carried the Catholic Emancipation Bill in 1829, and the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846. Statues have been erected to him—at Salford in 1852; at Tamworth, Leeds, Bury, and Manchester in 1855; and in London and Birmingham in 1856.

PEKIN, the northern capital of China, was rebuilt by Kublai in 1279, and by Yong-lo, 1471; visited by Lord Macartney in 1793; surrendered to the allied English and French armies, Oct. 12, 1860, and evacuated by them Oct. 28 following, after peace had been signed. It was described as being in a very desolate state, with a scattered, indigent population, estimated at 4,000,000.

PELAGIANS, followers of Pelagius, a Briton, appeared at Rome about 400. Their doctrines were condemned at Carthage, and other councils, 415, 416. They maintained:

1. That Adam was by nature mortal, and, whether he had sinned or not, would certainly have died.
2. That the consequences of Adam's sin were confined to his own person.
3. That new-born infants are in the same condition with Adam before the fall.
4. That the law qualified men for the kingdom of heaven, and was founded upon equal promises with the Gospel.
5. That the general resurrection of the dead does not follow in virtue of our Savior's resurrection.

PELASGI, the primitive inhabitants of Greece and Italy, appear to belong to the Indo-Germanic race. They were in Greece about 1900 B.C., and in Italy about 1600 B.C. They have been termed Tyrrheni, Sicani, or Siculi, Apuli, etc. From the Pelasgi came the Dorians, Eolians, and Ionians, all three being Hellenes or Greeks.

PELEW ISLANDS (N. Pacific Ocean), discovered by the Spaniards in the 17th century. The East India Company's packet Antelope, Capt. Wilson, was wrecked here in 1783. The king, Abba Thulle, allowed Capt. Wilson to bring Prince Le Boo, his son, to England, where he arrived in 1784, and died soon after of the small-pox. The East India Company erected a monument over his grave in Rotherhithe church-yard.

PELHAM ADMINISTRATION. Mr. Henry Pelham replaced the Earl of Wilmington, as premier, Aug., 1743. See Wilmington. In Nov., 1744, a new ministry was formed (termed "the Broad Bottom Administration," because it comprehended a grand coalition of the parties). It was dissolved by the death of Mr. Pelham, March 6, 1754.

Henry Pelham, First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Duke of Dorset, President of the Council.

John Gower, Lord Privy Seal.

Duke of Newcastle and the Earl of Harrington, Secretaries of State.

Duke of Montagu, Master General of the Ordnance.

Duke of Bedford, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Duke of Grafton, Lord Chamberlain.

Duke of Richmond, Master of the Horse.

Duke of Argyll, Keeper of the Great Seal of Scotland.

Marquess of Tweeddale, Secretary of State for Scotland.

The Duke of Devonshire and Duke of Bolton were not of the cabinet.

PELOPONNESIAN WAR continued for twenty-seven years between the Athenians and the people of the Peloponnesus, with their respective allies, and is the most famous of the wars of Greece. It began by an attempt of the Boeotians to surprise Plataea, 431 B.C., on May 7, and ended 404 B.C. by the taking of Athens by the Lacedaemonians.

PELUSIUM (now Tinah), formerly the key of Egypt. Here, in 525 B.C., Psammetichus III. was defeated by Cambyeses, the Persian, who thereby obtained possession of the kingdom.

PENAL LAWS. See Criminal Laws and Roman Catholics. Penal servitude was substituted for transportation by acts passed in 1853 and 1857, and amended in 1864.

PENANCE, a sacrament in the Roman Church, arose out of the practice of auricular confession (which see). The Council of Trent, in its 14th session (1551), decreed that every one is accursed who shall affirm that this sacrament was not instituted by Christ.

PENANG, or PRINCE OF WALES'S ISLAND, was given up to the East India Company in 1786 by Captain F. Light, who received it as a marriage portion with the daughter of the King of Queda. It now forms one of the Straits Settlements (which see).

PENDULUMS are affirmed to have been adapted to clocks by Galileo the younger about 1641. Christian Huyghens contested the priority of this discovery, 1656.

—See Dufrenoy. See Clocks. Experiments were made to determine the density of the earth by pendulums by PENTLAND HILLS (near Edinburgh). Here the Scotch Presbyterians, since called Cameronians (which see), who had risen against the government on account of the establishment of episcopacy, were defeated by the royal troops, Nov. 28, 1666.

PEOPLE. The Duke of Norfolk and C. J. Fox, at dinner in 1798, gave as a toast "The Majesty of the People," for which their names were struck off the list of privy counselors. A "People's petition" was presented to Parliament by Mr. T. Duncombe, and rejected, May 2, 1842.

"PEOPLE'S PARKS," principally through private liberality, have been opened since 1846, at Manchester, Halifax, Birmingham, Sheffield, Dundee, Bradford, Hull, Bath, and Bolton (which see).

PEPSIN, a peculiar organic substance found by Schwamm in the gastric juice, and named by him from pepsis, digestion. It was experimented on by M. Blondlot in 1843, and has since been prescribed as a medicine.

PERCEVAL ADMINISTRATION. It commenced on the dissolution of that of the Duke of Portland through his death, Oct. 30, 1809. Mr. Perceval was assassinated in the lobby of the House of Commons by Bellingham, May 11, 1812. The Earl of Liverpool succeeded as premier.

Spencer Perceval, First Lord of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Earl Camden, Lord President.

Mr. Dundas and Earl Bathurst, Boards of Control and Trade.

Earl of Chatham, Ordinance.

Viscount Palmerston, Secretary at War, etc.

PERCY FAMILY. William de Percy obtained lands in Yorkshire from William the Conqueror, and died at Antioch about 1096.

The heiress of the last Baron Percy married Joceline de Louvaine, son of Godfrey, duke of Brabant, in the reign of Henry II. 1154-59
Henry de Percy, their descendant, created Earl of Northumberland in 1377
Many of his descendants were slain during the Civil Wars.

Lady Elizabeth Percy, the heiress of Joceline Percy, who died 1670, married Charles, duke of Somerset.

Lady Elizabeth Percy, heiress of Algernon Seymour, duke of Northumberland, married Sir Hugh Smithson, created Duke of Northumberland in 1766

Their descendant, Duke Algernon, died without issue, Feb. 12, 1865, and was succeeded by his cousin, George Percy, Earl of Beverley.

The PERCY SOCIETY, for the publication of ancient ballads, etc., was established in 1840, published 94 little volumes, and was dissolved in 1852

PEREKOP, an isthmus, five miles broad, connecting the Crimea with the main land. It was called by the Tartars Orkopou, "Gate of the Isthmus," which the Russians changed to its present name, which signifies a barren ditch. The Tartar fortress was taken and destroyed by the Russian Marshal Münich in 1736, by assault, although it was defended by 1000 Janissaries and 100,000 Tartars. It was again strongly fortified by the khan, but was again taken by the Russians in 1771, who have since retained it.

PERE LA CHAISE. See Cemeteries.

PERFUMERY. In Exodus xxx. (B.C. 1490), directions are given for making the holy incense. Philip Augustus of France granted a charter to the master perfumers in 1190. Perfumes became fashionable in England in the reign of Elizabeth. In 1860 there were about forty manufacturing perfumers in London; in Paris about eighty. No such trade as a perfumer was known in Scotland in 1768.—Creech. A stamp-tax was laid on various articles of perfumery in England, and the vendor was obliged to take out a license in 1786. At the corner of Beaufort Buildings, in the Strand, resided Lilly, the perfumer, mentioned in the Spectator.—Leigh.

PERIPATETIC PHILOSOPHY. See Lycæum.

PERJURY. The early Romans threw the offender headlong from the Tarpeian precipice; but that penalty was afterward altered, upon a supposition that the gods would vindicate their own honor by some remarkable judgment upon the offender. The Greeks set a mark of infamy upon him. After the empire became Christian, any one who swore falsely upon the Gospels was to have his tongue cut out. The canons of the primitive Church enjoined eleven years' penance; and in some states the false swearer became liable to the punishment he charged upon the innocent. Perhaps the greatest perjurer in modern times was Titus Oates. See Oates. A woman named Alice Grey was convicted of many perjuries in 1856. In England perjury was punished with the pillory, 1563. By the Abolition of Oaths Bill, persons making a false declaration are deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; Act 5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 60 and 61, 9 Sept., 1835.

PERKINS'S METALLIC TRACTORS. See Animal Magnetism.

PERMISSIVE BILL (which would give power to two thirds of the rate-payers of a parish to refuse licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors) was rejected by the House of Commons, June 8, 1864.

PERONNE (N. France), TREATY OF. Louis XI. of France, having placed himself in the power of the Duke of Burgundy, was forced to sign this treaty, confirming those of Arras and Conflans, with some other humiliating stipulations, 1468. Louis XI. had promised Champagne and Brîs as appanages to his brother Charles, duke of Berry, not intending to keep his word, apprehending that those provinces, being so near Burgundy, would prove a fresh source of broils and disputes.—Henault.

PERRYVILLE (Kentucky), BATTLE OF, fought Oct. 8, 1862. Kirby Smith had entered Kentucky in August, and was soon followed by the bulk of Bragg's army. In this march northward, threatening Louisville and Cincinnati, there was an encounter at Richmond, Kentucky, Aug. 30, and the garrison at Munfordsville, Tennessee, was surrendered Sept. 17. Smith and Bragg joined their forces and inaugurated a provisional governor at Frankfort. But, in the mean time, Buell had succeeded in reaching Louisville with his army. Bragg commenced to retreat, followed leisurely by Buell. On the 8th of October, Gen. A. M'Dowell M'Cook touched the enemy's rear and brought on a battle, against the express orders of Buell. M'Cook was attacked with great strength, and with difficulty maintained his position. Here General Jackson and Colonel Webster were killed. Rousseau's division alone lost 2000 men. The Confederate loss was also severe.

PERSECUTIONS. Historians usually reckon ten general persecutions of the Christians. See Jews, Heretics, Inquisition, Huguenots, Protestants, Massacres, Bartholomew, St., etc.

1st, under Nero, who, having set fire to Rome, threw the odium upon the Christians; multitudes were massacred; wrapped up in the skins of wild beasts, and torn and devoured by dogs; crucified, burnt alive, etc. 64-63
2d, under Domitian 95
3d, under Trajan 106
4th, under Marcus Aurelius 166-177
5th, under Septimius Severus 199-204
6th, under Maximianus 235-8
7th, under Decius, more bloody than any preceding 250-2
8th, under Valerian 258-60
9th, under Aurelian 275
10th, under Diocletian, who prohibited divine worship; houses filled with Christians were set on fire, and droves of them were bound together with ropes and cast into the sea 303-13

PERSEPOLIS, the ancient splendid capital of Persia. Alexander has been falsely accused of setting fire to it, while intoxicated, 331 B.C. The fire is said to have been accidental, and not extensive. Ruins of this city still exist.

PERSIA, in the Bible called Elam, is said to have received its appellation from Perseus, the son of Perseus and Andromeda, who settled here, and established a petty sovereignty. The name is more probably of Indian origin. Persia was included in the first Assyrian monarchy, 900 B.C.; when that empire was dismembered by Arbaces, etc., it appertained to Media. - PERSPECTIVE in drawing was observed by the Van Eycks (1426-46), and was treated scientifically by Michael Angelo, Leonardo da Vinci, and Albert Durer early in the 16th century. Guido Ubaldo published the first treatise in 1603; Dubreuil's treatise (the “Jesuits' perspective”) appeared in 1642, and the mathematical theory was demonstrated by Brook Taylor in 1731.
- PERTH (Scotland), said to have been founded by Agricola about A.D. 70. It was besieged by the regent
Robert, 1339. On Feb. 20, 1437, James I. was murdered at the Black Friars' monastery here by Robert Graham and the Earl of Athol, for which their bodies were torn with red-hot pincers, burning crowns of iron pressed down upon their heads, and in the end their hearts taken out and thrown into a fire.—Gowrie's conspiracy occurred here, Aug. 6, 1600. The "Articles of Perth," relating to religious ceremonies, were agreed to by the General Assembly of Scotland, Aug. 25, 1618. Perth was taken by Cromwell in 1651; and by the Earl of Mar, after the battle of Dumbane, in 1715. The statue of the prince consort was inaugurated in the presence of the queen, Aug. 30, 1864.

PERU (S. America), visited by the Spaniards in 1513, and soon afterward easily conquered. Pizarro in 1530, and others, with one vessel, 112 men, and four horses, set out to invade South America. Not succeeding, he again, in 1531, embarked with three small vessels, 140 infantry, and thirty-six horses; with these and two reinforcements of thirty men each, he conquered the empire of Peru, and laid the foundation of that vast power which the Spaniards long enjoyed in the New World. Peru remained in subjection to the Spaniards (who murdered the Incas and all their descendants), without any attempt being made to throw off the oppressive yoke, till 1782.

PERUGIA, a city of Central Italy, anciently one of the Etruscan Confederation. It allied itself with the Samnites, but was ruined by two defeats by the Romans, 309 and 295 B.C. It was taken by Octavius Cæsar from the adherents of Antony, many of whom were immolated on altars by their victor. Leo X. took Perugia from the rival families Oddi and Baglioni in 1520. An insurrection here against the pope was put down by the Swiss with great cruelty, June 20, 1559. It was taken by the Sardinian General Fanti in Sept., 1860, when the cruel Papal General Schmidt and 1600 men were made prisoners.

PERUKE, or WIG. The ancients used false hair, but the present peruke was first worn in France and Italy about 1620, and introduced into England about 1660.*

PERUVIAN BARK. See Jesuits' Bark.

PESCHIERA, a strong Austrian fortress on an island in the Mincio, near the Lake de Garda, N. Italy. It has been frequently taken by siege: by the French, 1796; by the Austrians and Russians, 1799; by the French again, 1801; given up by them, 1814; taken by the Sardinians, 1848; retaken by Radetzky, 1849. The Sardinians were preparing to besiege it in July, 1859, when peace was made. See Quadrilateral.

PESTALOZZIAN SYSTEM of education was devised by Henri Pestalozzi, born at Zurich, in Switzerland, in 1746, died 1827. In 1775 he turned his farm into a school for educating poor children in industrial pursuits, reading, and writing, but did not succeed. In 1798 he established an orphan school, where he began with the mutual instruction, or monitorial system, since adopted by Lancaster; but his school was soon turned into a hospital for the Austrian army. In 1802, in conjunction with Fellenberg, he established his school at Hofwyl, which at first was successful, but eventually declined through mismanagement. Pestalozzi certainly aided the progress of education.

PESTH (Hungary), built about 889, was repeatedly taken and besieged in the wars of Hungary, particularly in the long contests with the Turks. The last time it changed masters was in 1684, after the raising of the famous siege of Vienna by Sobieski. Buda-Pesth was taken by the Imperialists Jan. 5, 1849. The Hungarians afterward defeated the Austrians, who were obliged to evacuate it April 18, same year. See Hungary.

PESTILENCE. See Plague.

PETALISM (from the Greek petalon, a leaf), a mode of deciding upon the guilt of citizens of Syracuse, similar to the Athenian ostracism, the name being written on a leaf (generally of an olive) instead of a shell, about 460 B.C. If guilt were established, the sentence was usually banishment.—Cotgrave.

PETARD, an instrument whose invention is ascribed to the Huguenots in 1579. Petards were of metal, nearly in the shape of a hat, and were employed to blow up gates or other barriers, and also in countermines to break through into the enemy's galleries. Cahors was taken by Henry IV. by means of petards in 1580, when it is said they were first used.

PETER THE WILD BOY. A savage creature found in the forest of Hertswold, electorate of Hanover, when George I. and his friends were hunting. He was found walking on his hands and feet, climbing trees like a squirrel, and feeding on grass and moss, Nov., 1725. At this time he was supposed to be thirteen years old. The king caused him to taste of all the dishes at the royal table; but he preferred wild plants, leaves, and the bark of trees, which he had lived on from his infancy. No efforts of the many philosophic persons about court could entirely vary his savage habits, or cause him to utter one distinct syllable. He died Feb., 1785, at the age of 72. Lord Monboddo represented him to be a proof of the hypothesis that "man in a state of nature is a mere animal."

PETER'S CHURCH, St. (Rome), originally erected by Constantine, 306. About 1450 Pope Nicholas V. commenced a new church. The present magnificent pile was designed by Bramante; the first stone was laid by Pope Julius II. in 1506. In 1514 Leo X. employed Raphael and two others to superintend the building. Paul III. committed the work to Michael Angelo, who devised the dome, in the construction of which 30,000 lbs. of iron was used. The church was consecrated Nov. 18, 1626. The front is 400 feet broad, rising to a height of 180 feet, and the majestic dome ascends from the centre of the church to a height of 324 feet: the length of the interior 600 feet, forming one of the most spacious halls ever constructed. The length of the exterior is 669 feet; its greatest breadth within is 442 feet; and the entire height from the ground 432 feet.

PETER'S PENCE, presented by Ina, king of the West Saxons, to the pope at Rome, for the endowment of an English college there, 725; so called because agreed to be paid on the feast of St. Peter. The tax was levied on all families possessed of thirty pence yearly rent in land, out of which they paid one penny. It was confirmed by Offa, 777, and was afterward claimed by the popes as a tribute from England, and regularly collected, till suppressed by Henry VIII.—Camden. A public collection (on behalf of the pope) was forbidden in France in 1860.

PETERBOROUGH (Northamptonshire), founded 633; anciently called Medeshamstede; obtained its present name from a king of Mercia founding an abbey and dedicating it to St. Peter in 689. The church, destroyed by the Danes, was rebuilt with great beauty. The bishopric erected by Henry VIII. in 1541, out of the lands of the dissolved monastery, in the diocese of Lincoln. The first bishop was John Chambers, the last abbot of Peterborough. The see was valued in the king's books at £419 19s. 11d. Present income £4500.

PETERLOO. See Manchester Reform Meeting.

PETERSBURG, St., the modern capital of Russia, founded by Peter the Great, May 27, 1703. He built a small hut for himself, and some wretched wooden hovels. In 1710, the Count Golovkin built the first house of brick, and the next year, the emperor, with his own hands, laid the foundation of a house of the same material. The seat of empire was transferred from Moscow to this place in 1711. Here, in 1736, a fire consumed 2000 houses; and in 1750, another fire consumed 11,000 houses; this last fire was occasioned by lightning. Again, in June, 1796, a large magazine of naval stores and 100 vessels were destroyed. The winter palace was burnt to the ground, Dec. 29, 1837. The railway to Moscow was finished in 1851; to Berlin, opened May 5, 1862. The University was closed in

* It is said that Bishop Blondfield (of London) obtained permission of William IV. for the bishops to discontinue wearing their wigs in Parliament in 1839.

Oct., 1861, on account of the riotous behavior of the students. On June 10, 1862, property to the amount of nearly a million sterling was destroyed by fire.—PETERSBURG, Virginia. See United States, 1864.

PETERSWALDEN (Germany), CONVENTION of, between Great Britain and Russia, by which a firm and decisive alliance between those powers was made against France, and the course of action against Napoleon Bonaparte was planned, signed July 8, 1813. This alliance led to the overthrow of Bonaparte in the next year.

PETERWARADEIN (in Austria) was taken by the Turks, July, 1526. Here Prince Eugene of Savoy gained a great victory over the Turks, Aug. 5, 1716.

PETITIONS. The right of petitioning the crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is a fundamental principle of the Constitution. Petitions are extant of the date of Edward I. In the reign of Henry IV. petitions began to be addressed to the House of Commons in considerable numbers. In 1837 there were presented to Parliament 10,831 petitions, signed by 2,905,905 persons; in 1859, 24,386, signed by 2,290,579 persons. See Rights, Petition of.

PETRARCH and LAURA, celebrated for the refined passion of the former for the latter, begun in 1327, which was the chief subject of his enchanting sonnets. He was born 1304, crowned with laurels, as a poet and writer, on Easter day, April 8, 1341, and died at Arqua, near Padua, July 18, 1374. Laura died April 6, 1348.

PETROLEUM, rock oil or mineral oil, similar to paraffine, has been found in many parts of the world, especially at Rangoon. In 1860-1, a number of oil-springs were discovered in the bituminous coal regions of N.W. Pennsylvania, now termed "Petrolia," and others have been since discovered in Ohio and other states, and also in Canada. In consequence, numerous artesian wells have been sunk, manufactories erected, and an almost unlimited supply obtained. In consequence of the importation of large supplies of this oil into this country, and many accidents having taken place through its inflammability at low temperature, an act for "the safe keeping of petroleum" was passed in July, 1862.

PETROPOLUSKI, a fortified town on the east coast of Kamtschatka, was attacked by an English and French squadron, Aug. 30, 1854. They destroyed the batteries, but failed in taking some Russian frigates, except the Sitka, a store-ship taken by the President, and a schooner taken by the Pique. Admiral Price was killed, it is supposed, by the accidental discharge of his own pistol. A party of 700 sailors and marines landed to assault the place, but fell into an ambuscade; many were killed, including Capt. Parker and M. Bourasset, English and French officers. The objects of the attack were not attained, it is thought from want of stores. After this the Russians greatly strengthened their defenses, but on May 30, 1855, the allied squadron in the Pacific arriving here found the place deserted. The fortifications were destroyed, but the town was spared. The Russian ships escaped.

PEVENSEY (Sussex). The castle is very ancient. From the abundance of Roman bricks, it is supposed that there was a Roman fortress on the spot. Here William of Normandy landed, Sept. 28 or 29, 1066. The Duke of York, in the reign of Henry IV., was for some time confined within the walls of this castle, as was also Queen Joan of Navarre, the last wife of Henry IV., who, with her confessor, Friar Randolf, was accused of a design to destroy the king.

PEWS in churches were not in use in England till long after the Reformation—about the middle of the 17th century. The earliest reading-pew with a date is one at Geddington St. Mary, Northamptonshire, dated 1602.—Hook.

PEAFFENDORF, or LIGNITZ (Silesia). Here was fought a battle between the Imperialists and Prussians, Aug. 15, 1760. The Austrians were signally defeated by the King of Prussia, who thus prevented the junction of the Russian and Austrian armies.

PHALANX. The Greek phalanx consisted of 8000 men in a square battalion, with shields joined, and spears crossing each other. The battalion formed by Philip of Macedon, called the Macedonian phalanx, was formed by him 360 B.C.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS, a chemical toy, composed of sulphocyanide of mercury, appeared in Paris in the summer of 1865.

PHARISEES, a sect among the Jews; so called from pharash, a Hebrew word which signifies separated, because they pretended to a greater degree of holiness than the rest of the Jews. Luke xviii., 9. The Talmud enumerates seven classes of Pharisees.

PHARMACOPCEIA, a book of directions for the preparation of medicines, published by colleges of physicians. In 1862 the General Medical Council were empowered to prepare and sell a new Pharmacopceia, to supersede those of the colleges of London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, which was published in June, 1864.

PHARMACY: the knowledge of the chemical and medical properties of drugs and other things employed medicinally. The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, founded in 1841, mainly by Mr. Jacob Bell, obtained its charter in 1843. It publishes a monthly journal.—15 & 16 Vict., c. 56 (1852), regulates the qualifications of pharmaceutical chemists.

PHAROS, of Ptolemy Philadelphus of Alexandria, was esteemed as one of the wonders of the world. It was a tower built of white marble, erected about 250 B.C. On the top, fires were constantly kept, to direct sailors in the bay. The building cost 500 talents, which are equivalent to above £165,100 English, if Attic; or, if Alexandrian, double that sum. There was this inscription upon it—"King Ptolemy to the gods, the saviors, for the benefit of sailors;" but Sosstratus, the architect, wishing to claim all the glory, engraved his own name upon the stones, and afterward filled the hollow with mortar, and wrote the above inscription. When the mortar had decayed, Ptolemy's name disappeared, and the following inscription became visible: "Sosstratus the Cnidian, son of Dexiphanes, to the gods, the saviors, for the benefit of sailors."

PHARSALIA, a strong city in Thessaly, N. Greece. Near it Julius Cæsar defeated his rival Pompey, Aug. 9, 48 B.C. Pompey fled to Egypt, where he was treacherously slain, by order of Ptolemy the younger, then a minor, and his body thrown naked on the strand, till it was burnt by his faithful freedman, Philip.

PHILADELPHIA (Asia Minor). See Seven Churches.—PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, was planned by William Penn in 1682. The first American Congress assembled here in 1774, and promulgated the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776. It was the capital of the Union till 1800, when Washington was selected in its place.

PHILIPHAUGH, near Selkirk, S. Scotland, where the Marquess of Montrose and the Royalists were defeated by David Leslie and the Scotch Covenanters, Sept. 13, 1645.

PHILIPPI (Macedonia), so named by the great Philip. Here Octavius Cæsar and Marc Antony defeated the republican forces of Brutus and Cassius, who both committed suicide, Oct., 42 B.C. Paul wrote an epistle to the Christians at Philippi, A.D. 64.

PHILIPPICS, the term applied to the orations of Demosthenes against Philip II. of Macedon, 352-341 B.C., and also to the orations of Cicero against Marc Antony (the second of which, called divine by Juvenal, cost Cicero his life), 43 B.C.

PHILIPPINE ISLES (in the Malay Archipelago), discovered by Magellan in March, 1521, who here lost his life in a skirmish. They were taken possession of in 1505 by a fleet from Mexico, which first stopped at the island of Zebu, and subdued it. In 1570 a settlement was effected at the mouth of the Manila River, and Manila became the capital of the Spanish possessions in the Philippines. See Manilla.

PHILISTINES, a people of Palestine, conquered Israel 1156 B.C., and ruled it forty years. They were defeated by Samuel, 1120; and by Saul and Jonathan, 1057. They again invaded Israel about 1063, when David slew their champion, Goliath. After David became king he thoroughly subdued them, 1040. In common with Syria, their country was subjugated by the Romans under Pompey about 63. In Germany, about A.D. 1830, Heine and the Liberal party applied the term "Philistines" to the opponents of progress, the Conservative party.

PHILOBIBLION SOCIETY was instituted in 1853 by Mr. R. Moncton Milnes (now Lord Houghton), M. Sylvain van de Weyer, the Belgian minister, and others. It publishes volumes of "Miscellanies," etc.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. See Alchemy.

PHILOSOPHY (love of wisdom), the knowledge of the reason of things, in opposition to history, which is only the knowledge of facts; or to mathematics, which is the knowledge of the quantity of things—the hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.—Locke. Pythagoras first adopted the name of philosopher (such men having been previously called sages) about 528 B.C. Philosophers were expelled from Rome, and their schools suppressed by Domitian, A.D. 83. Philosophy is now divided into, 1. Moral or Ethical; 2. Intellectual; 3. Natural or Physical.

MORAL AND INTELLECTUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ANCIENT SCHOOLS.—Pythagorean, about 500 B.C.; Platonic (the Academy), by Plato, 374; Peripatetic (the Lyceum), by Aristotle, 334; Skeptical, by Pyrrho, 334; Cynic, by Diogenes, 330; Epicurean, by Epicurus, 306; Stoic, by Zeno, 290; Middle Academy, by Arcesilanus, 278; New Academy, by Carneades, 160.

MODERN SYSTEMS.—Rational, Bacon, about A.D., 1624; Cartesian, Descartes, about 1650; Reflective or Perceptive, Locke, 1690; Idealistic, Berkeley, 1710; Elective, Leibnitz, 1710; Common Sense, Reid, 1750–70; Transcendental, Kant, Hamilton, etc., 1770–1860; Scientific, Fichte, 1800–14; Absolute Identity, Schelling, 1800–20; Absolute Idealism, Hegel, 1810–30; Utilitarian, Bentham, 1790–1830; Positive, Comte, 1830.

NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

Greek and Latin.—Thales, about 600 B.C.; Pythagoras, 590; Aristotle and Plato, 350; Euclid, 300; Archimedes, 287; Hipparchus, 150; Lucretius, about 100; Julius Cæsar, 50; Ptolemy, A.D. 150.

Middle Ages.—Arabians: Ben Musa, 800; Alhazen, etc., 1100. Gerbert, Decimals, 950; Roger Bacon, Opus Majus, 1266.

PHIPPS'S EXPEDITION. The Hon. Capt. Phipps (afterward Lord Mulgrave) sailed from England in command of the Sea-Horse and Carcass ships, to make discoveries, as near as possible, to the North Pole, 1773. In August of that year, he was for nine days environed with impenetrable barriers of ice in the Frozen Ocean, north of Spitzbergen, 80° 45' N. lat. All farther progress was not only impossible, but retreat also, and in this dreadful situation all on board gave themselves up for lost; but a brisk wind in two or three days accomplished their deliverance. They returned to England without having made any discoveries, Sept. 20, 1773. Nelson was coxswain to the second in command.

PHIOCIS, a state in Northern Greece. The Phocians seized Delphi 357 B.C., and commenced the second Sacred War. They were opposed by Thebes and other states, and were utterly subdued by Philip II. of Macedonia in 346.

PHENICIA, on the sea-coast of Syria. The natives were the most eminent navigators and traders of antiquity; their cities or allied states being Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, Tripoli, Byblos, and Ptolemais or Acre. From the 19th to the 13th centuries before Christ they established colonies on the shores or isles of the Mediterranean—Carthage, Hippo, Utica, Gades, Panormus, and are said to have visited the British Isles. Phœnicia was conquered by Cyrus 537 B.C.; by Alexander, 334; by the Romans, 47; and, after partaking of the fortunes of Palestine, was added to the Ottoman Empire, A.D. 1516.

PHENIX CLUBS, of a treasonable character, were formed in Ireland in 1853. They met at night to drill. Several persons were arrested and tried in March, 1859, at Tralee, but the jury could not agree on their verdict. Eventually some of the prisoners pleaded guilty, and were discharged on being bound over to keep the peace.

PHONOGRAPH, a machine which may be attached to piano-fortes and other keyed instruments, by which any music that is played may be written down on blank paper, since it rules and prints the notes simultaneously. It was patented by Mr. Feenby, June 13, 1863. The motive power is electro-magnetism. Machines with a similar object were projected by Mr. Creed in 1747; Mr. J. F. Unger in 1774; and by Mr. Carreyre in 1827.

PHONOGRAPHY (from the Greek phonē, sound). The Phonetic Society, whose object is to render our mode of writing and printing more consonant to sound, was established March 1, 1843; Sir W. C. Trevelyan president, and Mr. Isaac Pitman secretary, the latter being the inventor of the system, which was made known in 1837. Among other works published by the promoters of the system was the "Phonetic News" in 1849.

PHOSPHORUS was discovered in 1667 by Brandt, of Hamburg, who procured it from urine. The discovery was prosecuted by John Kunkel, a Saxon chemist, about 1670, and by the Hon. R. Boyle about the same time.—Nov. Dict. Phosphoric acid is first mentioned in 1743, but is said to have been known earlier. Gahn pointed out its existence in bones in 1769, and Scheele devised a process for extracting it. Canton's phosphorus is so called from its discoverer, 1768. Photophosphureted hydrogen was discovered by Sir Humphry Davy in 1812. The consumption of phosphorus has immensely increased since the manufacture of lucifer matches. In 1845, Schrötter, of Vienna, discovered what is termed allotropic or amorphous phosphorus, which is not so unwholesome to work as ordinary phosphorus.

PHOTOGRAPHY. The action of light on chloride of silver was known as early as the 16th century. The phenomenon was studied by Scheele (1777), Senebier (1790), Ritter and Wollaston (1801). From the results of these investigations, experiments were made by Thos. Wedgwood and Humphry Davy, in the Royal Institution, London, which were published in its journal, 1802. Wedgwood may be regarded as the first photographer. His paper was entitled "An account of a method of copying paintings upon glass, and of making profiles by the agency of light upon nitrate of silver."

Farther discoveries were made by Niépce in 1814, and Sir J. Herschel in 1819.

Daguerre commenced his experiments in 1824, and in 1826 joined Niépce, and worked with him till the death of the latter in 1833. The production of Daguerreotype plates was announced in Jan., 1839; and the French Chamber of Deputies granted a pension to Daguerre and to Isidore Niépce (the son).

In 1839 Mr. Henry Fox Talbot first published his mode of multiplying photographic impressions, by producing a negative photograph (i. e. with the light and shades reversed) from which any number of positive copies may be obtained. His patent for producing the Talbotype or Calotype (on paper) is dated Feb., 1841.

In 1851, collodion (which see) was applied to photography by Mr. F. Archer.

The Photographic Society of London was established in 1853. It publishes a journal. On Dec. 22, 1852, 774 specimens of photography were exhibited at the rooms of the Society of Arts, Adelphi.

Celestial Photography began with Professor Bond, the astronomer of Cambridge, U. S., who exhibited a photograph of the moon in 1851. Since then, Mr. Warren de la Rue, of London, has produced excellent photographs of the moon and other heavenly bodies, and on July 13, 1860, photographed the solar eclipse.

Cartes de Visite portraits (which see) taken by M. Ferrier at Nice, 1857.

In 1861, Mr. Thompson, of Weymouth, photographed the bottom of the sea.

Photography was successfully applied to the transfer of works of art to wood blocks by Mr. John Leighton in his illustrated edition of Lyra Germanica, 1861.

In 1861, Professor O. M. Rood suggested the application of photography to the microscope.

The tannin process introduced by Major Russell about 1861.

The copyright of photographs is secured by an act passed in 1862.

Dr. Henry Wright photographed objects of surgical interest in Jan., 1863.

The Wothlytype process, in which nitrate of silver and albumen are discarded, and a double salt of uranium and collodion substituted, was announced in the autumn of 1864.

The light of ignited magnesium was employed for photographs by Mr. Brothers, of Manchester, in the spring of 1864.

PHOTOGRAPHY, the art of producing engravings by the action of light and electricity. The earliest specimens were produced by Nicéphore Niépce, and presented by him in 1827 to the great botanist Robert Brown. Great advances have since been made in this art by MM. Nicépce de St. Victor (who published a treatise on it in 1856) and Vitry, Mr. W. R. Grove, H. Fox Talbot, etc. In 1852, Paul Preisch patented a process which he called "Photogalvanography."

PHOTOGRAPHIC ENGRAVING (a process by which the light actually etches a picture on a plate that may be and has been printed from) was patented by Mr. H. Fox Talbot in 1855, and is described and exemplified in the Photographic News, Sept. 9 and 16, 1859, a specimen being given in the latter number.

PHOTOZINOGRAPHY (a process by which photographs are transferred to zinc plates which may be printed from) was devised by Sir Henry James, chief of the Ordnance Survey, and made known in 1860. By it maps, charts, and engravings may be printed at a small cost.

PHOTO-SCULPTURE: M. Villème's employment of photographs in the formation of sculpture was announced in 1863.

PHOTOMETER (light-measurer): one was constructed by Dr. W. Ritchie in 1825. Many improvements have been made recently in connection with photography.

PHRYGIA (now Kerman), a province in Asia Minor, in which Troy was situated; became part of the Persian Empire in 537 B.C., and partook of its changes. It became a Roman province in 47 B.C., and a Turkish one A.D. 1392.

PHYSIC appears to have been first practiced by the Egyptian priests. Pythagoras endeavored to explain the philosophy of disease and the action of medicine about 529 B.C. Hippocrates, the father of medicine, flourished about 422 B.C., and Galen, born A.D. 131, was the oracle of medical science. About 980, Avicenna, an Arab, wrote a system of medicine. The discovery of the circulation of the blood, by Dr. Harvey, furnished an entirely new system of physiological and pathological speculation, 1628.*

PHYSIC GARDENS. The first cultivated in England was by John Gerard, surgeon, of London, in 1567; that at Oxford was endowed by the Earl of Danby in 1652; that at Cambridge was commenced about the middle of the last century; and that at Chelsea, originated by Sir Hans Sloane, was given to the Apothecaries' Company in 1721: this last was very much admired by the illustrious Linnaeus.

PHYSICIANS, ROYAL COLLEGE OF (of London (of England since 1855), was projected by Dr. Linacre, physician to Henry VIII.,† who, through his interest with Cardinal Wolsey, obtained letters-patent, constituting a corporate body of regular physicians in London with peculiar privileges, Sept. 23, 1518. Linacre was elected the first president of the college. Dr. W. Harvey was a great benefactor to this institution, 1653. He built a library and public hall, which he granted forever to the college, with his books and instruments. The college was afterward held in a building in Warwick Lane, erected by Sir C. Wren, where it continued till 1825, when the present elegant stone edifice in Trafalgar Square was erected from designs by Sir R. Smirke.—The College of Physicians, Dublin, was founded by charter of Charles II., 1667, and was reincorporated in 1692. The Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, Nov. 29, 1651.

PHYSICS. See under Philosophy.

PHYSIOGNOMY, a science which affirms that the dispositions of mankind may be discovered from the features of the face. The origin of the term is referred to Aristotle; Cicero was attached to the science. It became a fashionable study from the beginning of the 16th century; and in the last century, the essays of Le Cat and Permethy led to the modern system. Lavater's researches in this pursuit arose from his having been struck with the singular countenance of a soldier who passed under a window at which he and Zimmerman were standing; his "Fragment" on this subject appeared in 1776.

PHYSIOLOGY is that part of physics which treats of the inner constitution of animals and plants, and the several functions and operations of all their organs and tissues. The works of Müller, Milne Edwards, and Carpenter are much celebrated, and Todd's Cyclopædia of Physiology (1836-59) is a library in itself.

PIANO-FORTE, invented by J. C. Schröder, of Dresden, in 1717; he presented a model of his invention to the court of Saxony; and, some time after, G. Silverman, a musical instrument maker, began to manufacture piano-fortes with considerable success. The invention has also been ascribed to an instrument maker at Florence. The square piano-forte was first made by Frederica, an organ-builder of Saxony, about 1758. Piano-fortes were made in London by M. Zumpie, a German, 1766, and have since been greatly improved by Broadwood, Collard, Kirkman, Erard, Chickering and Sons, Boston, Mass., Steinway & Co., of New York, and others.

PICENTINES, a Sabine tribe, subdued by the Romans, and their capital, Asculum, taken, 263 B.C. They began the Social War in 90, and were conquered in 89 B.C.

PICHEGRU'S CONSPIRACY. See Georges, etc.

PICQUET, the first known game upon the cards, invented, it is said, by Joqueim, for the amusement of Charles VI. of France, then in feeble health, 1390.—Mézéry.

PICTS. A Scythian or German colony, who landed in Scotland much about the time that the Scots began to seize upon the Hebrides, or Western Isles (Hebrudes). They afterward lived as two distinct nations, the Scots in the highlands and isles, and the Picts in that part now called the lowlands. Between 833 and 842, the Scots under Kenneth II. totally subdued the Picts, and seized all their kingdom. See Roman Wall.

PICTURES. See Painting.

PIEDMONT (Pedemontium, Latin, foot of the mountains), a region in N. Italy, the seat of government of the kingdom of Sardinia, which see.

PIE-POUDRE COURT, the Court of Dusty Foot, whose jurisdiction was established for cases arising at fairs and markets, to do justice to the buyer and seller immediately upon the spot. By statute 17 Edw. IV. it had cognizance of all disputes in the precincts of the market to which it might belong, 1477.

PIER AND HARBOR ACT, to facilitate the formation, management, and maintenance of piers and harbors in Great Britain and Ireland, was passed in 1862.

medicine; but in that reign no appointment existed which can justly be called physician to the royal person. By this warrant the king, with the consent of his privy council, deputed to three physicians and two surgeons the regulation of his diet, and the administration of such medicines and remedies as might be sufficient for his cure, without any allusion to the previous existence or permanency of the office which they were authorized for a time to fill, or to a remuneration for their services.—Life of Linacre.

* When they took a long journey, they carried tame pigeons with them. When they thought proper to write to their friends, they let one of these birds loose, with letters fastened to its neck; the bird, once

* On Sept. 28, 1865, Miss Garrett, at Apothecaries' Hall, London, received the license to practice medicine.

† Physician to the King.—The earliest mandate or warrant for the attendance of a physician at court is dated 1451, the 33 Henry VI., a reign fertile in the patronage which was afforded to practitioners in PILGRIMAGE or GRACE. An insurrection, so called, began in Oct., 1536, headed by Aske, and other gentlemen of Yorkshire, joined by priests and 40,000 men of York, Durham, Lancaster, and other counties, against Henry VIII. They took Hull and York, with smaller towns. The Duke of Norfolk marched against them and made terms, and they dispersed. In 1537 they again took arms, but were promptly suppressed, and great numbers were executed.

PILGRIMAGES* began with the pilgrimage of the Empress Helena to Jerusalem, 326. They became frequent at the close of the 10th century. Robert II. of France made several pilgrimages; among others, one to Rome about the year 1016, perhaps in 1020, when he refused the imperial dignity and the kingdom of Italy. —Hemault.

"PILGRIM'S PROGRESS," written by John Bunyan, in Bedford jail, where he was imprisoned twelve years, 1660-72. The first part was published in 1678. A Hebrew version appeared in 1851.

PILORY, a scaffold for persons to stand on, to render them publicly infamous. This punishment was awarded against persons convicted of forgery, perjury, libeling, etc. In some cases the head was put through a hole, the hands through two others, the nose slit, the face branded with one or more letters, and one or both ears were cut off. There is a statue of the pilory, 41 Hen. III., 1256. Many persons died in the pilory by being struck with stones by the mob, and pelted with rotten eggs and putrid offal. It was abolished as a punishment in all cases except perjury, 1815, and totally abolished in 1837. The last who suffered at the Old Bailey was Peter Jas. Bossy for perjury, June 24, 1830.

PILNITZ, near Dresden, Saxony. The famous convention of Pilnitz took place between the Emperor Leopold and the King of Prussia, July 20, 1791. On Aug. 27 the treaty of Pilnitz, or, as some style it, the Partition Treaty, was finally agreed upon at Pavia by the courts in concert. It was to the effect "that the emperor should retake all that Louis XIV. had conquered in the Austrian Netherlands, and uniting these provinces to the Netherlands, give them to his serene highness the elector palatine, to be added to the palatinate; Bavaria to be added to the Austrian possessions," etc.

PILOT. The act relating to pilots, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 129 (1853), with other acts, is embodied in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. See Trinity House.

PINE-TREES. The Stone pine (Pinus Pinea), brought to these countries before 1543. The Cluster pine (Pinus Pinaster), brought from the South of Europe before 1596. The Weymouth pine (Pinus Strobus), from North America, 1705. Frankincense pine (Pinus Teda), from North America, before 1713. There are other varieties.

PINKEY (near Edinburgh), where the English under the Earl of Hertford, protector, totally defeated the Scots, Sept. 10, 1547. There fell not 200 of the English, but above 10,000 of the Scots. Above 1500 were taken prisoners. —Hume.

PINS are mentioned in a statute of 1483. Brass pins were brought from France in 1540, and first used in England, it is said, by Catharine Howard, queen of Henry VIII. Pins were made in England in 1543. —Stow. They were first manufactured by machinery in England in 1824, under a patent of Lemuel Wellman Wright, of the United States.

PIRACY was severely repressed by the Romans. Pompey destroyed the Cilician pirates, 67 B.C. See Buccaneers. An act of Parliament to punish piracy was passed in 1837.

PIREUS, the port of Athens, was united to the city by two long walls, one erected by Themistocles, and the other by Pericles, 456 B.C., which were destroyed by Lysander, 404 B.C. It was fortified by Conon, 393 B.C. The Pireus was able to contain 400 Greek vessels. It was occupied by the French during the Russian War in 1854.

released, would never cease its flight till it arrived at its nest and young ones. These three are said to be his father his victory at the Olympic games by sending to him a pigeon stained with purple. —Arad. Hirtius and Brutus corresponded by means of pigeons at the siege of Modena. In modern times, the most noted were the pigeons of Aleppo, which served as couriers at Alexandria and Bagdad. Thirty-two pigeons sent to Antwerp were liberated from London at 7 o'clock in the morning, and on the same day, at noon, one of them arrived at Antwerp; a quarter of an hour afterward a second arrived; the remainder on the following day, Nov. 23, 1819. —Phillips.

* PILGRIM FATHERS is the name given in North America to a party of about 100 English Puritans who sailed in the May-Flower to North America in 1620.

PISA, an ancient city in Tuscany, was founded about six centuries before Christ, and was favored by the early Roman emperors. The citizens took an active part in the Italian wars of the Middle Ages, and eventually became subject to Florence, after a long siege, 1405-6. The University was founded in 1343, and revived by the Medici in 1472 and 1542. The celebrated Campanile, or leaning tower, was built about 1154,* and the Campo Santo about the same time. The rival popes, Benedict XIII. and Gregory XII., were deposed at a council held at Pisa in 1409, and Alexander V. elected in their room.

PISCICULTURE. See Fisheries.

PISTOLS, the smallest sort of fire-arms, carried sometimes at the saddle-bow, sometimes in a girdle round the waist, sometimes in the pocket, etc. —Pardon. Pistols were first used by the cavalry of England in 1544. Of late years they have been made with a revolving cylindrical breech, in which are formed several chambers for receiving cartridges, and bringing them in succession into a line with the barrel ready for firing. The earliest model of this kind of arm is to be found in the United Service Museum, and is supposed to date from the reign of Charles I. The manufacture of pistols by machinery was first introduced into England from the United States, America, in the year 1853, by Colonel Colt, the inventor of the celebrated Colt revolver, at which time nearly the whole of the machinery used was new to this country. The perfection and economy of this system of manufacture induced the British government to establish the Enfield armory in the year 1855.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND. A small island in the Pacific Ocean, said to have been discovered by Pitcairn in 1768, and seen by Cook in 1773, and since noted for being colonized by ten mutineers from the ship Bounty, Captain Bligh, in 1789.† See Bounty.

PITT ADMINISTRATIONS.‡ The first administration was formed on the dismissal of the Coalition ministry (which see), Dec. 27, 1783, and terminated by resignation in 1801. The second was formed May 12, 1804, and terminated by Mr. Pitt's death, January 23, 1806. A public funeral was decreed to his honor by Parliament, and a grant made of £40,000 to pay his debts.

ADMINISTRATION OF 1783.

William Pitt, First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Earl Gower, Lord President.

Duke of Rutland, Privy Seal.

Marquess of Carmarthen and Earl Temple, immediately succeeded by Lord Sydney, Secretaries.

Lord Thurlow, Lord Chancellor.

Viscount Howe, Admiralty.

Duke of Richmond, Ordinance.

William Wyndham Granville, Henry Dundas, etc.

[Mr. Pitt continued minister until 1801. Many changes in his ministry, of course, occurred in the long period of seventeen years.]

ADMINISTRATION OF 1804.

William Pitt, First Lord of the Treasury.

Lord Eldon, Lord Chancellor.

Duke of Portland, succeeded by Lord Sidmouth (late Mr. Addington), Lord President.

Earl of Westmoreland, Lord Privy Seal.

Lord Hawkesbury, Lord Harrowby (succeeded by Lord Mulgrave), and Earl Camden (succeeded by Viscount Castlereagh, Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries).

* This celebrated tower was erected for the purpose of containing bells, and stands in a square close to the Cathedral of Pisa. It is built entirely of white marble, and is a beautiful cylinder of eight stories, each adorned with a round of columns, rising one above another. It inclines so far on one side from the perpendicular, that in dropping a plummet from the top, which is 188 feet in height, it falls sixteen feet from the base. Some think this was done purposely by the architect; others attribute it to an accidental subsidence of the foundation. From this tower Galileo made his observations on gravitation (about 1635).

† They remained unknown to England until discovered accidentally in 1814. A ship nearing the island was hailed by a swarthy youth in the English language, when it appeared that the mutineers, soon after settling there, had married some black women from a neighboring island, and had become a singularly well-conducted community under the fostering care of Adam, the principal mutineer. As their numbers increased, the island proved incapable of their support. Their priest, the Rev. Mr. Nobbs, obtained for them the favor of the English government, which removed them, with all their property, in the ship Morayshire, on May 3d, and landed them, after a boisterous passage, on Norfolk Island, prepared previously for their reception, June 8, 1856. The government stocked Norfolk Island with 3000 sheep, 450 head of cattle, and 30 horses, and gave them stores to last twelve months; their numbers were 96 males and 102 females.

‡ William Pitt, the second son of the great Earl of Chatham, was born March 28, 1759; became M.P. Jan. 26, 1782; moved for reform in Parliament, May 7, 1782; and became Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1782; died Jan. 23, 1806.

Viscount Melville (succeeded by Lord Barham), Admiralty.
Duke of Montrose, Mr. Dundas, etc.

PITTSBURG LANDING (Tennessee). On Sunday, April 6, 1862, a great battle was fought between the National troops under Grant, and the Confederates under Albert Sydney Johnston and Beauregard. The latter began the attack and were nearly victorious, but lost their able general Johnston. Grant was re-enforced by Buell the next day and renewed the attack; the Confederates were on this day defeated, and soon after retired to Corinth. The Confederate loss in the two days' battles was about 11,000; the National, 14,000. This battle is also called that of Shiloh.

PIUS IV., CREED OF. See Confessions.

PLACENTIA, a city in North Italy, founded by the Romans about 220 B.C. It suffered in all the convulsions attending the fall of the empire and the wars of the Middle Ages. In 1254 it fell under the rule of the family of the Scotti. In 1302 Alberto Scotti was overcome and Placentia was united to Milan, then ruled by the Visconti. On their extinction in 1447, Placentia revolted, but was taken by Sforza, duke of Milan, and treated very cruelly. In 1513 it was given to Pope Leo X. In 1545, Paul III. gave it, with Parma, as a duchy, to his son, Peter Louis Farnese. See Parma.

PLAGUE. The plagues of Egypt (1491 B.C.) are described in Exodus, chap. ix., etc. The first recorded general plague in all parts of the world occurred 767 B.C.—Petavius. At Carthage a plague was so terrible that people sacrificed their children to appease the gods, 534 B.C.—Baronius. At Rome prevailed a desolating plague, carrying off a hundred thousand persons in and round the city, 461 B.C. The plague at Athens, which spread into Egypt and Ethiopia, and caused an awful devastation, 430 B.C., is admirably described by Thucydides. Another, which raged in the Greek islands, Egypt, and Syria, destroyed 2000 persons every day, 188 B.C.—Pliny. See Cattle.

At Rome, a most awful plague; 10,000 persons perished daily, 80.

Again ravaged the Roman Empire, 167, 169, 189.

Another in the Roman Empire. For some time 5000 persons died daily at Rome, and many towns were entirely depopulated, 250-265.

In Britain, a plague swept away such multitudes that the living were scarcely sufficient to bury the dead, 430.

A dreadful one began in Europe in 558, extended all over Asia and Africa, and it is said did not cease for many years.

At Constantinople, when 200,000 of its inhabitants perished, and in Calabria, Sicily, and Greece, 746-749.

In London, 962.

At Chichester, in England, an epidemical disease carried off 34,000 persons, 772.—Will. Malm.

In Scotland 40,000 persons perished of a pestilence, 954.

In London, a great mortality, 1094; and in Ireland, 1095.

Again in London: it extended to cattle, fowls, and other domestic animals, 1111.—Holinshed.

In Ireland: after Christmas this year, Henry II. was forced to quit the country, 1172.

Again in Ireland, when a prodigious number perished, 1204.

The "Black Death" in Italy, 1340.

A plague raged throughout Europe, causing extensive mortality. Britain and Ireland suffered grievously. In London alone 200 persons were buried daily in the Charter House yard, 1348. (That at Florence described by Boccaccio.)

In London and Paris a dreadful mortality prevailed in 1362 and 1367, and in Ireland in 1370.

A great pestilence in Ireland, called the Fourth, destroyed a great number of the people, 1383.

30,000 persons perished of a dreadful pestilence in London, 1401.

Again in Ireland, superinduced by a famine: great numbers died, 1466; and Dublin was wasted by a plague, 1470.

An awful pestilence at Oxford, 1471; and throughout England, a plague which destroyed more people than the continual wars for the fifteen preceding years, 1478.—Rapin; Salmon.

The awful Sudor Anglicus, or sweating sickness, very fatal in London, 1485.—Delanue.

The plague in London so dreadful that Henry VII. and his court removed to Calais, 1499-1500.—Stow.

The sweating sickness (mortal in three hours) in London, 1506; and again in 1517. In most of the capital towns in England half the inhabitants died, and Oxford was depopulated, 9 Hen. VIII.—Stow.

Limerick was visited by a plague, when many thousands perished, 1522.

The sweating sickness again in England, 1528; and in North Germany in 1529; and for the fifth time in England in 1551.

30,578 persons perished of the plague in London alone, 1603-1604. It was also fatal in Ireland.

200,000 perished of a pestilence at Constantinople in 1611.

In London a great mortality prevailed, and 35,417 persons perished, 1625.

In France, a general mortality; at Lyons, 60,000 persons died, 1632.

The plague, brought from Sardinia to Naples (being introduced by a transport with soldiers on board), raged with such violence as to carry off 400,000 of the inhabitants in six months, 1656.

THE GREAT PLAGUE OF LONDON in 1664-5, which carried off 68,596 persons; some say 100,000.* Fires were kept up night and day to purify the air for three days; and it is thought the infection was not totally destroyed till the great conflagration of 1666. 60,000 persons perished of the plague at Marseilles and neighborhood, brought in a ship from the Levant, 1720.

One of the most awful plagues that ever raged prevailed in Syria, 1760.—Abbe Mariti.

In Persia, a fatal pestilence, which carried off 80,000 of the inhabitants of Bassora, 1773.

In Egypt, above 800,000 persons died of plague, 1792. In Barbary, 3000 died daily; and at Fez 247,000 perished, 1799.

In Spain and at Gibraltar, immense numbers were carried off by a pestilential disease in 1804 and 1805.

Again at Gibraltar, an epidemic fever, much resembling the plague, caused great mortality, 1828.

The Asiatic cholera (see Cholera) made its first appearance in England at Sunderland, Oct. 26, 1831; in Scotland, at Haddington, Dec. 23, same year; and in Ireland, at Belfast, March 14, 1832.

The cholera again visited England, etc., 1848 and 1849. See Cholera.

The cholera raged at Smyrna and Constantinople, and appeared in Paris, Marseilles, Naples, July—Dec., 1865.

A great cattle plague in England, resembling typhus, near London, begins June—increasing Dec., 1865.

PLANETS. The planet Jupiter was known as a planet to the Chinese and the Chaldeans; to the former, it is said 3000 B.C.; correctly inserted in a chart of the heavens, made about 600 B.C., and in which 1460 stars are accurately described; this chart is said to be in the Imperial library at Paris. The satellites of Jupiter are generally considered to have been discovered by Galileo, 1616; but Jansen, it is affirmed, claimed some acquaintance with them about twenty years before. We now know nine primary planets, termed major: Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Vulcan; and eighty-four secondary or minor, situated between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter.†

Uranus, formerly called Georgium Sidus and Herschel; discovered by W. Herschel (see Georgium Sidus).....March 13, 1781

* The following passage is taken from De Foe's History of the Plague (a work of imagination): "It commenced in Dec., 1664. In May, June, and July, it had continued with great severity; but in August and September it quickened into dreadful activity, sweeping away 8000 persons in a week. Then it was that the whole British nation wept for the sufferings of the metropolis. In some houses carcases lay waiting for burial; and in others, persons were seen doubled up in their last agonies. In one room were heard dying groans; and in the next the ravings of delirium mingled with the wailings of relatives and friends, and the apprehensive shrieks of children. Infants passed at once from the womb to the grave. The yet healthy child hung upon the putrid breast of a dead mother; and the nuptial bed was changed into a sepulchre. Some of the affected ran about staggering like drunken men, and fell and expired in the streets; while others calmly laid themselves down, never to rise but at the call of the last trumpet. At length, in the middle of September, more than 12,000 perished in one week; in one night 4000 died; and in the whole, not 68,000, as has been stated, but 100,000 perished of this plague. The hearsees were but dead-carts which continually traversed the streets, while the appalling cry, 'Bring out your dead,' thrilled through every soul. Then it was that parents, husbands, wives, and children saw all those that were dear to them thrown with a pitchfork into a cart, like the offal of a slaughter-house, to be conveyed without the walls, and flung into one promiscuous heap, without the rites of sepulture, without a coffin, and without a shroud! Some graves were dug so large as to hold a thousand bodies each; and into those huge holes, the living, wrapped in blankets and rags, threw themselves among the dead, in their agonies and delirium. They were often found in this state hugging the flesh of their kindred that had not quite perished. People, in the intolerable torment of their swellings, ran wild and mad, laying violent hands upon themselves; and even mothers, in their lunacy, murdered their own children. When the carts were insufficient for their office, the houses and streets were rendered tenfold more pestilential by the unburied dead."—De Foe.

PLANETARIUM. David Rittenhouse, the eminent mechanic and mathematician, of Philadelphia, constructed a planetarium in 1768 which has elicited the highest praise. It was superior to any thing that had been previously constructed, and was purchased by the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, where it remains. Upon it is this inscription: "Invented by David Rittenhouse, A.D. 1768; repaired and extended by Henry Voight, 1806; both of Philadelphia." It is said that when Cornwallis took possession of Princeton, after Washington left it on the morning of the 3d of January, 1777, he intended to carry off this planetarium and send it as a trophy to England; but the Americans kept him too busy to allow him to plunder.

PLANING MACHINE. One for wood was constructed by Bramah about 1802, and one for iron by Joseph Clement in 1825.

PLANTAGENET,* HOUSE OF, to which belonged fourteen English kings, from Henry II., 1154, to Richard III., killed at the battle of Bosworth, 1485. See England, p. 158.

PLANTATIONS. See Trade.

PLASSEY, in Bengal, India, the site of a battle fought between the British under Clive, and the Hindoos under Surajah Dowlah, June 23, 1757. The nabob, although at the head of about 68,000 men, was vanquished by 1000 British and about 2000 Sepoys. The victory laid the foundation of the British empire in India. See India.

PLASTER OF PARIS. Gypsum, sulphate of lime, used for moulds, statuary, etc., first found at Montmartre, a village near Paris, whence it obtained its name. The method of taking likenesses by its use was first discovered by Andrea Verrochio about 1466.

PLATA, LA. See Argentine Republic.

PLATÆA (Bœotia, N. Greece), site of the battle between Mardonius, commander of the army of Xerxes of Persia, and Pausanias, commanding the Lacedæmonians and Athenians, Sept. 22, 479 B.C.; the same day as the battle of Mycale. Of 300,000 Persians scarce 3000 escaped with their lives. The Grecian army, about 110,000, lost but few men. The Greeks obtained immense plunder, and were henceforth delivered from the fear of Persian invasions. Platæa was destroyed by the Thebans, 374 B.C.

PLATE. In England, plate, with the exception of spoons, was prohibited in public houses by statute 8 Will. III. (1696). The celebrated Plate Act passed in May, 1756. This act was repealed in 1780. The act laying a stamp duty upon plate passed in 1784. See Goldsmith's Company. By 17 & 18 Vict., c. 96 (1854), gold wares were allowed to be manufactured at a lower standard; but a later act excepted marriage-rings. —The art of covering baser metals with a thin plate of silver, either for use or for ornament (PLATING), said to have been invented by a Birmingham spur-maker, who began with making the branches of a pair of spurs hollow, and filling the hollow with a slender rod of steel. He continued to make the hollow larger and the iron thicker, till at last he merely coated the iron spur with silver. See Electrotype.

PLATINUM, the heaviest of all the metals except Osmium. The name originated with the Spaniards on account of its silvery color, from the word Plata, signifying silver. It was found in the auriferous sand of the River Pinto, in South America, and was unknown in Europe until 1741, when Don Antonia Ulloa announced its existence in the narrative of his voyage to Peru. —Greig. In its ore have been found the metals Palladium, Rhodium, Osmium, Iridium, and Ruthenium (which see). In 1859, M. H. Ste. Claire Deville made known a new method of obtaining platinum from its ore, in great abundance and purity, and at the international exhibition of 1862 was shown a mass worth £3840, weighing 266½ lbs., of a metal hitherto considered infusible, obtained by his process.

* Fulke Martel, earl of Anjou, having contrived the death of his nephew, the Earl of Brittany, in order to succeed to the earldom, his confessor sent him, in atonement for the murder, to Jerusalem, attended by only two servants, one of whom was to lead him by a halter to the Holy Sepulchre, the other to strip and whip him there, like a common malefactor. Brown, in French quest, in Latin questio, being the only tough, plant shrub in Palestine, the noble criminal was snarled scourged with it, and from this instrument of his chastisement he was called Plantagenista, or Plantagenet. —Skinner and M'Creay.

PLATONIC PHILOSOPHY, the most popular of all systems (see Philosophy). Plato's dialogues have been termed "Philosophy backed by example." He was a disciple of Socrates, 409 B.C., and died 347. The leading feature of his mind was comprehensiveness.

PLATONIC YEAR, the period of time which the equinoxes take to finish their revolution, at the end of which the stars and constellations have the same place with regard to the equinoxes that they had at first. Tycho Brahe says that this year or period requires 25,816 common years to complete it; Ricciolus computes it at 25,920; and Cassini at 24,800; at the end of which time some imagined that there would be a total and natural renovation of the whole creation.

PLATTSBURG, BATTLE AT. On the 11th of Sept., 1814, a land and naval engagement occurred at Plattsburg, on Lake Champlain, between the Americans and the British. The American land forces were commanded by General M'Comb, the naval forces by Commodore M'Donough. The British land force was commanded by General Prevost, the naval force by Commodore Downie. The American land force was about 4500 strong, the British about 14,000. The naval engagement was soon decided in favor of the Americans, and the British land forces soon retreated. In the land engagement, the British lost in killed, wounded, and missing, about 1500; the Americans 102.

PLAYS. See Drama and Theatres.

PLEADINGS. Cloithaire held a kind of movable Parliament called placita, whence came the word pleas, A.D. 616.—Hénault. In the early courts of judicature in England, pleadings were made in the Saxon language in 786; and in Norman-French from the period of the Conquest in 1066 until 1362. Cromwell ordered all law proceedings to be taken in English in 1650. In English law the pleadings are the mutual statements of the plaintiff's cause of action, and the defendant's ground of defense.

PLEBEIANS, Plebes, the citizens of Rome, distinct from the Patricians. See Rome, 494-305 B.C.

PLOTS. See Conspiracies and Rebellions.

PLOW MONDAY, in January, the first Monday after the Epiphany. In 1866, Jan. 8; in 1867, Jan. 14. It received the appellation from its having been fixed upon by our forefathers as the day upon which they returned to the duties of agriculture after enjoying the festivities of Christmas.—Ashe. On Plow Monday, too, the plowmen of the North country used to draw a plow from door to door, and beg plow-money to drink.—Bailey.

PLUM. The English have two native plums: the finer kinds came from Italy and Flanders about 1522. The Diospyros Lotus, the date-plum, was brought from Barbary before 1596. The Fishamin plum, Diospyros Virginiana, from America, before 1629. Formerly damsons, apricots, and peaches went by this name, as raisins do to this day.

PLURAL NUMBER. See We.

PLUS (+) and Minus (-). Professor De Morgan attributes these signs to either Christopher Rudolf, who published a book on Algebra about 1522, or Michael Stifelius, about 1544.

PLYMOUTH, a fortified sea-port in Devonshire. It was in 1583 the rendezvous of the English fleet of 120 sail under Howard, Drake, etc., which pursued the Spanish Armada. The fine hotel and assembly-rooms were burnt Jan. 6, 1863; loss about £50,000. See Break-water and Dock-yards.

PLYMOUTH BRETHERN. A body of Christians calling themselves "the Brethren," which first appeared at Plymouth about 1830. In 1851 they had 132 places of worship in England and Wales. They object to national churches as too latitudinarian, and to Dissenters as too sectarian. They receive into communion all who confess Christ, and own the Holy Ghost as his vicar. Their doctrines agree with those of most evangelical Protestant churches, but they recognize no order of ministers.

PNEUMATIC DISPATCH COMPANY conveys letters and parcels through tubes by means of atmospheric pressure and a vacuum. The London company's act was passed Aug. 13, 1859, and tubes were laid down in Threadneedle Street on Sept. 12, 1860; and on Aug. 20, 1861, successful experiments were performed at Battersea. In 1862 tubes were laid down from the Euston railway station to the N. W. post-office in Camdentown, and on Feb. 21, 1863, the conveyance of the mail-bags began. In Oct., 1865, tubes had been laid down between Euston railway and Holborn; and on Nov. 7 several persons traveled in them. Engineer, Mr. Rammell.

PNEUMATIC LOOM, in which compressed air is the motive power, invented by Mr. Harrison, was exhibited in London in Dec., 1864. A company has been formed to bring it into general use.

PNEUMATIC RAILWAYS. See Atmospheric Railways.

PNEUMATICS, the science which treats of the mechanical properties of air and gases. See Air and Atmospheric Railways.

PODESTÀ (from potestas, power), an Italian governor, afterward a judge; one with supreme authority was appointed at Milan by the Emperor Frederick I. when he took the city in 1158.

POET LAUREATE. Selden could not trace the precise origin of this office.* Chaucer, on his return from abroad, assumed the title of poet laureate; and in the twelfth year of Richard II., 1389, he obtained a grant of an annual allowance of wine. James I., in 1615, granted to his laureate a yearly pension of 100 marks; and in 1630, this stipend was augmented by letters-patent of Charles I. to £100 per annum, with an additional grant of one tierce of Canary Spanish wine, to be taken out of the king's store of wine yearly.

POETRY, the oldest, rarest, and most excellent of the fine arts, and highest species of refined literature. It was the first fixed form of language, and the earliest perpetuation of thought. It existed before music in melody, and before painting in description.—Hazlitt. The song of Moses on the deliverance of the Israelites, and their passage through the Red Sea, 1491 B.C. (Exodus xv.), is the most ancient poetry extant. Orpheus of Thrace is deemed the inventor of poetry (at least in the western part of the world), about 1249 B.C. See Epic, Odes, Satire, Comedy, Tragedy, Sonnets, Ballads, Hymns, and Verses.

POICTIERS (W. France), the site of the battle between Edward the Black Prince and John, king of France, in which the English arms triumphed, Sept. 19, 1356. The standard of France was overthrown, many of her nobility slain, and her king was taken prisoner and brought to London.—Carte.

POISONING. A number of Roman ladies formed a conspiracy for poisoning their husbands, which they too fatally carried into effect. A female slave denounced 170 of them to Fabius Maximus, who ordered them to be publicly executed, 331 B.C. It was said that this was the first public knowledge they had of poisoning at Rome.† Poisoning was made petty treason.

* Warton, in his History of English Poetry, states that in the reign of Henry III. there was a Versificator Regis, to whom an annual stipend was first paid of one hundred shillings. The first mention of a Poet Laureate occurs, we believe, in the reign of Edward IV., when John Kay was laureate; Andrew Bernard was laureate, temp. Henry VII.; and John Skelton, temp. Henry VIII. Edmund Spenser, as above, was poet laureate in the reign of Elizabeth. Whitehead was created on the refusal of Grey, Warton on the refusal of Mason, and Southey on the refusal of Scott. Laurence Eusden commenced a series of Birth-day and New-Year's Odes, which continued till the death of Pye in 1813. We believe that on Southey's appointment the tierce of Canary wine was commuted for £27.

† "At the accession of George I., Rowe was made poet laureate, I am afraid by the ejection of poor Nahum Tate, who died in the Mint, where he was forced to seek shelter from extreme poverty."—Dr. Johnson. On the death of Warton its abolition was recommended by Gibbon, whose elegant compliment on the occasion still more forcibly applied on Wordsworth's death in 1850.—"This is the best time for not filling up the office, when the price is a man of virtue, and the poet just departed was a man of genius."—Decline and Fall, etc., chap. lxx.

‡ A deadly poison freely administered by Italians in the 17th century was called acqua tofana, from the name of the woman Tofania, who made and sold it in small flat vials. She carried on this traffic for half a century, and eluded the police; but, on being taken, confessed that she had been a party in poisoning 600 people. Numerous son in England, and was punished by boiling to death (of which there are some remarkable instances), 23 Hen. VIII., 1552. See Boiling to Death. The frequency of cases of poisoning by means of arsenic, in England, caused the British Legislature to pass a law rendering the sale of arsenic (which, until then, could be obtained without check by any person from druggists' and apothecaries' shops) a matter of difficulty. This act regulated the sale of arsenic, and was passed 14 Vict., c. 13, June 6, 1851.* Recent remarkable cases of poisoning are those for which W. Palmer was executed in 1856, and Miss M. Smith tried in 1857.—See Trials. Catharine Wilson, a noted poisoner, was executed on Oct. 20, 1862. Edward William Pritchard, M.D., was executed at Glasgow, July 28, 1865, for the slow murder of his wife and her mother, by antimony. A committee of the Commons on the subject of the sale of poisons was appointed in 1857, but no legislation has yet ensued. The Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act was passed July 28, 1863.

POITOU, an ancient province W. France, part of the dowry of Eleanor, queen of Henry II. of England. It partook of the fortunes of Aquitaine (which see).

POLAND (N.E. Europe), part of ancient Sarmatia. It is said to have become a duchy under Lechus or Lesko I., 550; and a kingdom under Boleslaus, about 992. The natives belong to the great Slavonic family. The word Pole is not older than the 10th century. The population of the kingdom of Poland in 1857 was 4,789,379.

persons were implicated by her, and many of them were publicly executed. All Italy was thrown into a ferment, and many fled, and some persons of distinction, on conviction, were strangled in prison. It appeared to have been chiefly used by married women who were tired of their husbands. Four or six drops were a fatal dose; but the effect was not sudden, and therefore not suspected. It was as clear as water, but the chemists have not agreed about its real composition. A proclamation of the pope described it as aquafortis distilled into arsenic, and others considered it as a solution of crystallized arsenic. Between 1666 and 1676 the Marchioness de Brinvilliers poisoned her father and two brothers and many others. She was executed July 16, 1676.

* Nov. 1858, 17 persons died at Bradford through eating sweetmeats in which arsenic had been mixed by mistake. Mr. Hodgson, a chemist, was tried for homicide, but was acquitted, though guilty of culpable negligence.

* On Feb. 22, 1846, an Austrian force under General Collin, which had attacked Cracow on the approach of the peasantry, was then proclaimed by the insurgents, and two days afterward they crossed the Vistula, expecting to be joined by the peasantry of Galicia, who were solicited by the nobles and clergy to strike a blow in the cause of liberty. The Austrian government, in order to prevent this junction, excited in the peasantry a suspicion of the motives of the nobles, and offered a reward for every noble delivered up, alive or dead; a general massacre of the nobility and clergy in the circle of Tarnow followed; the insurgents from Cracow were defeated at Gdow, whence they retreated to Podgorze, a suburb of Cracow; here they were attacked by General Collin, and driven into Cracow on the 27th of February. The forces of the three powers then began to concentrate on Cracow; the people in the town opened negotiations with the Austrians about a surrender, and while these were going on, a Russian corps entered the town without resistance, and soon afterward the revolution was at an end.

POLAR CLOCK. An optical apparatus invented by Professor Wheatstone (about 1849), whereby the hour of the day is found by means of the polarization of light.

POLARIZATION OF LIGHT. See Optics.

POLAR REGIONS. See Northwest Passage and South Pole.

POLE STAR, or POLAR STAR. A star of the second magnitude, the last in the tail of the constellation called the Little Bear; its nearness to the North Pole causes it never to set to those in the northern hemisphere, and therefore it is called the seaman's guide. Two stars in the constellation Ursa Major, or Great Bear, are called pointers to the polar star. The discovery of the pole star is ascribed by the Chinese to their emperor, Hong Ti, the grandson (they say) of Noah, who reigned and flourished 1970 B.C.—Univ. Hist.

POLICE. The London police grew out of the London watch, instituted about 1253. Its jurisdiction was extended 27 Eliz., 1535, and 16 Chas. I., 1649; and the system improved by various acts in subsequent reigns. The magistracy at Bow Street has been long established. See Magistrates.

POLITICAL ECONOMY, the science which has for its object the improvement of the condition of mankind, and the promotion of civilization, wealth, and happiness. Its history in this country may be dated from the publication of Dr. Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," 1776. The works of Mill and McCulloch are justly celebrated. A professorship of Political Economy was established at Oxford by Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., 1825; and at Cambridge, first by Mr. G. Pryme, in 1823; but regularly established by the University in 1863, Henry Fawcett (blind) being the first professor.

POLITICAL UNIONS were formed in England in 1831 to carry the Reform Bill; the most important was that of Birmingham.

POLITICIANS. A politician is described as a man well versed in policy, or the well regulating and governing of a state or kingdom; a wise and cunning man. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.—South. The term was first used in France about 1569.—Henault. A new faction appeared, known by the name of Politicians, headed by the Duc d'Alençon and the Montmorencies, and strengthened by the accession of the Huguenots in 1574. The duke was arrested, and the Montmorencies sent to the Bastille.—Idem.

POLLENTIA (Piedmont, N. Italy), the site of a great victory of Stilicho, the Imperial general, over Alaric the Goth, March 29, 403.

POLL-ACT. An iniquitous act passed in Ireland by the Junto of the Pale, putting a price upon the heads of certain of the ancient Irish; the Earl of Desmond being then deputy, 5 Edward IV., 1465. This act endured for a number of years. For particulars, see NOTE to article Ireland, p. 263. Numbers of the Irish suffered under this act.—Scully.

POLL-TAX, or CAPITATION TAX, existed among the ancient Romans. It was first levied in England in 1379, and occasioned the rebellion of Wat Tyler (see Tyler), 1381. It was again levied in 1513. By the 18th Charles II., every subject was assessed by the head, viz., a duke £100, a marquis £80, a baronet £30, a knight £20, an esquire £10, and every single private person £12, 1667. This grievous impost was abolished by William III. at the period of the Revolution.

POLOTSK (Russia). The French under Marshal Oudinot were here defeated by the Russians under General Wittgenstein, July 30 and 31, 1812. The same armies contending the next day, the Russians were defeated. After several actions of less note, in which the advantage was sometimes on one, sometimes on the other side, Polotsk was stormed by the Russians, and retaken, Oct., 1812.

POLTOWA. See Pultowa.

POLYGAMY, etc. Most of the early nations of the world permitted polygamy. In Media it was a reproach to a man to have less than seven wives. Among the Romans, Marc Antony is mentioned as the first who took two wives; and the practice became frequent, until forbidden by Arcadius, 393. The Emperor Charles V. punished this offense with death. In England, by statute 1 James I., 1603, it was made felony, but with benefit of clergy. This offense was punished with transportation, but now by imprisonment or penal servitude. It is permitted by the Mohammedans and Mormons. See Marriages. POLYANDRY (where one woman has several husbands) is permitted in some Eastern countries, the children having equal rights.

POLYGLOT, a term derived from two Greek words denoting "many languages," is chiefly applied to editions of the Bible in several languages.

1. The Complutensian Polyglot, in six vols. folio, was printed at Alcalá (Complutensis) in Spain, 1502-14; the first edition published in 1522, at the expense of the celebrated Cardinal Ximenes, costing 250,000 ducats. Six hundred copies of it were printed; three on vellum. Count Mac Carthy, of Toulouse, paid £483 for one of these copies at the Pinelli sale.
 2. The Polyglot, printed at Antwerp by Montanus, 6 vols. folio, in 1559-69, at the expense of Philip II. of Spain.
 3. Printed at Paris by Le Jay, in 10 vols. folio, 1628-45.
 4. Edited by Bryan Walton, was published in 6 vols. folio, 1654-7.
- Copies of all four are in the library of the British and Foreign Bible Society.
5. Edited by Dr. Samuel Lee, published by S. Bagster, 1 vol. folio, 1831.

POLYNESIA, a name recently given to the isles in the great Pacific Ocean.

POLYPES (many-footed) animals, also named Hydrae, on account of their property of reproducing themselves when cut in pieces, every part soon becoming a perfect animal; first discovered by Leeuwenhoek, and described by him in the Philosophical Trans. 1703. The polypes are of the order Zoophytes; they partake of the animal and vegetable nature, and therefore are justly placed as the link which joins the animal to the vegetable world.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, ROYAL, Regent Street, London, was erected by Thompson in 1838. It contains a hall of manufactures with machines worked by steam-power, lecture theatres, etc., diving-bell, electric machine, etc.—Times. This institution did not prosper commercially, and its decline was hastened by the fall of a staircase on Jan. 3, 1859, when one person was killed and many injured. The institution was closed in May, 1859, but was reopened by a new company on Nov. 12, 1860.

POMEGRANATE-TREE (Punica Granatum) was brought to England from Spain before 1584. It originally came from Spanish America.

POMERANIA, a Prussian province, N. Germany, was held by the Poles, 980, and by Denmark, 1210; made an independent duchy, 1479; and divided between Sweden and Brandenburg, 1648. The Swedish part was ceded to Prussia in 1815.

POMFRET or PONTEFRAC (S. York). At the castle (built 1069), Richard II. was confined and murdered, Feb. 10. Henry IV., by whom he was deposed, wishing for his death, an assassin, attended by eight followers, rushed into the king's apartment. He wrested a pole-axe from one of the murderers, and soon laid four of their number dead at his feet, but was at length overpowered and slain. Some writers assert that Richard escaped and died in Scotland. In this castle also, the Earl Rivers, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Vaughan, and Sir Richard Haut or Hause, were executed, or rather murdered, by order of the Duke of Gloucester, then Protector of England (afterward Richard III.), June 13-26, 1483.

POMPEII (S. Italy), an ancient city of Campania, was partly demolished by an earthquake in A.D. 63. It was afterward rebuilt, but was swallowed up by an awful eruption of Vesuvius, accompanied by an earthquake, on the night of the 24th of August, 79. Many of the principal citizens happened at the time to be assembled at a theatre where public spectacles were exhibited. The ashes buried the whole city and covered the surrounding country. After a lapse of fifteen centuries, a countryman, as he was turning up the ground, accidentally found a bronze figure; and this discovery attracting the attention of the learned, farther search brought numerous other objects to light, and at length the city was once more shone on by the sun. The part first cleared was supposed to be the main street, 1750. The kings of Naples have greatly aided in uncovering Pompeii, and the present Italian government resumed the work in 1863.

POMPEY'S PILLAR stands about three quarters of a mile from Alexandria, between the city and the Lake Marcotis. The shaft is fluted, and the capital ornamented with palm-leaves; the whole, which is highly polished, composed of three pieces, and of the Corinthian order. The column measures, according to some, 94 feet; and others 141, and even 160 feet; but of its origin, name, use, and age, nothing is certain.*

PONDICHERY (S.E. India), the capital of French India, and first settled by the French in 1674. It was taken from them by the Dutch in 1693, and was besieged by the English in 1748. It was taken by the English in Jan., 1761, and was restored in 1763; again taken Oct., 1778, and restored in 1783. Pondicherry was captured by the British Aug. 23, 1793, and in 1803, but was restored to the French in 1815.

PONTIFFS (Latin Pontifices), the highest Roman sacerdotal order, established by Numa. The college first consisted of 4 patricians; to these 4 plebeians were afterward added. Sylla increased the number to 15 (8 maiores, 7 minores). The chief was called the Pontifex Maximus. T. Coruncanus, a plebeian, obtained this office 254 B.C.

PONTUS, a kingdom in Asia Minor, seems to have been a portion of Cappadocia, and received its name from its vicinity to the Pontus Euxinus. Artabazus was made king of Pontus by Darius Hystaspes. His successors were little more than satraps of the kings of Persia.

Pontus afterward became a Roman province, under the emperors.

Alexis Comnenus founded a new empire of the Greeks at Trebizond, in this country, 1204, which continued till the Turks destroyed it in 1459.

POOR LAWS. The poor of England, till the time of Henry VIII., subsisted as the poor of Ireland until 1838, entirely upon private benevolence. By statute 23 Edw. III., 1349, it was enacted that none should give alms to a beggar able to work. By the common law, the poor were to be sustained by "parsons, rectors of the Church, and parishioners, so that none should die for default of sustenance;" and by 15 Rich. II., impropiators were obliged to distribute a yearly sum to the poor; but no compulsory law was enacted till the 27th Hen. VIII., 1535. The origin of the present system of poor laws is referred to the 43d of Elizabeth, 1601, by which overseers were appointed for parishes.

Poor Law Amendment Bill passed 1834; amended in 1836, 1838, 1846, and 1847.

Poor Law (Ireland) Act passed 1838; amended 1839. Poor Law (Ireland) Rate in Aid Act passed in 1849.

In Scotland, in the year ending May, 1851, the number relieved was 141,870, at an average cost of £2 2s. 5d., and the expenditure was £535,943.

In Ireland, the poor's rate for the year ending Sept., 1851, was £1,101,878.

A Poor Law system established in Scotland, 1845.

An agitation for the equalization of poor's rates throughout the kingdom began in 1857.

The Times draws attention to the condition of the houseless poor in London, which led to measures for their relief, Dec., 1858.

Laws respecting removal of the poor amended in 1861. Union Relief Act passed to enable certain unions to obtain temporary aid (on account of the distress in Lancashire through suspension of cotton manufactures), 1862.

Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act (authorizing guardians to receive destitute persons into workhouses, and the metropolitan board to reimburse them) passed July 29, 1864.

Annual report of Poor Law Board for 1864, shows great decrease of pauperism—issued Sept., 1865.

40 refuges for houseless poor established in London 1864-5.

"Casual wards" in London workhouses receive 1000 per night, Jan., 1865.

Union Chargeability Act passed, 1865.

POPE (from the Greek Pappas and Papa, a father or grandfather), considered by Romanists to be the visible chief of the Church, the vicar of Jesus Christ, and the successor of St. Peter. This title was formerly given to all bishops. It was first adopted by Hyginus, 139; and Pope Boniface III. induced Phocas, emperor of the East, to confine it to the prelates of Rome, 606. By the connivance of Phocas also, the

* It is generally believed that the column has no reference to Pompey, to whom a mark of honor was nevertheless set up somewhere about this part. One supposes the edifice was dedicated to Vespasian, another to Severus; and Mr. Clarke, from a half-effaced inscription on the base, considered that Adrian is the person honored; while many assert, from the same inscription, that it is dedicated "to Diocletian Augustus, most adorable emperor, tutelary deity of Alexandria."

*  When Louis, king of France, and Henry II. of England, met Pope Alexander III., at the castle of Torcy, on the Loire, they both dismounted to receive him, and holding each of them one of the reins of his bridle, walked on foot by his side, and conducted him in that submissive manner into the castle. — Hume.

† In the 11th century the power of the pontiff of Rome seems to have reached its utmost height. Gregory VII. assumed the exclusive title of Pope, which till then had been common to other bishops; and his successors carried their pretensions so far as to hold themselves out as lords of the universe, arbiters of the fate of empires, and supreme rulers of the kings and princes of the earth. In this character they proceeded to dispose of kingdoms, and to loose subjects from their allegiance, as is remarkably instanced in the history of John, king of England. At length they affirmed the whole earth to be their property, as well where Christianity had been propagated as where it had not; and therefore, on the discovery of the East and West Indies and America, Alexander VI., in 1493, granted to the Portuguese a right to all the countries lying to the eastward, and to the Spaniards all those westward of Cape Non, in Africa, which they might respectively be able to conquer. They finally pretended to be lords of the future world also; and by licenses, pardons, dispensations, and indulgences, which they sold to the best bidders, to have a power of restraining, and in some instances of subverting, even the divine justice itself. — Aspin: Lives of the Popes.

‡ St. Linus is set down in nearly all accounts of popes as the immediate successor of St. Peter; but Tertullian, who was undoubtedly well informed, maintains that St. Clement succeeded the apostle. In the first century of the Christian Church, neither the dates of succession, nor the succession of bishops, are reconciled by even the best authorities. Some assert that there were two or three bishops of Rome at the same time.

POPE JOAN. It is asserted that in the 9th century, a female named Joan conceived a violent passion for Felda, a young monk, and in order to be admitted into his monastery, assumed the male habit. On the death of her lover she entered upon the duties of professor, and, being very learned, was elected pope, when Leo IV. died, in 855. Other scandalous particulars follow: "yet, until the Reformation, the tale was repeated and believed without offense."—Gibbon.

PORCELAIN. See Pottery.

PORT EGMONT, a fine harbor on the N.W. coast of Falkland Islands. Comm. Byron was dispatched to found a colony here in 1765. See Falkland Islands.

PORTEOUS MOB. Capt. Porteous, at Edinburg, on April 15, 1736, commanded the guard at the execution of Wilson, a smuggler, who had saved the life of a fellow criminal by springing upon the soldiers around them, and by main force keeping them back, while his companion fled. The execution of Wilson excited great commiseration, and the spectators pelted the guard with stones. Fearing a rescue, Porteous ordered his men to fire upon the mob, and seventeen persons were killed or wounded. He was found guilty of murder, June 22, 1736; but the queen granted him a reprieve (the king being then in Hanover). The people, at night, broke open the prison, took out Porteous, and hanged him on a dyer's sign-post, in the Grass Market, Sept. 7, 1736. None of the rioters was ever detected.

PORTER. Dr. Ashe says that this beverage obtained its appellation on account of its having been drunk by porters in the city of London about 1730.* The number of licensed brewers in 1850, in England, was 2257; in Scotland, 154; and in Ireland, 96—total, 2507. On Oct. 17, 1814, at Meux's brewhouse, two large vats burst, destroying many neighboring houses. Several lives were lost; and the total loss of porter was estimated at between 8000 and 9000 barrels.

PORTERAGE ACT, regulating the charge for portering of small parcels, passed 1799.

PORT JACKSON (New South Wales), thirteen miles north of Botany Bay, was so named by Capt. Cook in 1770. See Sydney.

PORTLAND ADMINISTRATIONS. The first was the "Coalition ministry," of which William Henry Cavendish, duke of Portland,† as first lord of the treasury, was the head. It obtained the name of the "Coalition" ministry from its including Lord North with Mr. Fox, formerly inveterate opponents. Formed April 5, 1783; dissolved by Mr. Pitt's coming into power, Dec. same year.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION.

Duke of Portland, First Lord of the Treasury.
Viscount Stormont, President of the Council.
Earl of Carlisle, Privy Seal.
Frederick, lord North, and Charles James Fox, Home and Foreign Secretaries.

* The malt liquors previously in use were ale, beer, and twopenny, and it was customary to call for a pint or tankard of half and half—i. e., half of ale and half of beer. In the course of time it also became the practice to ask for a pint of three thirds, meaning a third of ale, beer, and twopenny. To avoid trouble, Harwood, a brewer, made a liquor which partook of the united flavors of ale, beer, and twopenny, calling it entire, or entire butt beer, meaning that it was drawn entirely from one cask or butt. Being relished by porters and other working people, it obtained its name of porter, and was first retailed at the "Blue Last,"[†] Court in Road.—Leigh.

† Born 1718; became lord chamberlain, 1765; lord lieutenant of Ireland, 1782; premier, 1783; home secretary, 1794; lord president, 1801; premier again, 1807; died, 1809; when Mr. Spencer Perceval became premier.

Lord John Cavendish, Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Viscount Keppel, Admiralty.
Viscount Townshend, Ordinance.
Lord Loughborough, Chief Commissioner of Great Seal.
Charles Townshend.
Edmund Burke.
Richard Fitzpatrick, etc.
(See also Aberdeen and Broad Bottom Administration.)

SECOND ADMINISTRATION, March 25, 1807.

Earl Camden, Lord President.
Earl of Westmoreland, Lord Privy Seal.
Hon. Spencer Perceval, Lord Hawkesbury (afterward Earl of Liverpool), Mr. Canning, and Viscount Castlereagh (afterward Marquess of Londonderry), Home, Foreign, and Colonial Secretaries.
Earl Bathurst and Mr. Dundas, Boards of Trade and Control.
Lord Mulgrave, Admiralty.
Earl of Chatham, Ordinance.
Lord Eldon, Lord Chancellor.

PORTLAND ISLE (off Dorset). Fortified before 1142. Portland Castle was built by Henry VIII. about 1536. Off this peninsula a naval engagement commenced between the English and Dutch, Feb. 18, 1653, which continued for three days. The English destroyed eleven Dutch men-of-war and thirty merchantmen. Van Tromp was admiral of the Dutch, and Blake of the English.—Here is found the noted freestone used for building the finest edifices. The Portland lights were erected 1716 and in 1789. The pier, with nearly half a mile square of land, was washed into the sea in Feb., 1792. Prince Albert laid the first stone of the Portland Breakwater, July 25, 1849. A mutiny among the convicts here in Sept., 1853, was promptly suppressed.

PORTLAND or BARBERINI VASE. This beautiful specimen of Greek art (composed of a glass-like substance, with figures and devices raised on it on white enamel; height, 10 inches; diameter in the broadest part, 7; with a handle in each side) was discovered about the middle of the 16th century, in a marble sarcophagus in a sepulchre at a place called Monte del Grano, about 2½ miles from Rome. The sepulchre was supposed to have been that of the Roman emperor Alexander Severus (222-235), and his mother Mammæa, and the vase is supposed to have been the cinerary urn of one or other of these royal personages. It was placed in the palace of the Barberini family, at Rome, where it remained till 1770, when it was purchased by Sir William Hamilton, from whose possession it passed to that of the Duchess of Portland, and in 1810 it was deposited in the British Museum by the duke, who was one of the trustees. There it remained till Feb. 7, 1845, when it was smashed to pieces with a stone by a man named William Lloyd. The vase was skillfully repaired, and still exists in the Museum, but is not shown to the public. Josiah Wedgwood made a mould of this vase, and took from it a number of casts.

PORTO BELLO (S. America), discovered by Columbus, Nov. 2, 1502, was taken by Morgan, the buccaneer, in 1668; by the British under Admiral Vernon, from the Spaniards, Nov. 20, 1759. It was again taken by Admiral Vernon, who destroyed the fortifications, in 1742. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons in 1748, it was the great mart for the rich commerce of Peru and Chili.

PORTO FERRAJO, capital of Elba (which see); built and fortified by Cosmo I., duke of Florence, in 1548. The fortifications were not finished till 1628, when Cosmo II. completed them with great magnificence. See France.

PORTRAIT GALLERY. See National Portrait Gallery.

PORTREEVE (derived from Saxon words signifying the governor of a port or harbor). The chief magistrate of London was so styled; but Richard I. appointed two bailiffs, and afterward London had mayors.—Camden. See Mayors.

PORT HUDSON (Louisiana), at the terminus of the Clinton and Port Hudson Railroad, 25 miles above Baton Rouge. This post, which began to be fortified August, 1862, lay within the limits of the Department of the Gulf, of which Banks took command, Dec. 14, 1862. In March, 1863, Banks made a strong demonstration against this post, as a diversion in favor of Admiral Farragut, who then ran the Port Hudson batteries. After a victorious campaign in Louisiana, in which Dick Taylor was driven to Shreveport, leaving Alexandria an easy prey to Porter's fleet (May 6), Banks again moved against Port Hudson, then commanded by General Gardiner. On the 25th of May Port Hudson was invested by Banks's army, 12,000 strong. An unsuccessful assault was made on the 27th, which involved a national loss of over 2000 men. A second assault (June 14) was also repulsed, but resulted in a nearer approach to the Confederate lines. Port Hudson was surrendered July 9, with over 6000 prisoners and 51 guns.

PORT ROYAL (Jamaica), once a considerable town, was destroyed by an earthquake in June, 1692; laid in ashes by a fire in 1702; reduced to ruins by an inundation of the sea in 1722; and destroyed by a hurricane in 1774. After these extraordinary calamities, the custom-house and public offices were removed to Kingston. Port Royal was again greatly damaged by fire in 1750; by another awful storm in 1784; and by a devastating fire in July, 1815. In 1850, this place suffered by cholera.

PORT ROYAL EXPEDITION. This expedition (Oct. 29–Nov. 7, 1861) was under the joint command of General T. W. Sherman and Commodore Dupont. The fleet consisted of 50 vessels. Fort Walker, on Hilton Head, and, on the opposite side of Broad River, Fort Beauregard, were reduced November 7. Forty-three guns were captured, and possession was taken of Hilton Head, which became, subsequently, an important centre of naval operations.

PORT ROYALISTS, the learned members of the celebrated convent of the Port Royal des Champs (founded about 1230, and refounded in 1626), who occupied their time there in religious exercises, and in instructing youth, from about 1636 to 1656, when they were expelled by Louis XIV. as Jansenists and heretics. Among the distinguished persons connected with Port Royal were Lancelot, Pascal, Arnauld, Nicole de Sacy, and Tillemont. Their school-books were greatly esteemed. The establishment was suppressed in 1709.

PORTSMOUTH (Hampshire), the most considerable haven for men-of-war, and the most strongly fortified place in England. The dock, arsenal, and store-houses were established in the reign of Henry VIII. Population in 1851, 72,096; in 1861, 94,546.

PORTUGAL, the ancient Lusitania. The present name is derived from Porto Callo, the original appellation of Oporto. After a nine years' struggle under Viriathes, a brave, able leader, the Lusitanians submitted to the Roman arms about 157 B.C. Portugal underwent the same changes as Spain on the fall of the Roman Empire. There are in Portugal two universities, that of Coimbra, founded in 1308, and the smaller one of Evora, founded in 1533. Lisbon has also its royal academy, and the small town of Thomar has an academy of sciences; but in general, literature is at a low ebb in Portugal. The poet Camoens, called the Virgil of his country, and author of the Lusiad (1569), translated into English by Mickle, was a native of Lisbon. Population of the kingdom and colonies in 1863, 8,037,194.

Comte, an eminent mathematician, born about 1795; died at Paris, 1852.

POSTS, said to have originated in the regular couriers established by Cyrus, who erected post-houses throughout the kingdom of Persia, about 536 B.C. Augustus was the first who introduced this institution among the Romans, and who employed post-chaises. This was imitated by Charlemagne about A.D. 800.—Ashe. Louis XI. first established post-houses in France owing to his eagerness for news, and they were the first institution of this nature in Europe, 1470.—Hénauld. An International Commission respecting postal arrangements met at Paris May 11, and broke up June 9, 1863.

POST-OFFICE OF ENGLAND. In England, in the reign of Edward IV., 1481, riders on post-horses went stages of the distance of twenty miles from each other, in order to procure the king the earliest intelligence of the events that passed in the course of the war that had arisen with the Scots.—Gale. Richard III. improved the system of couriers in 1483. In 1543 similar arrangements existed in England.—Sadler's Letters. Post communications between London and most towns of England, Scotland, and Ireland existed in 1635.—Strype. The first chief postmaster of England was Thomas Randolph, appointed by Queen Elizabeth in 1581. James I. appointed Matthew de l'Equer as foreign postmaster; and Charles I. appointed William Frizell and Thomas Witherings in 1631. A proclamation of Charles I. states in the preamble that "whereas to this time there hath been no certain intercourse between the kingdoms of England and Scotland, the king now commands his postmasters of England for foreign parts to settle a running post or two to run night and day between Edinburg and London, to go thither and come back again in six days," 1631. An enlarged office was erected by the Parliament in 1643; and one more considerable in 1657, with a view "to benefit commerce, convey the public dispatches, and as the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous wicked designs against the commonwealth by the inspection of the correspondence."—Ashe.

The Post-office as at present constituted was founded 12 Charles II. Dec. 27, 1660
Cross posts established by Ralph Allen 1720
The mails were first conveyed by coaches, Aug. 2, 1754, when the first mail left London for Bristol. See Mail Coaches.

PENNY POST first set up in London and its suburbs by a Mr. Robert Murray, upholsterer, in 1681. He assigned his interest in the undertaking to Mr. Dockwra, a merchant, 1693; but on a trial at the King's Bench bar it was adjudged to belong to the Duke of York, as a branch of the general post, and was thereupon annexed to the revenue of the crown, 1690. This institution was considerably improved in and around London, and was made a two-penny post, July, 1794, et seq.

A penny post was first set up in Dublin 1774
The mails first conveyed by railway, 1830; by the overland route to India 1835

Early in 1837, Mr. Rowland Hill* broached his plan of penny postage, which was adopted after a full investigation by a Committee of the House of Commons in 1839

The new postage law, by which the uniform rate of 4d. per letter was tried as an experiment, came into operation Dec. 5, "

The uniform rate of 1d. per letter of half an ounce weight, etc., commenced Jan. 10, 1840

The stamped postage covers came into use, May 6, "

Reduction in postage—to be 1d. instead of 2d. for every ounce above the first, April, 1865

Number of letters delivered in the last year of the heavy postage (1839) was 82,470,596, including 6,563,024 franks.

In 1840, the number was 163,768,344; in 1851, stages in life, and abandons all search after causes and essences of things, and restricts itself to the observation and classification of phenomena and the discovery of their laws. Comte asserted that Europe had now arrived at the third stage of its progress. He aimed at being the founder of a new religion as well as a new philosophy, "the religion of humanity."

* The king also commanded his "postmaster of England for foreign parts" to open a regular communication by running posts between the metropolis and Edinburg, West Chester, Holyhead, Ireland, Plymouth, Exeter, etc. (Rates of postage—1 letter carried under 80 miles, 2d.; under 140 miles, 4d.; above that distance in England, 6d.; to any part of Scotland, 8d.) Even so late as between 1730 and 1740, the post was only transmitted three days a week between Edinburg and London; and the metropolis, on one occasion, only sent a single letter, which was for an Edinburg banker named Ramsay.

† A national testimonial was presented to him June 17, 1846; on Nov. 30 he was appointed secretary to the post-office, and created K. C. B. in 1850.

360,651,167, whereof 26,512,649 were in Scotland, and 35,982,782 were in Ireland.

The number in 1856 was, England, 388 millions; Scotland, 42 millions; Ireland, 48 millions; total, 478 millions; being an increase of 4% per cent. on 1855, and an average of 17 to each person.

On Feb. 14, 1856, 618,000 letters passed through the general post-office.

In 1859, 544,790,000 letters were posted in the United Kingdom, being an increase of 4% per cent. on 1858. The average annual number to each person—in England, 22; Scotland, 16; Ireland, 7.

In 1860, 564 millions of letters were delivered in the United Kingdom; in 1861, 593 millions; 1862, 605 millions; 1864, 679,084,822.

Book-Post.—On June 5, 1855, a treasury warrant was issued providing for the carriage by post of books, pamphlets, etc., under certain restrictions—4 oz. for 1d.; 8 oz. for 2d., etc.

Public receptacles for letters before 1840, about 4500.

In 1860 there were in the United Kingdom 11,412 post-offices; 1862, 11,316.

The street Letter-boxes were erected in March, 1855.

The first one was placed at the corner of Fleet Street and Farringdon Street. There were 1953 in 1860; 3460 in 1862.

Officers employed Dec. 1, 1861, 25,473.

A Money-Order Office, set up in 1792, was little used on account of the expense till 1840. In 1839, 188,291 money orders were issued for £313,124; in 1861, 7,580,455 orders for £14,616,348.

The Postal Guide first appeared in 1856, in which year London and the vicinity were divided into districts for postal purposes, viz., East, West, etc. The postmaster general has issued Annual Reports (1854-64).

The Post-office Directory first appeared in 1800.

POST-OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES. The whole number of post-offices in the United States in 1863 was 29,047. During the year 1863 the receipts of the post-offices nearly equaled the expenditures, and so rapid has been the improvement that there is good reason to expect that soon the department will be self-sustaining.

The expenditures of 1863 were $11,514,206 84
" " of 1862 " 11,125,364 13

Increase in 1863 $188,842 71

The actual revenues of 1863 were $11,163,739 59
" " of 1862 " 8,299,820 90

Increase in 1863 2,863,968 69

The postage in any part of the United States is three cents for each half ounce. Printed matter (except books) at the rate of two cents for each and every four ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

POSTING. Post-chaises were invented by the French, and, according to Grainger, were introduced into this country by Mr. William Tull, son of the well-known writer on Husbandry. Posting was fixed by statute of Edward VI. at one penny per mile, 1548. By a statute, re-establishing the post-office, none but the postmaster or his deputies could furnish post-horses for travelers, 1660, and hence the name. The post-horse duty was imposed in 1779. Post-horse duty yielded, in 1852, in England, £128,501, and in Scotland, £16,933.

POTASSIUM, a most remarkable metal, discovered in 1807 by Humphry Davy, who first succeeded in separating it from potash by means of a powerful voltaic battery in the laboratory of the Royal Institution, London; and also the metals Sodium from soda, Calcium from lime, etc. The alkalis and earths had been previously regarded as simple substances. Potassium ignites on contact with water.

POTATOES, natives of Chili and Peru, originally brought to England from Santa Fé, in America, by Sir John Hawkins, 1563. Others ascribe their introduction to Sir Francis Drake, in 1586; while their general introduction is mentioned by many writers as occurring in 1592. Their first culture in Ireland is referred to Sir Walter Raleigh, who had large estates in that country, about Youghal, in the county of Cork. It is said that potatoes were not known in Flanders until 1620. A fine kind of potato was first brought from America by Mr. Howard, who cultivated it at Cardington, near Bedford, 1765; and its culture became general soon after. The failure of the potato crop in Ireland four successive years from 1845 caused famine among the poor, to which succeeded pestilential disease, of which multitudes died; among them many priests and physicians. Parliament voted ten millions sterling in this awful exigency, and several countries of Europe, and the United States of America, forwarded provisions and other succors. See Ireland.*

POTIDÆA, a town in Macedonia, a tributary of Athens, against which it revolted 432 B.C., but submitted in 429. It was taken from the Athenians after three years' siege by Philip II. of Macedon, in 353 B.C.

POTOSI (Peru). Silver mines were here discovered by the Spaniards in 1545; they are in a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf.

POTSDAM (near Berlin), the Versailles of Prussia. It was made an arsenal in 1721. Here is situated the palace of Sans Souci, embellished by Frederick II., which was occupied by Napoleon I. in Oct., 1806. Here also is the new palace, the residence of Prince Frederick William and his wife, the princess royal of England, married Jan. 25, 1858.

POTTERY and PORCELAIN. The manufacture of earthen-ware (the ceramic art) existed among the Jews as an honorable occupation (see 1 Chron. iv., 23), and the power of the potter over the clay as a symbol of the power of God is described by Jeremiah, B.C. 605 (ch. xviii.). Earthen-ware was made by the ancient Egyptians, Assyrians, Greeks, Etruscans, and Romans. The art, which was lost at the subversion of the Roman Western empire, reappeared in Spain with the Arabs.

The Majolica, Raffaele, or Umbrian ware of the 15th century was probably introduced into Italy from the Moors, as colored tiles of the 6th and 7th century adorn some ancient churches.

Pottery was manufactured at Beauvais, in France, in the 12th century.

St. Cloud enameled pottery made.....about 1688
Luca della Robbia (born about 1410) applied tin enamel to terra-cotta. Fayence ware was made in France by Bernard Palissy (died 1589) and his family.

PORCELAIN, formed of earth kaolin, was made in China in the 2d century after Christ. Chinese porcelain is mentioned in histories of the 16th century, when it was introduced into England, and eagerly sought after.

Porcelain was made at Bow, near London, early in the 18th century, and at Chelsea before.....1698
The first European porcelain was made at Dresden by Boetcher about.....1700

[The manufacture was fostered by the king Augustus II.]

The Capo di Monte factory at Naples established 1736
Thos. Frye patented porcelain, 1749; and Dr. Wall established the manufacture at Worcester.....1750

The St. Cloud china manufactory removed to Sévres.....1756

Josiah Wedgwood's patent ware was first made.....1762
Bishop's "History of Ancient Pottery" (1853); Marryat's "History of Pottery and Porcelain, Mediæval and Modern" (1857); and Brongniart's "Arts Céramiques," are valuable works.

The British manufacture greatly improved by Herbert Minton, who died in.....1853
The duty on earthen-ware taken off in.....1860

POUND, from the Latin Pondus. The value of the Roman pondo is not precisely known, though some suppose it was equivalent to an Attic mina, or £3 4s. 7d. The pound sterling was in Saxon times, about 671, a pound troy of silver, and a shilling was its twentieth part; consequently the latter was three times as large as it is at present.—Peucham. Our avoirdupois weight pound came from the French, and contains sixteen ounces; it is in proportion to our troy weight as seventeen to fourteen. See under Standard.

POWDERING THE HAIR is said to have taken its rise from some of the ballad-singers at the fair at St. Germain's whitening their heads to make themselves ridiculous. It became very general about 1614. In England the hair-powder tax, one guinea for each person, began in May, 1795, at which time the practice was at its height. The tax still exists, yielding in England, a few years ago, £4000 per year, but only £1200 in 1863. It was abolished in Ireland.

POWER-LOOMS. See Looms and Cotton.

PRÆMUNIRE, LAW OF. This law (which obtained its name from the first two words, "Præmoneri" or "Præmuniri facias," "Cause to be forewarned," and which is applied to any offense in the way of contempt of the sovereign or his government) derived its origin from the aggressive power of the pope in England. The offense introduced a foreign power into the land, and created an imperium in imperio. The first statute of Præmunire was enacted 35 Edward I., 1306.—Coke. The pope bestowed most of the bishoprics, abbeyes, etc., before they were void, upon favorites, on pretense of providing the Church with better qualified successors before the vacancies occurred. To put a stop to these encroachments, Edward III. enacted a statute in 1352. The statute commonly referred to as the statute of Præmunire is the 16th of Richard II., 1392. But several other enactments, with similar object, followed in subsequent reigns.

PRÆTORIAN GUARDS were instituted by the Emperor Augustus (13 B.C.): their numbers were enlarged by Tiberius, Vitellius, and their successors. At first supporters of the imperial tyrants, they eventually became their masters, actually putting up the imperial diadem for sale (as in A.D. 193, when it was bought by Didius Julianus). They committed many atrocities, and were finally disbanded by Constantine in 312.

PRÆTORS, Roman magistrates. In 365 B.C., one prætor was appointed; a second was appointed in 252 B.C. One (prætor urbanus) administered justice to the citizens, and the other (prætor peregrinus) in causes which related to foreigners. In 227 B.C. two more prætors were created to assist the consul in the government of the provinces of Sicily and Sardinia, which had been lately conquered; and two more when Spain was reduced into the form of a Roman province, 197 B.C. Sylla, the dictator, added two more, and Julius Cæsar increased the number to 10, which afterward became 16. After this their number fluctuated, being sometimes 18, 16, or 12; till, in the decline of the empire, their dignity decreased, and their numbers were reduced to three.

PRAGA, a suburb of Warsaw, where a most bloody battle was fought, Nov. 5, 1794; 30,000 Poles were butchered by the Russian General Suwarow. Near here, on Feb. 25, 1831, the Poles, commanded by Skrzynecki, defeated the Russian army, commanded by General Giesmar, who lost 4000 killed and wounded, 6000 prisoners, and 12 pieces of cannon.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION. An ordinance relating to the Church, and sometimes state affairs. The ordinances of the kings of France are thus called; in one the rights of the Gallican Church were asserted against the usurpation of the pope in the choice of bishops, by Charles VII., in 1438. The Pragmatic Sanction for settling the Empire of Germany in the house of Austria, 1439. Again the Emperor Charles VI. published the Pragmatic Sanction, whereby, in default of male issue, his daughters should succeed in preference to the daughters of his brother, Joseph I., in April 17, 1713; and he settled his dominions on his daughter Maria Theresa, in conformity thereto, 1723. She succeeded in Oct., 1740; but it gave rise to a war, in which most of the powers of Europe were engaged, which lasted till 1748.

PRAGUE, the capital of Bohemia (which see). The old city was founded about 759; the new city was rebuilt in 1348 by the Emperor Charles IV., who made it his capital and erected a university. Prague has suffered much by war. It was taken by the Swedes in 1648, and by the French in 1741; but they were obliged to leave it in 1742. In 1744 it was taken by the King of Prussia; but he was obliged to abandon it in the same year. The great battle of Prague was fought May 6, 1757. In this engagement the Austrians were defeated by Prince Henry of Prussia, and their whole camp taken; their illustrious commander, General Braun, was mortally wounded, and the brave Prussian, Marshal Schwerin, was killed. After this victory, Prague was besieged by the King of Prussia, but he was soon obliged to raise the siege.—An insurrection in Prague, June, 1848, was suppressed in a few days.

PRASLIN MURDER. The Duchess de Choiseul-Praslin was murdered by her husband, the Duc de Praslin, at his own house, in Paris, Aug. 17, 1847. She was the only daughter of the celebrated Marshal Sebastiani, the mother of nine children, and in her forty-first year. Circumstances were so managed by him as to give it the appearance of being the act of another. During the arrangements for the trial the duke took poison.

PRAYER-BOOK. See Common Prayer.

PRAYERS. "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord" (Gen. iv., 26), 3575 B.C. The mode of praying with the face to the east was instituted by Pope Boniface II., A.D. 532. This last custom, which prevailed among the Jews, has been recently adopted in some Protestant places of worship in England. Prayers for the dead were first introduced into the Christian Church about 190.—Eusebius. Prayers addressed to the Virgin Mary and to the saints were introduced by Pope Gregory, 593.

* From statistical returns, it appears that the potato crop is so very uncertain that it ought not to be relied on as a staple article of food.

PRECEDENCE was established in very early ages, and was among the laws of Justinian. In England the order of precedence was regulated chiefly by two statutes, 31 Hen. VIII., 1533, and 1 Geo. I., 1714.

PREDESTINATION. The doctrine concerning this is defined in the seventeenth article of the Church of England. See Articles. It was maintained by St. Augustine, and opposed by Pelagius, in the early part of the 5th century. In later times it has been maintained by the Augustinians, Jansenists, the Church of Scotland, and many dissenters (termed Calvinistic), and opposed by the Dominicans, Jesuits, and many dissenters (termed Arminian), especially by the Wesleyan Methodists.

PREROGATIVE COURT, in which formerly all wills were proved and all administrations taken which belonged to the Archbishop of Canterbury by his prerogative, a judge being appointed by him to decide disputes. Appeals from this court to the judicial committee of the Privy Council were instituted in 1830. This court was abolished, and the Probate Court established in 1857.

PREROGATIVE ROYAL. In England the sovereign is the supreme magistrate, and it is a maxim that he can do no wrong. He is the head of the Established Church, of the army and navy, and the fountain of office, honor, and privilege, but is subject to the laws unless exempted by name. The royal prerogatives were greatly exceeded by several despotic sovereigns, such as Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. Elizabeth used the phrase "We, of our royal prerogative, which we will not have argued or brought in question" (1691). James I. told his Parliament "that as it was blasphemy to question what the Almighty could do of His power, so it was sedition to inquire what a king could do by virtue of his prerogative." These extreme doctrines were nullified by the revolution of 1688; and the exercise of the prerogative is now virtually subject to Parliament. See Lords.

PRESBURG, an ancient city in Hungary, where the diets have been held and the kings crowned. On Dec. 26, 1805, a treaty was signed between France and Austria, by which the ancient states of Venice were ceded to Italy; the principality of Eichstadt, part of the bishopric of Passau, the city of Augsburg, the Tyrol, all the possessions of Austria in Suabia, in Brisgau, and Ortenau, were transferred to the Elector of Bavaria; and the Duke of Wurtemberg, who, as well as the Duke of Baden, were then created kings by Napoleon. The independence of the Helvetic republic was also stipulated.

PRESBYTERIANS* are so called from their maintaining that the government of the Church appointed in the New Testament was by presbyteries, or association of ministers and ruling elders, equal in power, office, and in order. Presbyterianism was established in place of episcopacy in England in 1648, but abolished at the Restoration in 1660. It became the established form of Church government in Scotland. Its tenets were embodied in the formulary of faith said to have been composed by John Knox in 1560, which was approved by the Parliament, and ratified, 1567, and finally settled by an act of the Scottish senate, 1696, afterward secured by the treaty of union with England in 1707. The first Presbyterian meeting-house in England was established at Wandsworth, Surrey, Nov. 20, 1522.

PRESCOTT (Upper Canada). On Nov. 17, 1838, the Canadian rebels were attacked by the British under Major Young, and (on the 18th) by Lieut. Col. Dundas, who dispersed the insurgents, several of whom were killed, and many taken prisoners, and the remainder surrendered. The troops also suffered considerably.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, LORD, the fourth great officer of state, is appointed under the great seal, durante beneplacito, and, by his office, is to attend the king's royal person, and to manage the debates in council; to propose matters from the king at the council-table; and to report to his majesty the resolutions taken thereupon. See Privy Council; United States, 1789; France, 1848; and Wrecks, 1841.

* "The elders (Greek presbyteros) I exhort, who am also an elder (sympresbyteros)." 1 Peter v., 1.

PRESS, LIBERTY OF THE. The imprimatur "let it be printed" was much used on the title-pages of books printed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The liberty of the press was severely restrained, and the number of master printers in London and Westminster limited by the Star Chamber, 13 Charles I., July 1, 1637. "Disorders in printing" were redressed by the Parliament in 1643 and 1649; and by Charles II. in 1662. The censorship of the press (by a license established in 1655 and 1693) was abandoned in 1695 (6 Will. III.). The celebrated toast, "The liberty of the press: it is like the air we breathe—if we have it not we die," was first given at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, at a Whig dinner in 1795. Presses were licensed, and the printer's name required to be placed on both the first and last pages of a book, July, 1799. The severity of the restrictions on the French press was relaxed by M. Persigny, minister of the Interior, in Dec., 1860, but soon restored. The liberty of the press in the United States was greatly checked during the Civil War, 1861–1865.

PRESS (Newspaper), a journal, published in Dublin, of considerable talent, but of a most revolutionary tendency. It was commenced in Oct., 1797, and the celebrated Arthur O'Connor, Mr. Emmet, the barrister (whose brother was executed in 1803), and several other conspicuous men, were contributors to it: their writings served to inflame the public mind in Ireland on the eve of the memorable rebellion, which broke out in 1798. The paper was suppressed by a military force, March 6, 1798, and Mr. O'Connor was arrested at Margate while attempting his escape to France.—The existing weekly Conservative paper, the Press, was first published in May, 1853.

PRESSING TO DEATH. See Mute.—FOR THE SEA SERVICE. See Impressment.

PRESTON (Lancashire). Near here Cromwell totally defeated the Royalists under Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Aug. 17, 1648. Preston was taken in 1715 by the Scotch insurgents, under Forster, who proclaimed King James VII. They were defeated in a battle on Nov. 12, by Generals Wills and Carpenter, who, with the royal army, invested Preston on all sides. The Scots at length laid down their arms, and their nobles and leaders were secured; some of them were shot as deserters, and others were sent to London pinioned and bound together, to intimidate their party.—The stoppage of the cotton manufacture in 1861 and 1862 occasioned great suffering in Preston. The festival termed "the Preston Guild," said to have been instituted in Saxon times, and to have been kept once in 20 years regularly since 1562, was duly celebrated in Sept., 1862.* A fine art and industrial exhibition here was opened, Sept. 21, 1865.

PRESTON-PANS, near Edinburgh, the scene of a battle between the Young Pretender, Prince Charles Stuart, and his Scotch adherents, and the royal army under Sir John Cope, Sept. 21, 1745. The latter was defeated with the loss of 500 men, and fled.

PRETENDERS. A name given to the son and grandsons of James II. of England.—THE OLD PRETENDER, or Chevalier de St. George, born June 10, 1688, was acknowledged by Louis XIV. as James III. of England in 1701. He was proclaimed, and his standard set up, at Braemar and Castletown, in Scotland, Sept. 3, 1715; and he landed at Peterhead, in Aberdeenshire, from France, to encourage the rebellion that the Earl of Mar and his other adherents had prompted, Dec. 25, same year. This rebellion having been soon suppressed, the Pretender escaped to Montrose (from whence he proceeded to Gravelines), Feb. 4, 1716; and died at Rome, Dec. 30, 1765.—THE YOUNG PRETENDER, Charles Edward, was born in 1720. He landed in Scotland, and proclaimed his father king, June, 1745. He gained the battle of Preston-pans, Sept. 21, 1745, and of Falkirk, Jan. 17, 1746; but was defeated at Culloden, April 16, same year, and sought safety by flight. He continued wandering among the wilds of Scotland for nearly six months; and as £30,000 were offered for taking him, he was constantly pursued by the British troops, often hemmed round by his enemies, but still rescued by some lucky accident, and at length escaped from the isle of Uist to Morlaix. He died Jan. 31,

* PRESTON STRIKE.—In 1853, a great number of strikes took place among the workmen in the north of England. Those at Preston struck for an increase of 10 per cent. on their wages. On Oct. 15, the masters, in consequence, closed forty-nine mills, and 50,000 persons were thrown out of employment, who were mostly maintained for a long time by subscriptions from their fellows. In the week ending Dec. 17, 1853, 14,927 were relieved at the cost of £2820 8s. The committee of workmen addressed Lord Palmerston, Nov. 15, 1853, who gave them his advice Dec. 24 following. After many attempts at reconciliation, the strike closed for want of funds, May 1, 1854.

1788. His natural daughter assumed the title of Duchess of Albany; she died in 1789. His brother, the Cardinal York, calling himself Henry IX. of England, born March, 1725, died at Rome in Aug., 1807. See Scotland.

PRICES. See Corn, Bread, and Provisions. Mr. T. Tooke, in 1858, published a "History of Prices from 1793 to 1856." He was latterly aided by Mr. W. Newmarch.

PRIDE'S PURGE. On Dec. 6, 1648, Colonel Pride, at the head of two regiments, surrounded the house of Parliament, and seizing in the passage forty-one members of the Presbyterian party, sent them to a low room, then called hell. Above 160 other members were excluded, and none admitted but the most furious of the Independents. The privileged members were named the Rump Parliament, which was dismissed by Cromwell, April 20, 1653.

PRIEST (derived from presbyteros, elder), in the English Church the minister who presides over the public worship. In Gen. xiv., 18, Melchizedek, king of Salem, is termed "priest of the most high God." (1913 B.C. See Hebrews vii.) The Greek hierews, like the Jewish priest, had a sacrificial character, which idea of the priesthood is still maintained by the Romanists and those who favor their views. Among the Jews, the priests assumed their office at the age of thirty years. The dignity of high or chief priest was fixed in Aaron's family, 1491 B.C. After the captivity of Babylon, the civil government and the crown were superadded to the high priesthood; it was the peculiar privilege of the high priest that he could be prosecuted in no court but that of the great Sanhedrim. The heathens had their arch-flamen or high priest, resembling the Christian archbishop.

PRIMER. A book so named from the Romish book of devotions, and formerly set forth or published by authority, as the first book children should publicly learn or read in schools, containing prayers and portions of the Scripture. Copies of primers are preserved of so early a date as 1539.—Ashe. Henry VIII. issued a prayer-book termed a primer in 1546.

PRIMOGENITURE, RIGHT OF. A usage brought down from the earliest times. The firstborn in the patriarchal ages had a superiority over his brethren, and in the absence of his father was priest to the family. In England, by the ancient custom of gavel-kind, primogeniture was of no account. It came in with the feudal law, 3 Will. I., 1068. The rights of primogeniture were abolished in France in 1790.

PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND (N. America) was discovered by Cabot in 1497; was finally taken from the French by the British in 1758; united with Cape Breton as a colony in 1763, but separated in 1768.

PRINCETON, BATTLE OF. After the victory at Trenton, Washington recrossed the Delaware with his prisoners. He again advanced and took post at Trenton. Cornwallis marched upon him. Under cover of night, on the 2d of January, Washington withdrew, unperceived, and early the next morning (January 3d, 1777) was in conflict with British troops under Colonel Mawhood, at Princeton, ten miles distant. The Americans were victorious, but lost the brave General Hugh Mercer. Just as the heat of the battle was over, Cornwallis, with fresh troops, came from Trenton. The Americans, who had not slept, nor scarcely tasted food for 36 hours, retreated, and Cornwallis did not pursue far. The Americans lost 100 men killed or wounded; the British lost in killed, wounded, and prisoners, about 400.

PRINTING. Block-printing was practiced by the Chinese several centuries before the Christian era. The honor of printing with single types has been appropriated to Mentz, Strasbourg, Haarlem, Venice, Rome, Florence, Basle, and Augsburg; but the names of the three first only are entitled to attention. See Press.

* To the west of the Sanctuary in Westminster Abbey stood the Ekeasynary or Almonry, where the first printing-press in England was erected in 1471, by William Caxton, encouraged by the learned Thomas Miling, then abbot. He produced "The Game and Play of Chess," the first book ever printed in these kingdoms. There is a slight difference about the place in which it was printed, but all agree that it was within the precincts of this religious house.—Leigh.

PRINTING MACHINES.—William Nicholson, editor of the Philosophical Journal, first projected (1790-1), but M. König first contrived and constructed a working printing-machine, which began with producing the Times of Nov. 28, 1814, a memorable day in the annals of typography.

In 1815 Mr. E. Cowper applied his inventive mind to the subject.*

König's machine printed 1800 an hour on one side; Cowper's improvements increased this number to 4200. This was raised to 15,000 by Mr. Applegath's machine, which prints the Times.

Hoe's American machine, introduced into London in 1858, prints 20,000 an hour.

PRINTING IN COLORS was first commenced by the employment of several blocks, to imitate the initial letters in MSS. (for instance, the Mentz Psalter of Fust, 1457, which has a letter in three colors). Imitations of chiaroscuro soon followed ("Repose in Egypt," engraving on wood after Louis Cranach, in 1519, in Germany; others by Ugo da Carpi, in Italy, 1518).

J. B. Jackson (1720-1754) attempted, without success, to imitate water-color drawings and to print paper-hangings.

About 1783, John Skippe, an amateur, printed some chiaroscuros.

In 1819-22 Mr. William Savage produced his remarkable work, "Hints on Color Printing," illustrated by imitations of chiaroscuro and of colored drawings, giving details of the processes employed.

In 1836 Mr. George Baxter produced beautiful specimens of Picture-Printing, and took out a patent, which expired in 1855. In some of the illustrations to the "Pictorial Album" (1836), he employed twenty different blocks.

It has been applied to Lithography (hence Chromolithography).

In 1849 Mr. G. C. Leighton produced imitations of water-color drawings by means of modifications and improvements of Savage's processes. In 1851 he commenced color-printing by machinery, and has since availed himself of aqua-tinted plates, and also of electrotyped silver and copper surfaces to obtain purity of color as well as durability.

The large colored prints of The Illustrated London News were first issued in Dec., 1856.

PRIORIES, at first dependent on the great abbeys, are mentioned in 722 in England. See Abbeys and Monasteries. The priories of aliens were seized by the king (Edward I.) in 1285, and in succeeding reigns with the breaking out of war with France, but were usually restored on the conclusion of peace. These priories were dissolved, and their estates vested in the crown, 3 Hen. V., 1414.—Rymer's Fœdera.

PRISONERS OF WAR, among the ancient nations, when spared, were usually enslaved. About the 13th century, civilized nations began to exchange their prisoners.

The Spanish, French, and American prisoners of war in England were 12,000 in number. Sept. 30, 1770 The number exchanged by cartel with France from the commencement of the then war was 44,000.

June, 1781

The English prisoners in France estimated at 6000, and the French in England 27,000. Sept., 1798

The English in France amounted to 10,300, and the French, etc., in England to 47,600, in. 1811

PRISON DISCIPLINE SOCIETY owes its existence to the philanthropic labors of Sir T. F. Buxton, M. P. It was instituted in 1815, and held its first public meeting in 1820. Its objects are the amelioration of jails, by the diffusion of information respecting their management, the classification and employment of the prisoners, and the prevention of crime, by inspiring a dread of punishment, and by inducing the criminal, on his discharge, to abandon his vicious pursuits.

PRIVATEER, a ship belonging to private individuals, sailing with a license (termed a Letter of Marque), granted by a government in time of war, to seize and plunder the ships of the enemy. The practice, said to have been adopted by Edward I. against the Portuguese in 1295, was general during the war between Spain and the Netherlands in the 15th century, and during the last French War. Privateering was abolished by the great sovereigns of Europe by treaty, March 30, 1856. The United States government refused to agree unless the right of blockade was also given up. The British government declined this, asserting "that the system of commercial blockade was essential to its naval supremacy." On April 17, 1861, Jefferson Davis, president of the Southern Confederacy, announced his intention of issuing letters of marque, and on the 19th President Lincoln proclaimed that all Southern privateers should be treated as pirates. This decree was not carried out. See United States. All the great powers forbade privateering during the American Civil War. Among the principal Confederate privateers were the following: The Savannah ran the blockade at Charleston, S. C., June 2, 1861, captured June 4; the Sumter ran the blockade at New Orleans, La., July, 1861, sold April, 1862; the Jeff. Davis escaped from Charleston, July, 1861, wrecked in Aug.; the Nashville escaped from Charleston, Oct., 1861, destroyed by the Montauk, March 1, 1863; the Florida, built at Birkenhead, near Liverpool, received her armament at sea, entered Mobile Harbor, Aug., 1862, escaped from that port, Jan., 1863, captured by the Wachusett, Oct., 1864, and afterward sunk by collision in Hampton Roads; the Alabama, built at Liverpool, escaped July 29, 1862, destroyed by the Kearsarge, July 19, 1864. It is estimated that during the war thirty vessels of all description were employed by the Confederates.

PRIVILEGED PLACES. See Asylums.

PRIVY COUNCIL. A council was instituted by Alfred, 895. The number of the council was about twelve when it discharged the functions of state, now confined to the members of the cabinet; but it had become of unwieldy amount before 1679, in which year it was remodeled upon Sir William Temple's plan, and reduced to thirty members; Anthony Ashley, earl of Shaftesbury, being president. The number is now unlimited. To attempt the life of a privy councillor in the execution of his office was made capital, occasioned by Guiscard's stabbing Mr. Harley while the latter was examining him on a charge of high treason, 9 Anne, 1711.*

PRIVY SEAL, THE LORD, the fifth great officer of state, has the custody of the privy seal, which he must not put to any grant without good warrant under the king's signet. This seal is used by the king to all charters, grants, and pardons, signed by the king, before they come to the great seal. Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, held this office in the reign of Henry VIII. previously to 1523, when Cuthbert Tunstall, bishop of London, was appointed. The privy seal has been on some occasions in commission.—Beaton.

PRIZE MONEY, arising from captures made from the enemy, was decreed by government to be divided into eight equal parts, and distributed by order of ranks, April 17, 1793.

PROBATE COURT, established in 1857 by 20 & 21 Vict., c. 77, which abolished all powers exercised by the Ecclesiastical Courts in the granting of probates of wills, etc. See Prerogative Court. The first judge, appointed Jan. 5, 1858, was Sir Cresswell Cresswell, who took his seat on Jan. 12. On his death, Sir James P. Wilde was appointed judge, Aug. 28, 1863. Probate is the exhibiting and proving a will before the proper authority.

PROCLAMATIONS, ROYAL, "have only a binding force when grounded upon and to enforce the laws of the realm."—Coke. Henry VIII., in 1539, declared that they were as valid as acts of Parliament.

PROFILES. The first profile taken, as recorded, was that of Antigonus, who, having but one eye, his likeness was so taken, 330 B.C.—Ashe. "Until the end of the 3d century, I have not seen a Roman emperor with a full face; they were always painted or appeared in profile, which gives us the view of a head in a very majestic manner."—Addison.

PROGRESSIONIST THEORY IN NATURAL HISTORY supposes that the existing species of animals and plants were not originally created, but were gradually developed from simple forms. See Species.

PROMISSORY NOTES were regulated and allowed to be made assignable in 1705. First taxed by a stamp in 1782: the tax was increased in 1804, and again in 1808, and subsequently. See Bills of Exchange.

PROPAGANDA FIDE, CONGREGATIO DE (congregation for the propagation of the faith of the Romish Church), was constituted at Rome by Gregory XV. in 1622.

PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL SOCIETY received its charter June 16, 1701. Its sphere is generally limited to the British Colonies.

PROPERTY TAX. In England, the assessments on real property, under the property tax of 1815, were £51,898,423, of which Middlesex was £5,595,537, Lancashire, £3,087,774, and Yorkshire, £4,700,000; Wales, £2,153,801. See Income Tax.

PROPHETS. See under Jews.

PROPHECYING. About 1570 the Puritanical part of the clergy, particularly at Northampton, held meetings (termed prophesying) for prayer and exposition of the Scripture. These were forbidden by Queen Elizabeth, May 7, 1577, and immediately ceased.

PROTECTIONIST, a name given to that section of the Conservative party which opposed the repeal of the corn-laws, and which separated from Sir Robert Peel in 1846. The name was derived from a "Society for the Protection of Agriculture," of which the Duke of Richmond was chairman, and which had been established to counteract the efforts of the Anti-Corn Law League, Feb. 17, 1844. Lord George Bentinck was the head of the party from 1846 till his death, Sept. 21, 1848. The Derby administration not proposing the restoration of the corn-laws, the above society was dissolved, Feb. 7, 1853.

PROTECTORATES IN ENGLAND. That of the Earl of Pembroke began Oct. 19, 1216, and ended by his death the same year. Of Humphry, duke of Gloucester, in England, began Aug. 31, 1422; he was murdered Feb. 28, 1447. Of Richard, duke of Gloucester, began April 9, 1483, and ended by his assuming the royal dignity, June 22, the same year. Of Somerset began Jan. 28, 1547, and ended by his resignation in 1549. Of Oliver Cromwell began Dec. 16, 1653, and ended by his death, Sept. 13, 1658. Of Richard Cromwell began Sept. 14, 1658, and ended by his resignation, May 5, 1659. See England.

PROTESTANTS. The Emperor Charles V. called a Diet at Spire in 1529, to request aid from the German princes against the Turks, and to devise means for allaying the religious disputes which then raged, owing to Luther's opposition to the Roman Catholic religion. Against a decree of this diet to support the doctrines of the Church of Rome, six Lutheran princes, with the deputies of thirteen imperial towns, formally and solemnly protested, April 19, 1529. Hence the term Protestants was given to the followers of Luther, and it afterward included Calvinists, and all other sects separated from the see of Rome. The six protesting princes were John and George, the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg; Ernest and Francis, the two dukes of Lunenburg; the Landgrave of Hesse, and the Prince of Anhalt; these were joined by the inhabitants of Strasburg, Nuremberg, Ulm, Constance, Heilbron, and made a kingdom by the Emperor Lothaire for his son Charles. It afterward became part of the kingdom of Aries as a feudal country, and was reunited to the German Empire in 1032 by Conrad II. On the fall of the Hohenstaufens it was acquired by Charles of Anjou, king of Naples, in 1265, and was held by his successors till its annexation to France by Louis XI. in 1481.

PROVERBS. The Book of Proverbs, by Solomon, is dated about 1000 B.C. The latter part were collected by order of Hezekiah, about 700 B.C. Ray's collection of English proverbs appeared in 1672, and Bohn's general collection in 1857.

aid in acquiring Rome and Venice, elect Garibaldi as their chief, March 10, 1862. They were tolerated by Ricasoli, but warned to be moderate by Rattazzi.

PRUD'HOMMES, CONSEILS DE (from prudens homo, a prudent man), trade tribunals in France, composed of masters and workmen, were constituted to arbitrate on trade disputes in 1806. Similar bodies with this name existed as far back as 1452 at Marseilles, and at Lyons in 1464.

PRUSSIA. This country was anciently possessed by the Venedi, about 320 B.C. They were conquered by the Borussi, who inhabited the Rhiphean Mountains; and from these the country was called Borussia. Some historians, however, derive the name from Po, signifying near, and Russia. The Porussi afterward intermixed with the followers of the Teutonic

* His love of life had induced Cranmer, some time previously, to sign a paper wherein he condemned the Reformation; and when he was led to the stake, and the fire was kindled round him, he stretched forth his right hand, with which he had signed his recantation, that it might be consumed before the rest of his body, exclaiming from time to time, "This unworthy hand!" Raising his eyes to heaven, he expired with the dying prayer of the first martyr of the Christian Church, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

 1860. William I., brother; born March 22, 1797.
 [Heir. His son, Prince Frederick-William, born Oct. 18, 1831; married Victoria, princess royal of England, Jan. 25, 1858. They have four children.]

PRUSSIC ACID (or hydrocyanic acid) is colorless, smells like peach flowers, freezes at 5° Fahrenheit, is very volatile, and turns vegetable blues into red. It was accidentally discovered by Diesbach, a German chemist, in 1799. Scheele first obtained this acid in a separate state about 1782. Simple water distilled from the leaves of the Lauro cerasus was first ascertained to be a most deadly poison by Dr. Madden, of Dublin.

PRYTANIS, a magistrate of Corinth, annually elected from 745 B.C. till the office was abolished by Cypselus, a despot, 655 B.C.

PSALMS OF DAVID were collected by Solomon, 1000 B.C.; others were added 550 and 515 B.C. The old Church of England version in metre by Sternhold and Hopkins was published in 1562; the New Version by Tate and Brady in 1598.

PSEUDOSCOPE, a name given by Professor Wheatstone (in 1852) to the stereoscope, when employed to produce "conversions of relief," i.e., the reverse of the stereoscope: a terrestrial globe appears like a hollow hemisphere.

PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM. Claudius Ptolemy, of Pelusium, in Egypt (about A.D. 140), supposed that the earth was fixed in the centre of the universe, and that the sun, moon, and stars moved round once in twenty-four hours. This system (long the official doctrine of the Church of Rome) was universally taught till that of Pythagoras (500 B.C.) was revived by Copernicus, A.D. 1530, and demonstrated by Kepler (1619) and Newton (1687).

PUBLIC EDUCATION, HEALTH, etc. See Education, Health.

PUBLIC SAFETY, COMMITTEE OF, was established at Paris during the French Revolution on April 6, 1793, with absolute power, in consequence of the coalition against France. The severe government of this committee is termed the Reign of Terror, which ended with the execution of Robespierre and his associates, July 28, 1794.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS. See Education.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT, passed July 21, 1863, to provide work for unemployed persons in the manufacturing districts at the time of the cotton famine. It enabled corporate bodies to raise loans, and proved very successful.

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS. The sum voted for this purpose in 1802 was £692,215; in 1803, £893,523; in 1864, £867,518; in 1865, £799,370.

PUDDLING, making the walls of canals water-tight by means of clay, was largely adopted by Brindley in constructing the Bridgewater canals, 1761 et seq. See also under Iron Manufacture.

PUEBLA, SIEGE OF. When Scott was pressing forward to the Mexican capital, in Sept., 1847, with his victorious American army (see Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo), Colonel Childs was left at Puebla, on the Cordilleras, with a large number of invalids. There he was besieged by the Mexicans for a month. On the 13th of October, Santa Anna appeared there with a considerable force, but all were frightened away by some Americans under General Lane, who had defeated him in a conflict at Huamantla a few days before. Santa Anna was again defeated at Atlitico on the 18th, and then fled, a fugitive, toward the Gulf coast.

PUGILISM. See Boxing.

PULLEY. The pulley, together with the vice and other mechanical instruments, are said to have been invented by Archytas of Tarentum, a disciple of Pythagoras, about 516 B.C. It has been ascertained that in a single movable pulley the power gained is doubled. In a continued combination, the power is equal to the number of pulleys, less one, doubled.

PULTOWA (Russia), where Charles XII. of Sweden was entirely defeated by Peter the Great of Russia, July 8, 1709. He fled to Bender, in Turkey.

PULTUSK (Russia), a battle was fought between the Saxons under King Augustus, and the Swedes under Charles XII., in which the former were signally defeated, May 1, 1703. Here also the French under Napoleon fought the Russian and Prussian armies; both sides claimed the victory, but it inclined in favor of the French, Dec. 26, 1806.

PUMPS. Ctesibius of Alexandria is said to have invented pumps (with other hydraulic instruments) about 224 B.C., although the invention is ascribed to Danaus, at Lindus, 1485 B.C. Pumps were in general use in England, A.D. 1435. An inscription on the pump in front of the late Royal Exchange, London, stated that the well was first sunk in 1282. The air-pump was invented by Otto Guericke in 1654, and improved by Boyle in 1657.

PUNCTUATION. The ancients do not appear to have had any system, and doubtless employed arbitrary signs to distinguish the parts of a discourse. Of our points the period (.) is the most ancient. The colon (:) was introduced about 1484; the comma (,) was first seen about 1521, and the semicolon (;) about 1570. In Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia" (1587) they all appear, as well as the note of interrogation (?), asterisk (*), and parentheses ().

PUNIC WARS. See Carthage, 264 B.C.

PUNISHMENTS. See Beheading, Blinding, Boiling, Death, Drowning, Flogging, and Poisoning.

PUNJAB (N.W. Hindostan), was traversed by Alexander the Great, 327 B.C.; and by Tamerlane, A.D. 1398. The war with the Sikhs began here Dec. 14, 1845, and was closed March 29, 1849, when the Punjab was annexed. See India. The Punjab has since flourished, and on Jan. 1, 1859, was made a distinct presidency (to include the Sutlej states and the Delhi territory). See Durbar.

PURGATIVES of the mild species (aperients), particularly cassia, manna, and senna, are ascribed to Aetius, a Greek physician, 1245.

PURGATORY, the middle place between heaven and hell, where, it is believed by the Roman Catholics, the soul passes through the fire of purification before it enters the kingdom of God. The doctrine was known about 250, and was introduced into the Roman Church in the 6th century. It was set forth by a council at Florence, 1433.

PURIFICATION, after childbirth, was ordained by the Jewish law, 1490 B.C. (Lev. xii.). See Churching. The feast of the purification was instituted 542, in honor of the Virgin Mary's going to the Temple. (Luke ii.) Pope Sergius I. ordered the procession with wax tapers, whence Candlemas-day.

PURITANS, the name, first given about 1564, to persons who aimed at greater purity of doctrine, holiness of living, and stricter discipline than others. They withdrew from the Established Church, professing to follow the word of God alone, and maintaining that the Church retained many human inventions and popish superstitions. See Nonconformists and Presbyterianism.

PURPLE, a mixed tinge of scarlet and blue, discovered at Tyre. It is said to have been found by a dog's having by chance eaten a shell-fish, called murex or purpura; upon returning to his master, Hercules Tyres, he observed his lips tinged, and made use of the discovery. Purple was anciently used by the princes and great men for their garments by way of distinction, and to this day the purple color is the livery of our bishops, etc. The dignity of an archbishop or great magistrate is frequently meant by the purple. The purple was first given to the cardinals by Pope Paul II., 1465.

PURVEYANCE, an ancient prerogative of the sovereigns of England of purchasing provisions, etc., without the consent of the owners, led to much oppression. It was regulated by Magna Charta, 1215, and other statutes, and was only surrendered by Charles II. in 1660, for a compensation.

PUSEYISM, a name attached to the views of certain clergymen and lay members of the Church of England, who endeavored to restore the practice of the Church of England to what they believed to be required by the language of her Liturgy and Rubrics, but which were considered by their opponents to be contrary to her doctrine and discipline, and of a Romish tendency. The term was derived from the name of the professor of Hebrew at Oxford, Dr. Pusey, who was popularly supposed to be the originator and chief supporter of those views. The heads of houses of the University of Oxford passed resolutions censuring Dr. Pusey's attempts to renew practices which are now obsolete, March 15, 1841; and his celebrated sermon was condemned by the same body, May 30, 1843. See Tractarians.

PYDNA (Macedon), where Perseus, the last king of Macedon, was defeated and made prisoner by the Romans, commanded by Æmilius Paulus, 168 B.C.

PYRAMIDS of Egypt, according to Dr. Pococke and Sonnini, "so celebrated from remote antiquity, are the most illustrious monuments of art." The three principal pyramids are situated on a rock, at the foot of some high mountains which bound the Nile. The first building of them commenced, it is supposed, about 1500 B.C. The greatest is said to have been erected by Cheops, 1082 B.C. The largest, near Ghizeh, is 461 feet in perpendicular height, with a platform on the top 32 feet square, and the length of the base is 146 feet. It occupies above twelve acres of ground, and is constructed of stupendous blocks of stone. There are many other smaller pyramids to the south of these.—The battle of the Pyramids, when Bonaparte defeated the Mamelukes, and thus subdued Lower Egypt, took place July 21, 1798.

PYRENEES. After the battle of Vittoria (fought June 21, 1813), Napoleon sent Soult to supersede Jourdan, with instructions to drive the Allies across the Ebro, a duty to which his abilities were inferior, for Soult retreated into France with a loss of more than 20,000 men, having been defeated by Wellington in a series of engagements from July 25 to August 2. One at the Pyrenees on July 28. A railway through the Pyrenees (from Bilbao to Miranda) was opened Aug. 21, 1862.—THE PEACE OF THE PYRENEES was concluded between France and Spain, by Cardinal Mazarin, for the French king, and Don Lewis de Haro, on the part of Spain, in the island of Pheasants, on the Bidassoa. By this treaty Spain yielded Roussillon, Artois, and her right to Alsace; and France ceded her conquests in Catalonia, Italy, etc., and engaged not to assist Portugal, Nov. 7, 1659.

PYROMETER (fire-measurer), an apparatus employed to ascertain the temperature of furnaces, etc., where thermometers can not be employed; Muschenbroek's pyrometer (a metallic bar) was described by him in 1731. Improvements were made by Ellicott and others. Wedgwood employed clay cylinders about 1782. Professor Daniell received the Rumford medal for an excellent pyrometer in 1830. Mr. Ericsson's useful pyrometer appeared in the Great Exhibition of 1851.—Eng. Cyc.

PYROXYLIN, the chemical name of Gun Cotton (which see).

PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY. Pythagoras, of Samos, head of the Italic sect, flourished about 555 B.C. He is said to have taught the doctrine of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the soul from one body to another; forbidden his disciples to eat flesh, and also beans; to have invented the multiplication table; to have improved geometry; and to have taught the present system of astronomy.

PYTHIAN GAMES, in honor of Apollo, near the temple of Delphi; first instituted, according to the more received opinion, by Apollo himself, in commemoration of the victory which he had attained over the serpent, Python, from which they received their name; though others maintained that they were first established by Agamemnon, or Diomedes, or by Amphictyon, or, lastly, by the council of the Amphictyons, 1263 B.C.

PYX, the casket in which Catholic priests keep the consecrated wafer. In the ancient chapel of the pyx, at Westminster Abbey, are deposited the standard pieces of gold and silver, under the joint custody of the lords of the treasury and the comptroller general. The "trial of the pyx" signifies the verification of a jury of goldsmiths of the coins deposited in the pyx-box by the master of the Mint. This took place on July 17, 1861, at the Exchequer Office, Old Palace Yard, in the presence of twelve privy counsellors, twelve goldsmiths, and others. The ceremony of the trial was again performed, Jan. 19-20, 1865.

Q.

QUACKERY is coeval with the art of medicine; quack medicines were taxed in 1783, et seq. An inquest was held on the body of a young lady, Miss Cashin, whose physician, St. John Long, was afterward tried for manslaughter, Aug. 21, 1830; he was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £250, Oct. 30, following. He was tried for manslaughter in the case of Mrs. Catharine Lloyd, and acquitted Feb. 19, 1831. Dr. Vries, "the black doctor," a professed cancer-curer, at Paris, was condemned to fifteen months' imprisonment as an impostor in Jan., 1860. See Homœopathy and Hydrophobia.

QUADRAGESIMA SUNDAY, first Sunday in Lent. See Lent and Quinquagesima.

QUADRANT, the mathematical instrument in the form of a quarter of a circle. The solar quadrant was introduced about 290 B.C. The Arabian astronomers under the caliphs, in A.D. 995, had a quadrant of 21 feet 8 inches radius, and a sextant 57 feet 9 inches radius. Davis's quadrant for measuring angles was produced about 1600. Hadley's quadrant in 1731. See Navigation.

QUADRILATERAL, a term applied to the four strong Austrian fortresses in N. Italy—Peschiera, on an island in the Mincio; Mantua, on the Mincio; Verona and Legnano, both on the Adige. See Peschiera, etc.

QUADRILLE. This popular dance was introduced into this country in 1813, by the then Duke of Devonshire, and others.—Raikes.

QUADRUPE ALLIANCE, between Great Britain, France, and the emperor (signed at London, July 22, 1718), on the accession of the states of Holland, Feb. 8, 1719, obtained its name. It was for the purpose of guaranteeing the succession of the reigning families of Great Britain and France, and settling the partition of the Spanish monarchy. It led to war.

QUÆSTOR, in ancient Rome, was an officer who had the management of the public treasure; appointed 484 B.C. It was the first office any person could bear in the commonwealth, and gave a right to sit in the senate. At first there were two quæstors, afterward eight. Two were added in 409 B.C. Two were called Peregrini, two (for the city) Urbani.

QUAKERS, or SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, originally called Seekers, from their seeking the truth, and afterward Friends (3 John, 14). Justice Bednet, of Derby, gave the society the name of Quakers in 1650, because George Fox (the founder) admonished him, and those present, to tremble at the word of the Lord. This sect was commenced in England about 1646 by George Fox (then aged 22), who was joined by George Keith, William Penn, and Robert Barclay, of Ury, and others.* Fox rejected all religious ordinances: explained away the commands relative to baptism, etc.; discarded the ordinary names of days and months, and used thee and thou for you, as more consonant with truth. He published a book of instructions for teachers and professors, and died Jan. 13, 1691. The first meeting-house in London was in White Hart-court, Gracechurch Street. The first meeting of Quakers in Ireland was in Dublin in 1658; and their first meeting-house in that city was opened in Eustace Street, 1692. The solemn affirmation of Quakers was enacted to be taken in all cases in the courts below, wherein oaths are required from other subjects, 1696. See Affirmation. In 1682, William Penn, with a company of Friends, colonized Philadelphia, where, on Jan. 1, 1788, they emancipated their negro slaves. On Feb. 15, 1833, Edward Pease, a Quaker, was admitted to Parliament on his affirma-

* The Quakers early suffered grievous persecutions in England and America. At Boston, U.S., where the first Friends who arrived were females, they (even females) were cruelly scourged, and had their ears cut off. In 1659 they stated in Parliament that 2000 Friends had endured sufferings and imprisonment in Newgate; and 164 Friends offered themselves at this time, by name to government, to be imprisoned in lieu of an equal number in danger (from confinement) of death. Fifty-five out of 120 sentenced) were transported to America, by an order of council, 1664. The masters of vessels refusing to carry them for some months, an embargo was laid on West India ships, when a mercenary wretch was at length found for the service. But the Friends would not walk on board, nor would the sailors hoist them into the vessel, and soldiers from the Tower were employed. In 1665 the vessel sailed; but it was immediately captured by the Dutch, who liberated twenty-eight of the prisoners in Holland, the rest having died of the plague in that year. Of the 120 few reached America.

tion. The Quakers had in England 413 meeting-houses in 1800, and 371 in 1851. At a Conference held on Nov. 2, 1858, it was agreed to recommend that mixed marriages should be permitted, and that many of the peculiarities of the sect in speech and costume should be abandoned. In 1860 an act was passed rendering valid Quaker marriages when only one of the persons is a Quaker. The first Quakers in America were two women, who appeared at Boston in 1656. The Puritans had been warned against them. With eight others who came the same year, they were sent back to England. A special act against them was put in force at Boston in 1657, but to no purpose. They persisted in coming to New England, and many of them suffered stripes and imprisonments, and some death, at the hands of the Puritans. Some settled in North Carolina, and there George Fox, the founder, who visited America in 1672, ministered to them. The Quakers now have over 700 meeting-houses in the United States, and a membership of about 250,000.

QUAKER HILL, BATTLE OF. Quaker Hill is near the north end of Rhode Island. There, on the 29th of Aug., 1778, the Americans under General Sullivan, and the British (then occupying the island) under General Pigot, had a severe engagement. The British were repulsed, but Sullivan, who had invaded the island, thought it prudent to withdraw. The Americans lost in that attempt to recover Rhode Island about 200 men; the British loss was about 220.

QUARANTINE, the custom first observed at Venice, 1127, whereby all merchants and others coming from the Levant were obliged to remain in the house of St. Lazarus, or the Lazaretto, forty days before they were admitted into the city. Various southern cities have now lazarettos; that of Venice is built in the water. In the times of plague, England and all other nations oblige those that come from the infected places to perform quarantine with their ships, etc., a longer or shorter time, as may be judged most safe. Quarantine acts were passed in 1753 and in 1826.

QUARTERLY REVIEW, the organ of the Tory party, first appeared in Feb., 1809, under the editorship of William Gifford, the celebrated translator of "Juvenal."

QUATRE-BRAS (Belgium), where, on June 16, 1815, two days before the battle of Waterloo, a battle was fought between the British and allied army under the Duke of Brunswick, the Prince of Orange, and Sir Thomas Picton, and the French under Marshal Ney. The British fought with remarkable intrepidity, notwithstanding their inferiority in number, and their fatigue through marching all the preceding night. The 42d regiment (Scotch Highlanders) suffered severely in pursuit of a French division by cuirassiers being posted in ambush behind growing corn. The Duke of Brunswick was killed.

QUEEN. The first woman invested with sovereign authority was Semiramis, queen of Assyria, 3017 B.C. In 1554 an act was passed "declaring that the regal power of this realm is in the queen's majesty [Mary] as fully and absolutely as ever it was in any of her most noble progenitors kings of this realm." The Hungarians call a queen-regnant king. See Hungary.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY, established in Feb.,

1704, by Queen Anne, being the First Fruits with the Tenths, to increase the incomes of the poorer clergy. There were 5597 clerical livings under £50 per annum found by the commissioners under the act of Anne capable of augmentation.—Chalmers. Act to consolidate the offices of First Fruits, Tenths, and Queen Anne's Bounty, 1 Vict., 1838.

QUEEN ANNE'S FARTHING. The popular stories of the great value of this coin are fabulous, although some few of particular dates have been purchased by persons at high prices. The current farthing, with the broad brim, when in fine preservation, is worth £1. The common patterns of 1713 and 1714 are worth £1. The two patterns with Britannia under a canopy, and Peace on a car, R R R, are worth £2 2s. each. The pattern with Peace on a car is more valuable and rare, and worth £5.—Pinkerton (died 1826).

QUEEN CHARLOTTE SHIP OF WAR, a first-rate ship of the line, of 110 guns, the flag-ship of Lord Keith, then commanding in chief in the Mediterranean, was burnt by an accidental fire, off the harbor of Leghorn, and more than 700 British seamen out of a crew of 850 perished by fire or drowning, March 17, 1800.

QUEEN'S LAND, Moreton Bay, Australia, now including the "plains of promise," Carpenteria, was established as a colony in 1859. Admiral Sir George F. Bowen was appointed governor, and Brisbane, the capital, was made a bishopric. Population in Dec., 1859, 23,450; in Sept., 1865, about 90,000. Its chief productions are sugar, cotton, and tobacco.

QUEENSTOWN HEIGHTS, BATTLE ON. On the morning of the 13th of Oct., 1812, an American force of 225 men, under Colonel Solomon van Rensselaer, crossed the Niagara River to Lewiston, to attack the British troops on the heights. Van Rensselaer was severely wounded, and the troops, pressed forward under the command of Captain John E. Wool (now major general), successfully assailed a battery on the summit of the hill, and gained possession of the heights. General Sir Isaac Brock then approached with re-enforcements, and in attempting to regain the battery, was killed. The Americans were re-enforced, but were attacked by fresh troops from Fort George in the afternoon, and were defeated with great loss. They had 90 killed, 160 wounded, and 764 made prisoners; the British, it was thought, sustained heavier loss in killed and wounded.

QUENTIN, Sr. (N. France). Philip II. of Spain, assisted by the English, defeated the French at St. Quentin, Aug. 10, 1557; and in memory of his victory, the Spanish monarch, in fulfillment of a vow he had made before the engagement, built the famous monastery, etc., the Escorial, which is called by the Spaniards the eighth wonder of the world. See Escorial.

QUERN. The quern, or hand-mill, is of Roman, or, as some say, of Irish invention; but the latter is not likely, as Roman querns have been found in Yorkshire; and it is said by others that the Romans found querns there.

QUESNOY (N. France) was taken by the Austrians, Sept. 11, 1793, but was recovered by the French, Aug. 16, 1794. It surrendered to Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, June 29, 1815, after the battle of Waterloo.—It was here that cannon were first used, and called bombards.—Iknauld.

QUIBERON BAY (W. France). A British force landed here in 1746, but was repulsed. In the Bay Admiral Hawke gained a complete victory over the French Admiral Coulans, and thus defeated the projected invasion of Great Britain, Nov. 20, 1759. Quiberon was taken by some French regiments in the pay of England, July 3, 1795; but on July 21, owing to the treachery of some of these soldiers, the French Republicans, under Hoche, retook it by surprise, and many of the emigrants were executed. About 900 of the troops, and nearly 1500 Royalist inhabitants who had joined the regiments in the pay of Great Britain, effected their embarkation on board the ships.

QUICKSILVER, in its liquid state, mercury. Its use in refining silver was discovered 1540. There are mines of it in various parts, the chief of which are at Almeida, in Spain, and at Idria, in Illyria; the latter, discovered by accident in 1497, for several years yielded 1200 tons. A mine was discovered at Ceylon in 1797. Quicksilver was congealed in winter at St. Petersburg in 1759. It was congealed in England by a chemical process, without snow or ice, by Mr. Walker, in 1787. Corrosive sublimate, a deadly poison, is a combination of mercury and chlorine. See Calomel.

QUIETISM, the doctrine of Molinos, a Spaniard (1627-96), whose work, the Spiritual Guide, published in 1675, was the foundation of a sect in France. He held that the purity of religion consisted in an internal silent meditation and recollection of the merits of Christ and the mercies of God. Madame de la Mothe-Guyon was imprisoned in the Bastille for her visions and prophecies, but released through the interest of Fénelon, archbishop of Cambray, between whom and Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, arose a controversy, 1697. These doctrines were condemned by Pope Innocent XI. in 1685.

QUILLS are said to have been first used for pens in 553; some say not before 635.

QUINCE, the Pyrus Cydonia, brought to England from Austria before 1573. The Japan Quince, or Pyrus Japonica, brought thither from Japan, 1796.

QUININE, or QUINIA, an alkaloid (much used in medicine), discovered in 1820 by Pelletier and Caventou. It is a probable constituent of all genuine cinchona barks, especially of the yellow bark. See Jesuits' Bark.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY. The observation was appointed by Pope Gregory the Great about 1572. The first Sunday in Lent having been termed Quadragesima, and the three weeks preceding having been appropriated to the gradual introduction of the Lent fast, the three Sundays of these weeks were called by names significant of their position in the calendar; and reckoning by decades (tenths), the Sunday preceding Quadragesima received its present name, Quinquagesima, the second Sexagesima, and the third Septuagesima.

QUINTILIANS, heretics in the 2d century, the disciples of Montanus, who took their name from Quintilia, a lady whom he had deceived by his pretended sanctity, and whom they regarded as a prophetess. They made the eucharist of bread and cheese, and allowed women to be priests and bishops.—Pardon.

QUIRINUS, a Sabine god; afterward identified with Romulus. L. Papirius Cursor, general in the Roman army, first erected a sun-dial in the temple of Quirinus, from which time the days began to be divided into hours, 293 B.C.—Aspin. The sun-dial was sometimes called the Quirinus, from the original place in which it was set up.—Ashe. The Roman citizens were termed Quirites.

QUITO, a presidency of Colombia (which see), celebrated as having been the scene of the measurement of a degree of the meridian by the French and Spanish mathematicians in the reign of Louis XV. Forty thousand souls were hurled into eternity by a dreadful earthquake which almost overwhelmed the city of Quito, Feb. 4, 1797. Since then violent shocks, but not so disastrous, occurred; till one, on March 21, 1859, when about 5000 persons were killed. See Earthquakes.

QUIXOTE. See Don Quixote.

QUOITS, a game said to have originated with the Greeks. It was first played at the Olympic games by the Idae Dactyl, fifty years after the Deluge of Deucalion, 1453 B.C. He who threw the discus farthest, and with the greatest dexterity, obtained the prize. Per-sens, the grandson of Acrisius, by Danaë, having inadvertently slain his grandfather when throwing a quoit, exchanged the kingdom of Argos, to which he was heir, for that of Tirynthus, and founded the kingdom of Mycenæ, about 1313 B.C.

QUO WARRANTO ACT, passed 1280. By it a writ may be directed to any person to inquire by what authority he holds any office or franchise. Charles II. directed a writ against the corporation of London in 1683, and the Court of King's Bench declared their charter forfeited. The decision was reversed in 1690.

R.

RACES, one of the exercises among the ancient games of Greece. (See Chariots.) Horse-races were known in England in very early times. Fitz-Stephen, who wrote in the days of Henry II., mentions the delight taken by the citizens of London in the diversion. In James's reign, Croydon in the south, and Garterly in the north, were celebrated courses. Near York there were races, and the prize was a little golden bell, 1607.—Camden. In the end of Charles I.'s reign, races were performed at Hyde Park. Charles II. patronized them, and instead of bells, gave a silver bowl, or cup, value 100 guineas. William III. added to the plates (as did Queen Anne), and founded an academy for riding.

The first racing calendar is said to have been published by John Cheney in.....1727

Act for suppressing races by ponies and weak horses, 13 Geo. II.....1739

The most eminent races in England are those at Newmarket (which see), established by Charles II. in 1667; at Epsom, begun about 1711, by Mr. Parkhurst (annual since 1750, Allen's Surrey); at Ascot, begun by the Duke of Cumberland, uncle to George III.; at Doncaster, established by Col. St. Leger in 1773, and at Goodwood, begun by the Duke of Richmond, who died in.....1806

"Tattersall's," the "high-change of horse-flesh," was established by Richard Tattersall, near Hyde Park Corner (hence termed "the Corner") in 1766, for the sale of horses. The lease of the ground having expired, the new premises at Brompton were erected and opened for business on.....April 10, 1865

RACE-HORSES.

Flying Childers, bred in 1715 by the Duke of Devonshire, was allowed by sportsmen to have been the fleetest horse that ever ran at Newmarket, or that was ever bred in the world; he ran four miles in six minutes and forty-eight seconds, or at the rate of 35½ miles an hour, carrying nine stone two pounds. He died in 1741, aged 26 years.

Eclipse was the fleetest horse that ran in England since the time of Childers; he was never beaten, and died in Feb., 1789, aged 25 years. His heart weighed 14 lbs., which accounted for his wonderful spirit and courage.—Christie White's Hist. of the Turf.

RACK, an engine of torture for extracting a confession from criminals, was early known in the southern countries of Europe. The early Christians suffered by the rack, which was in later times an instrument of the Inquisition. The Duke of Exeter, in the reign of Henry VI., erected a rack of torture (then called the Duke of Exeter's daughter), now seen in the Tower, 1423. In the case of Felton, who murdered the Duke of Buckingham, the judges of England nobly protested against the proposal of the privy council to put the assassin to the rack, as being contrary to the laws, 1623. See Ravallac and Torture.

RADSTADT, or RASTADT (in Baden), where a peace was signed, March 6, 1814, by Marshal Villars on the part of the French king, and by Prince Eugene on the part of the emperor; it restored the German frontier to the terms of the peace of Ryswick.—The Congress of Radstadt, to treat of a general peace with the Germanic powers, was commenced Dec. 9, 1797; and negotiations were carried on throughout the year 1798. The atrocious massacre of the French plenipotentiaries at Radstadt by the Austrian regiment of Szelztler took place April 28, 1799.

RAGGED SCHOOLS, free schools for outcast destitute ragged children, set up in large towns. The instruction is based on the Scriptures, and most of the teachers are unpaid. They existed in London previous to 1844, but did not receive their name till that year, when the "Ragged School Union" was formed, principally by Mr. S. Stacey and Mr. Wm. Locke (since hon. secretary). The Earl of Shaftesbury was chairman. In 1856 there were 150 Ragged School institutions.

128 Sunday-schools, with 16,937 scholars.

98 day schools, with 13,057 scholars.

117 evening schools, with 5085 scholars.

84 industrial classes, with 3224 scholars.

163 paid teachers in day schools.

126 paid teachers in week-night schools.

43 paid refuge and industrial masters.

There were, in 1856, 16 refuges, where 500 inmates are fed, lodged, clothed, and educated. In 1860, 500 Ragged Schools existed. In nearly all the northern cities of the United States there are free evening schools for such of the poor as are obliged to work by day. These schools have been in many instances very successful, being attended by a large number of adults, both male and female. That of Boston for the newsboys has been peculiarly successful. The teaching in these schools is a voluntary contribution, the only expenses being the hiring and lighting of the school-room. See Shoe-black Brigade.

RAGMAN ROLL (said to derive its name from Ragimunde, a papal legate in Scotland) contains the instruments of homage and fealty to Edward I., sworn to by the nobility and clergy of Scotland at Berwick in 1296. The original was given up to Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, in 1328, when his son David was contracted in marriage to the Princess Joanna of England.

RAGUSA, a city on the Adriatic, on the south confines of Dalmatia, was taken by the Venetians, 1171, but soon after became an independent republic, 1553. It suffered much by an earthquake, 1667; was taken by the French in 1807, and given up to Austria in 1814.

RAILWAYS. There were short roads in and about Newcastle, laid down by Mr. Beaumont, so early as 1602, which are thus mentioned in 1676: "the manner of the carriage is by laying rails of timber from the colliery to the river, exactly straight and parallel; and bulky carts are made with four rollers fitting those rails, whereby the carriage is so easy that one horse will draw down four or five chaldron of coals, and is an immense benefit to the coal-merchants."—Roger North. They were made of iron at Whitehaven in 1733. See Tram-roads.

An iron railway was laid down near Sheffield by John Curr in 1776, which was destroyed by the colliers. The first considerable iron railway was laid down at Colebrook Dale in 1786.

The first iron railway sanctioned by Parliament in 1801 (with the exception of a few undertaken by canal companies as small branches to mines) was the Surrey iron railway (by horses), from the Thames at Wandsworth to Croydon.

Trevethick and Vivian obtained a patent for a high-pressure locomotive engine in 1802.

William Hedley, of Wylam colliery, constructed a locomotive in 1813.

Stockton and Darlington Railway, constructed by Edward Pease and George Stephenson, was opened Sept. 27, 1825.

The Liverpool and Manchester railway commenced in Oct., 1826, and opened Sept. 15, 1830. See Liverpool. This railway led to similar enterprises throughout England and the Continent.

The examination of railway schemes, before their introduction into Parliament, by the Board of Trade, was ordered 1844.

7 & 8 Vict., c. 85, required companies to run cheap trains every day, and to permit erection of electric telegraphs, and authorized government, after Jan. 1, 1866, to buy existing railways with the permission of Parliament, 1844.

An act passed 10 Vict., Aug. 28, 1846, for constituting commissioners of railways, who have since been incorporated with the Board of Trade.

In 1824, the first locomotive constructed by George Stephenson traveled at the rate of 6 miles per hour; in 1829, the Rocket traveled at the rate of 15 miles per hour;* in 1834, the Firefly attained a speed of 20 miles per hour; in 1839, the North Star moved with a velocity of 37 miles per hour; and at the present moment locomotives have attained a speed of 70 miles per hour. During the same period, the quantity of fuel required for generating steam has been diminished five sixths; that is, six tons of coal were formerly consumed for one at the present time, and other expenses are diminished in a corresponding ratio.

THE CAPITAL invested in railway undertakings has become enormous. Up to 1840, it was 69 millions; on March 1, 1853, it was estimated at 303 millions; in 1859, at 330 millions; in 1860, £349,130,127.

The Railway Mania and panic year, when 270 railway acts passed, was 1846.

An act for the better regulation of railways passed 1854.

An act for compensating families of persons killed by accidents (see Campbell's Act) passed 1846.

An act passed to enable railway companies to settle their differences with other companies by arbitration in 1859.

Railway Causes Consolidation Act passed 1863.

A joint committee of both houses of Parliament appointed to report on railway schemes, Feb. 5, 1864. (See Atmospheric and Street Railways.)

RAVENNA (on the Adriatic), a city of the Papal States. It was founded by Greek colonists. It fell under the Roman power about 234 B.C. It was favored and embellished by the emperors, and Honorius made it the capital of the Empire of the West about A.D. 404. In 568 it became the capital of an exarchate. It was subdued by the Lombards in 752, and their king, Astolphus, in 754 surrendered it to Pepin, king of France, who gave it to the Pope Stephen, and thus laid the foundation of the temporal power of the Holy See. On April 11, 1512, a great battle was fought between the French under the great Gaston de Foix (Duke of Nemours and nephew of Louis XII.), and the Spanish and Papal armies. De Foix perished in the moment of his victory, and his death closed the fortunes of the French in Italy. The confederate army was cut to pieces. The Duke of Nemours had performed prodigies of valor, but, being too eager in his pursuit of the Spaniards, who were retiring in good order, he was slain.—Hénault. Ravenna became part of the kingdom of Italy in 1860.

READING (Berkshire). Here Alfred defeated the Danes, 871. The abbey was founded in 1211 by Henry I. The last abbot was hanged in 1539 for denying the king's supremacy.

REAPING MACHINES. One was invented in this country early in the present century, but failed from its intricacies. MacCormack's American machine was invented about 1831, and perfected in 1846, and received a gold medal from the jurors of the Exhibition of 1851. Hussey's machine, also American, exhibited at the same time, was highly commended.

REASON was decreed to be worshiped as a goddess by the French Republicans, Nov. 10, 1793. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" was published in 1794-5.

REBECCA RIOTS. See Wales, 1843.

REBELLIONS (or INSURRECTIONS) IN BRITISH HISTORY. Among the most memorable from the period of the Norman Conquest were the following:

Against William the Conqueror, in favor of Edgar Atheling, aided by the Scots and Danes, 1069.

By Odo of Bayeux and others, against William II., in favor of his brother Robert, 1068. Extinguished, 1090.

Of the Welsh, who defeated the Normans and English, commenced in 1095.

In England, in favor of the Empress Maude, 1139. Ended, 1153.

The rebellion of Prince Richard against his father Henry II., 1189.

Of the Barons, April, 1215. Compromised by the grant of Magna Charta, June 15 following. See Magna Charta.

Of the Barons, 1261. This rebellion terminated in 1267.

Of the lords spiritual and temporal against Edward II. on account of his favorites, the Gavestons, 1312. Again, on account of the Spencers, 1321.

Of Walter the Tyler, of Deptford, vulgarly called Wat Tyler, occasioned by the brutal rudeness of a poll-tax collector to his daughter. He killed the collector in his rage, and raised a party to oppose the tax itself, 1381. See Tyler.

Of the Duke of Gloucester, and other lords, in England, 1387.

In Ireland, when Roger, earl of March, the viceroy and heir presumptive to the crown, was slain, 1398.

Of Henry, duke of Lancaster, who caused Richard II. to be deposed, 1399.

Rebellion of the English and Welsh, 1400-2.

Against King Henry IV. by a number of confederated lords, 1403.

Of Jack Cade, in favor of the Duke of York, against Henry VI., 1450. See Cade's Insurrection.

In favor of the house of York, 1452, which ended in the imprisonment of Henry VI., and seating Edward IV. of York on the throne, 1461.

Under Warwick and Clarence, 1470, which ended with the expulsion of Edward IV. and the restoration of Henry VI. the same year.

Under Edward IV., 1471, which ended with the death of Henry VI.

and tied to the rack, a wooden engine in the shape of St. Andrew's cross. His right hand, within which was fastened the knife with which he did the murder, was first burned at a slow fire. Then the fleshy and most delicate parts of his body were torn with red-hot pincers, and into the gaping wounds melted lead, oil, pitch, and resin were poured. His body was so robust that he endured this exquisite pain, and his strength resisted that of the four horses by which his limbs were to be pulled to pieces. The executioner, in consequence, cut him into quarters, and the spectators, who refused to pray for him, dragged him through the streets.

Of the Earl of Richmond against Richard III., 1485, which ended with the death of Richard.

Under Lambert Simnel, who pretended to be Richard III.'s nephew, 1486, which ended the same year in discovering that Simnel was a baker's son; he was pardoned.

Under Perkin Warbeck, 1492, which ended in the execution of Warbeck.

Under Thomas Flammock and Michael Joseph, in Cornwall, against taxes levied to pay the Scottish war expenses. They marched toward London, and Lord Audley took the command at Wells. They were defeated at Blackheath, June 22, and the three leaders were executed, June 28, 1497.

Of the English in the West, to restore the ancient liturgy, etc., 1549; suppressed same year.

In Norfolk, headed by Ket, the tanner, but soon suppressed, Aug., 1549.

In favor of Lady Jane Grey against Queen Mary. Lady Jane was proclaimed Queen of England on the death of Edward VI., July 10, 1553; but she resigned the crown to Mary a few days afterward; she was beheaded for high treason, in the Tower, Feb. 12, 1554, aged 17.

Of Sir Thomas Wyatt, the poet, and others, against Queen Mary's marriage with Philip of Spain, etc., fails; he is beheaded April 11, 1554.

Of the Roman Catholic Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland against Queen Elizabeth, Nov. and Dec., 1567. The former fled to Scotland, but was given up by the Regent Murray and executed.

Of the Irish, under the Earl of Tyrone, 1699, suppressed in 1601.

Under the Earl of Essex, against Queen Elizabeth, 1600; it ended in his death, 1601.

Of the Irish, under Roger More, Sir Phelim O'Neil, etc., against the English in Ireland; it ended in 1651.

Rebellion of the Scots, 1666; soon afterward put down. Under the Duke of Monmouth, 1685; it ended in his death.

Of the Scots in favor of the Old Pretender, 1715; quelled in 1716.

Of the Scots, under the Young Pretender, 1745; suppressed in 1746, when Lords Lovat, Balmerino, and Kilmarnock were beheaded.

Of the Americans, on account of taxation, 1774. This rebellion led to a disastrous war, to the loss of our chief North American colonies, and to the independence of the United States, 1782.

In Ireland, called the Great Rebellion, when great numbers took up arms, commenced May 24, 1798; suppressed next year.

Again in Ireland, under Robert Emmet, a gifted enthusiast, July 23, 1803, when Lord Kilwarden was killed, with several others, by the insurgents.

Canadian Insurrection (which see), Dec., 1837, to Nov., 1838.

Of Chartists at Newport (which see), Nov. 4, 1839.

Smith O'Brien's silly Irish rebellion; terminated in the defeat and dispersion of a multitude of his deluded followers by Sub-Inspector Trant and about sixty police constables, on Boulagh Common, Ballynary, county Tipperary, July 29, 1848. See Ireland. Rebellion in India (see India), 1857-8.

REBELLION, DORR'S. For nearly two hundred years the people of Rhode Island had lived under a charter from Charles II., according to which only those owning a certain amount of property could vote. In 1843 the desire to change this provision gave rise to two parties, the "Suffrage" and the "Law and Order," each determined to secure to their party the administration of affairs, and each elected their own state officers. Thomas W. Dorr was chosen governor by the "Suffrage" party, and took possession of the state arsenal; the militia were called out, and he was compelled to flee. In a second attempt, the party was overpowered by United States troops, and Dorr was arrested, brought to trial, convicted of treason, and sentenced to imprisonment for life; but some time after he was pardoned. A free Constitution was adopted in the mean time by the people, under which the government is now conducted.

REBELLION, SHAYS'S. At the close of the Revolution, the United States were burdened with a very heavy foreign and domestic debt. They were impoverished by the long war, and it was difficult to raise the means to meet the arrears of pay due the soldiers of the Revolution. On the recommendation of Congress, each state endeavored to provide means for raising its quota by a direct tax. This effort produced much excitement in some of the states, and, finally, in 1787, a portion of the people of Massachusetts openly rebelled. Daniel Shays, who had been a captain in the Continental army, marched at the head of a thousand men, took possession of Worcester, and prevented a session of the Supreme Court. He repeated his performance at Springfield; and the insurrection soon became so formidable that the governor was compelled to call out several thousand militia under Gen. Lincoln, to suppress it. This was speedily accomplished. Though some of the insurgents were sentenced to death, none were executed. A free pardon was finally given to all.

RECIPROCITY TREATY between Great Britain and the United States, regulating the relation between the latter and Canada in regard to trade, fisheries, etc., was negotiated by Lord Elgin, and ratified Aug. 2, 1854. Its abrogation was proposed by the United States' government in 1864.

RECITATIVE, a species of singing differing but little from ordinary speaking, and used for narratives in operas, is said to have been first employed at Rome by Emilio del Cavaliere, who disputed the claim of Rhucini to the introduction of the Italian opera, 1600. See Opera. It was soon after adopted in other parts of Italy, and throughout Europe.

RECORDS, PUBLIC, IN ENGLAND, began to be regularly preserved in 1100, by order of Henry I. The repositories which possessed materials the most ancient and interesting to the historian were, the Chapter-house of Westminster Abbey, the Tower of London, and the Queen's Remembrancer's offices of the Exchequer. The early records of Scotland, going from London, were lost by shipwreck in 1298. In Ireland, the council-chamber and most of the records were burned, 1711. Public Records Act, 2 Vict., c. 94 (Aug. 10, 1838).—A new RECORD OFFICE has been erected on the Rolls estate, between Chancery and Fetterlanes, to which the records will be gradually removed.

RECOVERY, FORT, DEFENSE OF. General Wayne succeeded St. Clair in command of the troops in the Northwest, and on the site of the latter's defeat (see St. Clair's Defeat) he erected a fort, and called it Recovery. In June, 1794, the garrison, commanded by Major William M'Mahon, were attacked by a large force of Indians. M'Mahon was killed, with 22 of his command, and 30 were wounded. The Indians were repulsed.

RED RIVER CAMPAIGN OF 1864. After the capture of Port Hudson, General Halleck urged upon Banks (Aug. 6) the necessity, for diplomatic reasons, of occupying Texas. There was some difference in the views of these officers, Halleck preferring an advance upon Shreveport, and Banks favoring a descent upon the coast and thence into the interior. An expedition for the capture of Sabine Pass started from New Orleans, Sept. 5, 1863, but resulted in complete failure. Brazos Santiago, at the mouth of the Rio Grande, was occupied Nov. 2d. During that month nearly the entire Texan coast was occupied by Banks's forces. He was about to proceed against Galveston, when his attention was again called to Halleck's original plan for an advance up the Red River. On the 25th of March his army was concentrated at Alexandria; it advanced to Natchitoches (April 2-3) and to Pleasant Hill (April 7). On the 8th was fought the battle of Sabine Cross Roads, in which Banks was defeated by Kirby Smith. Then began the retreat. At Pleasant Grove the Confederates were checked by Emory's division of the Nineteenth Corps. On the 9th the Confederates were defeated at Pleasant Hill; but Banks continued his retreat, reaching Alexandria on the 22d. A. J. Smith's corps (10,000 strong) operated with Banks in this campaign; but the affair, from first to last, was mismanaged; and even if the expedition, with Porter's co-operating fleet, had reached Shreveport, that position could not have been maintained, and the fleet would have been captured or destroyed. General Steele, who marched a co-operative column from Little Rock against Kirby Smith, encountered great difficulties in his movement, and before he could be of any assistance, Banks had already retreated.

RED SEA. In 1826 Ehrenberg discovered that the color was due to the presence of marine plants, which he named "Trichodesmium erythraeum."

REFORM IN PARLIAMENT, a chief source of agitation for many years. Mr. Pitt's motion for a reform in Parliament was lost by a majority of 20 in 1792, of 144 in 1793, and of 74 in 1795. The first ministerial measure of Reform was in Earl Grey's administration, when it was proposed in the House of Commons by Lord John Russell, March 1, 1831.

BILL OF 1831.

First division; second reading; for it, 302; against it, 301—majority, ONE, March 22. On motion for a committee, General Gascoyne moved an amendment, "that the number of representatives for England and Wales ought not to be diminished."

Amendment carried on a division, 299 to 291—majority, EIGHT, April 19. The bill was abandoned and Parliament dissolved, April 22.

A new Parliament assembled, June 14. Bill again introduced, June 24. Division on second reading: for it, 367; against it, 251—majority, 116, July 4. Division on third reading of the bill: for it, 349; against it, 236—majority, 113, Sept. 21.

In the LORDS—first division on second reading: Lord Wharnccliffe moved "that the bill be read that day six months." For the amendment, 199; against it, 168—majority, FORTY-ONE, Oct. 8. [Parliament prorogued, Oct. 20, 1831.]

BILL OF 1832.*

Read in the COMMONS a first time, without a division, Dec. 12, 1831. Second reading: division, viz.: for the bill, 324; against it, 162—majority, 162, Dec. 17, 1831. Third reading: division, viz.: for the bill, 355; against it, 239—majority for it, 116, March 23, 1832.

In the LORDS—read a first time on motion of Earl Grey, March 26. Second reading: for the bill, 184; against it, 175—majority, NINE, April 14. In the committee Lord Lyndhurst moved "that the question of enfranchisement should precede that of disfranchisement." The division was 151 and 116—majority against ministers, THIRTY-FIVE, May 7.

Resignation of ministers, May 9; great public excitement ensued, and they were induced to resume office on the king granting them full power to secure majorities by the creation of new peers.

In the LORDS, the bill was carried through the committee, May 30; read a third time: 106 against 22—majority, EIGHTY-FOUR, June 4; received the royal assent, June 7, 1832.

The royal assent given to the Scotch Reform Bill July 17; and to the Irish one, Aug. 7, 1832.

Lord John Russell introduced a new reform bill, Feb. 13, 1854, which was withdrawn, April 11, 1854, in consequence of the war with Russia.

On Feb. 28, 1859, Mr. Disraeli brought in a reform bill, which was rejected by the Commons on March 31 by a majority of 39. This led to a dissolution of Parliament, and eventually a change of ministry.

The new government (Lords Palmerston and J. Russell) brought forward a new bill, March 1, 1860, but withdrew it, June 11. No reform bill was brought forward by the government, 1861-65. See Commons, note.

The discussion respecting Parliamentary Reform was revived in the autumn of 1864 and 1865, in connection with the approaching elections, and various plans were proposed. Mr. Baines's Reform Bill was rejected by the Commons, May 8, 1865.

REFORMATION, THE. Efforts for the reformation of the Church may be traced to the reign of Charlemagne, when Paulinus, bishop of Aquileia, employed his voice and pen to accomplish this object. The principal reformers were Wickliffe, Huss, Jerome of Prague, Savonarola, Luther, Zuinglius, Tyndal, Calvin, Melancthon, Erasmus, Cranmer, Latimer, Knox, and Browne. See Wickliffites, Protestants, Calvinists, Lutherans, Presbyterianism, etc. The era of the reformation are as follow:

* By this "Act to amend the Representation of the People in England and Wales" (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), 56 boroughs in England were disfranchised (schedule A.), 50 were reduced to one member only (B.); 22 new boroughs were created to send two members (C.), and 20 to send one member (D.), and other important changes were made.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS. The increasing number of juvenile delinquents* has long occupied the minds of philanthropists, and various schemes have been devised to check the evil. Two great institutions have been recently set up for this purpose; the Reformatory Schools at Mettray, near Tours in France, and Redhill, near Reigate in Surrey. The former was established in 1839 by M. de Metz, formerly a councillor at Paris, warmly seconded in his beneficent work by the Vicomte de Courcelles, who gave the estate on which the establishment is placed. The latter is situated on land purchased in 1849 by the Philanthropic Society, and was placed under the direction of the Rev. Sydney Turner. The first stone of the building was laid April 30, 1849, by the prince consort. The inmates of these establishments are instructed in farm labor, and are divided into so-called families. In 1854 the Juvenile Offenders' Act was passed. In 1851 and 1853 great meetings were held on the subject; and in Aug., 1856, the first grand conference of the National Reformatory Union was held. In 1852 the Northwest London Preventive and Reformatory Institution, in the New Road, was established; in this, all kinds of trades are taught. Acts for establishing reformatory schools were passed in 1857 and 1858. In 1863 there were fifty-one reformatory schools in England, and nine in Ireland. In 1865 an international exhibition of the works of these schools, at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, near London, was opened by the Prince of Wales.

REGENCY BILLS. One was proposed to Parliament in consequence of the mental illness of George III., and debated Dec. 10, 1788. It was relinquished on his majesty's recovery, Feb. 26, 1789. The return of the malady led to the Prince of Wales (afterward George IV.) being sworn in before the privy council as regent of the kingdom, Feb. 5, 1811. The Regency Bill providing for the administration of the government, should the crown descend to the Princess Victoria while under eighteen years of age, passed 1 Will. IV., Dec. 23, 1830. A Regency Bill appointing Prince Albert regent in the event of the demise of the queen, should her next lineal successor be under age, Aug. 4, 1840.

REGENTS. See Protectors.

REGENT'S PARK, originally part of the grounds belonging to a palace of Queen Elizabeth, near to the north end of Tottenham Court Road, pulled down in 1791. Since 1600 the property was let to various persons, but the leases having expired, it reverted to the crown; and in 1814 great improvements were commenced under the direction of Mr. Nash. The park consists of about 450 acres: within it are the gardens of the Zoological Society and the Royal Botanical Society.

REGGIO. See Rhegium.

REGIMENTS OF INFANTRY were formed in France about 1558. See Infantry. The following are the dates of the establishment of several of the British regiments:

CAVALRY.

REGISTERS. The registering of deeds and conveyances disposing of real estates was appointed to be effected in Yorkshire and Middlesex, 2 Anne, 1703, et seq. By this regulation, greater security was made for purchasers and mortgagees, and the value of estates increased in the register counties. Wills have been for a series of years kept and registered, in London, at Doctors' Commons. See Wills. The registering of shipping in the Thames was commenced 1736; and throughout England, 1787; and several acts and amendments of acts have since followed for keeping and improving registers. See Revising Barristers.

REGISTERS, PAROCHIAL, were established by Cromwell, Lord Essex, by which the dates of births, marriages, and burials became ascertainable, 27 Hen. VIII., 1530-8. This measure was opposed by the people, who feared some new taxation. A stamp-tax was laid on them in 1734. Laws for their better regulation were enacted in 1813, et seq. The great Registration Act (introduced by Lord John Russell), 6 & 7 Will. IV., c. 56, passed Aug. 17, 1836. See Bills of Mortality, et c.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS in England was enacted by the Reform Act, passed June, 1832.

REGIUM DONUM (royal gift), an allowance granted by the sovereign to dissenting ministers in Ireland, began in 1672, and has since been greatly increased. Its acceptance has been censured by some Nonconformists.

REICHSRATH, the representative council of the Empire of Austria, reconstituted by a decree, March 5; met on May 31, 1860. In May, 1861, the upper house consisted of 17 spiritual, 55 hereditary, and 39 peers. The lower house consisted of 136 elected deputies. No representatives came from Hungary, Transylvania, Venetia, the Banat, Slavonia, Croatia, and Istria. The Reichsrath was abolished by a rescript, Sept. 21, 1865, with the view of restoring autonomy to Hungary and other provinces.

REIGN OF TERROR. Maximilien Robespierre headed the populace in the Champ de Mars, in Paris, demanding the dethronement of the king, July 17, 1791. He was triumphant in 1793, and great numbers of eminent men and citizens were sacrificed during his sanguinary administration. Billaud Varennes denounced the tyranny of Robespierre in the tribune, July 28, 1794. Cries of "Down with the tyrant!" resounded through the hall; and he was immediately ordered to the place of execution and suffered death. A large number of his companions were also executed. See France. This has been termed the Red Terror. The reaction, disgraced by many atrocious acts of wanton cruelty, has been termed the White Terror. The Jesuits were conspicuous in the destruction of their adversaries.

RELIGION (from religio, I bind again, in the sense of a vow or oath) comprehends a belief in the being and perfections of God, and obedience to his commandments. The Christian religion is set forth in the New Testament, which is the spirit and interpreter of the Old. Departure from these Scriptures has been the origin of all corrupt forms of religion, as foretold in them. See Mohammedanism, and other religions and sects under their names. The population of the globe with reference to religious worship is given by Balbi (who assumed the total population to be 1,050,000,000) and Dieterici (who assumed it to be 1,288,000,000) as follows:

	Balbi (1856).	Dieterici (1861).
Jews.....	4,500,000	5,000,000
Christians.....	225,000,000	335,000,000
Roman Catholics.....	160,000,000	170,000,000
Mohammedans.....	155,000,000	160,000,000
Idolaters, etc., not professing the Jewish, Christian, or Mohammedan worship....	665,500,000	800,000,000

REMONSTRANCE, THE GRAND, was drawn up by the House of Commons, and presented to King Charles I., Dec. 1, 1641. It consisted of 206 articles, and dwelt bitterly on all the king's illegal and oppressive acts.

RENAISSANCE, a term applied to the revival of the classic style of art at the beginning of the 16th century, under the patronage of the Medici and others. See Painters and Sculptors.

RENTS were first made payable in money, instead of in kind, 1135. Numerous statutes have been enacted in various reigns to define the relations and regulate the dealings between landlord and tenant. 8 & 9 Vict., c. 106 (1845) regulates leases. By the act 8 Anne, 1709, no goods are removable from tenements under an execution until the rent shall have been paid to the landlord by the sheriff, 1709. In England the Duke of Sutherland received his rents in the value of corn, and in Scotland in the value of wool and sheep. The rental of England, including land, houses, and mines, was £6,000,000 about the year 1600, and twelve years' purchase the value of land. About 1690 the rental amounted to £14,000,000, and the land was worth eighteen years' purchase.—Darenant on the Revenues. The present rental of the United Kingdom has been estimated in the present century at £127,000,000. See Land, etc.

PEPEAL OF THE UNION, IRELAND. An Irish association was formed with this object under the auspices of Mr. O'Connell in 1823.

A proclamation of the lord lieutenant prohibited the meetings of a society "leagued for the purpose of procuring a repeal of the Union, under the name of the Irish Society for Legal and Legislative Relief, or the Anti-Union Society."

Oct. 18, 1830

The House of Commons, by a majority of 484, reject Mr. O'Connell's motion for repeal, April 27, 1834

A new association in 1841, 1842, and 1843 became more violent. Assemblies of the lower classes of the people were held in the last-named year in various parts of Ireland, some of them amounting to 150,000 persons, and called "monster meetings."

The great meeting at Trim took place on March 19; other meetings were held at Mullingar, Cork, and Longford, on May 14, 21, and 28, respectively; at Drogheda, Kilkenny, Mallow, and Dandalk, on June 5, 8, 11, and 29; at Donnybrook and Balinglass, July 3 and 20; at Tara, Aug. 15; at Loughrea, Clifton, and Lismore, Sept. 10, 17, and 24; and at Mullaghmast Oct. 1, 1843

A meeting to be held at Clontarf, on Oct. 8, was prevented by government; and Mr. O'Connell and his chief associates were brought to trial for political conspiracy, Jan. 15, 1844, and convicted, Feb. 12; but the decision was reversed by the House of Lords, Sept. 4. See Trials.

The association for the repeal of the Union continued for some time under the direction of Mr. John O'Connell, but was little regarded. The total "repeal rent" amounted to £134,379.

A fruitless attempt was made in Dublin to revive repeal agitation Dec. 4, 1860

RESACA DE LA PALMA, BATTLE of, between the Americans under General Taylor and the Mexicans under General Arista. The battle occurred on the 9th of May, 1846, the day after the conflict at Palo Alto (which see). It was shorter, but more sanguinary than that. The Americans lost, in killed and wounded, 110 men. The loss of the Mexicans was estimated at at least 1000, and 100 made prisoners; among the latter was General La Vega.

RESTORATION, THE, that of King Charles II. to the crown of England, after an interregnum of eleven years and four months, between Jan. 30, 1649, when Charles I. was beheaded, and May 29, 1660, when Charles II. was restored, and entered London amid the acclamations of the people.

RETREAT OF THE TEN THOUSAND GREEKS, who had joined the army of the younger Cyrus in his revolt against his brother, Artaxerxes Mnemon. Cyrus was defeated and slain at Cunaxa, 401 B.C. Artaxerxes having enticed the Greek leaders into his power and killed them, Xenophon was called by his countrymen to the command. Under continual alarms from sudden attacks, he led them across rapid rivers, through vast deserts, over the tops of mountains, till he reached the sea. The Greeks returned home after a march of 1155 parasangs or leagues (3465 miles), which was performed in 215 days, after the absence of fifteen months. This retreat has been immortalized by the account given by its conductor.

REUSS-GREIZ and REUSS-SCHLEIZ, two principalities in Central Germany, with a united population of 121,200. The reigning family sprang from Ekbert, count of Osterode, in the 10th century. The princely dignity was conferred by the Emperor Sigismund in 1426.

1856. Reigning prince of Reuss-Schleiz, Henry LXIX., Sept. 16; born May 19, 1792.

1839. Reigning prince of Reuss-Greiz, Henry XXII., Nov. 8; born March 28, 1846.

REVELATION. See Apocalypse.

REVENUE, PUBLIC, OF ENGLAND. The revenue collected for the civil list, and for all the other charges of government, as well ordinary as extraordinary, was £1,200,000 per annum in 1660, the first after the restoration of Charles II. in 1690 was raised £6,000,000, every branch of the revenue being anticipated; this was the origin of the funds and the national debt, 2

William and Mary.—Salmon. The revenue laws were amended in 1861.

REVIEWS. The Journal des Savans, published on Jan. 5, 1665, by Denis de Salo, under the name of Hédonville, was the parent of critical journals. It was soon imitated throughout Europe, and was itself translated into various languages. It is still published. George III. spoke of this publication to Dr. Johnson, in the private interview with which he was honored by his majesty, in the library of the queen's house, in Feb., 1767.—Boswell. The Bibliothèque Anglaise came out in 1716-27. For Military Reviews, see Volunteers.

REVOLVERS. See Pistols.

RHEGIUM (now REGGIO), S. Italy, a Greek colony, flourished in the 5th century B.C. It was held by the Campanian legion, 251-271, afterward severely punished for its rebellion. Reggio was taken by Garibaldi, Aug., 1860.

RHEIMS (N. France). The principal church here was built before 406; it was rebuilt in the 12th century, and is now very beautiful. The corpse of St. Remy, the archbishop, is preserved behind the high altar in a magnificent shrine. The kings of France were crowned at Rheims; probably because Clovis, the founder of the French monarchy, when converted from paganism, was baptized in the cathedral in 496. Several ecclesiastical councils have been held here. The city was taken and retaken several times in the last months of the French War, 1814.

RHETORIC. Rhetorical points and accents were invented by Aristophanes of Byzantium, 200 B.C. Rhetoric was first taught in Latin at Rome by Photius Gallus, about 87 B.C. He taught Cicero, who said, "We are first to consider what is to be said; secondly, how; thirdly, in what words; and, lastly, how it is to be ornamented." A regius professor of rhetoric was appointed in Edinburgh, April 20, 1762, when Dr. Blair became first professor.

RHINE. This river was fortified as the frontier of the Roman Empire, 298 and 369, and became the boundary of the French Republic in 1794. See Confederation.

RHODE ISLAND. One of the United States. It was settled by Roger Williams in 1636. It was one of the original thirteen states. It was taken in the War of Independence by the British, Dec. 8th, 1776, but was evacuated by them Oct. 25th, 1779.

RHODES, an island on the coast of Asia Minor, is said to have been peopled from Crete as early as 916 B.C. The Rhodians were famous navigators, masters of the sea, and institutors of a maritime code which was afterward adopted by the Romans. The city was built about 432, and flourished 300-200 B.C. See Colossus. Rhodes, long an ally of the Romans, was taken by the Emperor Vespasian A.D. 71. It was held by the Knights Hospitallers from 1309 to 1522, when it was conquered by the Turks, who still retain it. The knights retired to Malta (which see). Rhodes suffered severely by an earthquake on April 22, 1863.

RHODIUM, a rare metal, discovered in platinum ore by Dr. Wollaston in 1804. It has been used for the points of metallic pens.

RIALTO, BRIDGE OF THE, at Venice (mentioned by Shakspeare in his "Merchant of Venice"), built about 1590, consists of a marble arch across the Grand Canal, 90 feet wide and 24 feet high.

RIBBONISM, a term given to the principles of a secret society in Ireland, organized about 1820, to retaliate on landlords any injuries done to their tenants, not scrupling even at assassination. To the Ribbonmen are attributed many of the agrarian murders.

RICH MOUNTAIN (West Virginia), BATTLE OF. On the 13th of May, 1861, General George B. McClellan assumed command of the Department of the Ohio. Soon after the secession of Virginia efforts were made by Governor Fletcher to occupy West Virginia, and to secure possession of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Recruiting for the Confederate armies proved unsuccessful in West Virginia, owing to the devotion of the inhabitants to the Union. A Convention was held at Wheeling (May 15th), which, with the election of the 23d, virtually separated West Virginia from the rest of the state. Then Colonel Porterfield, commanding a Confederate force at Grafton, proceeded to destroy the railroad. McClellan then determined to cross the Ohio and drive out these hostile forces. Colonel Kelly, with a West Virginia regiment, occupied Grafton (May 30), Porterfield falling back to Philippi. The next day General T. A. Morris arrived at Grafton with three Indiana regiments. On the 3d of June Porterfield was threatened by a movement in front and rear, and narrowly escaped capture. During the month which followed, General R. S. Garnett was placed in command of the Confederate forces in West Virginia, and took up positions at Laurel Hill and Rich Mountain. McClellan then (June 21) took the field in person. On the 11th of July, Rosecrans, with 1842 men, was sent to occupy the Beverly Road, in the rear of Pegram's position at Rich Mountain. The march of eight miles was accomplished by Rosecrans, who attacked and drove the Confederates, the latter leaving behind 135 killed, with their caupon and stores. McClellan failed to attack in front, not receiving information of Rosecrans's success. Pegram attempted to escape, but on the road was compelled to surrender his command, 600 strong. Rosecrans occupied Beverly on the 13th, flanking Garnett's position at Laurel Hill. Garnett abandoned his works and tried to escape by way of Cheat River Valley. Morris pursued and overtook Garnett at Carrick's Ford, where the latter was routed and slain. These national successes compelled General Wise, who had accumulated a small Confederate army, to retreat to Gauley Bridge.

RICHMOND (Surrey), anciently called Sheen, which in the Saxon tongue signifies resplendent. Here stood a palace in which Edward I. and II. resided, and Edward III. died, 1377. Here also died Anne, queen of Richard II. The palace was repaired by Henry V., who founded three religious houses near it. In 1497 it was destroyed by fire; but Henry VII. rebuilt it, and commanded that the village should be called Richmond, he having borne the title of Earl of Richmond (Yorkshire) before he obtained the crown; and here he died in 1509. Queen Elizabeth was a prisoner in this palace for a short time during the reign of her sister. When she became queen it was one of her favorite places of residence; and here she died, March 24, 1603. It was afterward the residence of Henry, prince of Wales. The beautiful park and gardens were inclosed by Charles I. The Observatory was built by Sir W. Chambers in 1769. In Richmond, Thomson "sang the Seasons and their change;" and died Aug. 27, 1748.—RICHMOND (Virginia) became the capital of the Southern Confederate States. The Congress adjourned from Montgomery, Alabama, to Richmond, where it met July 20, 1861. After a siege of 1452 days and many desperate battles, Richmond was evacuated by the Confederates, April 2, 1865. See United States.

RIFLE CORPS. See National Association and Firearms.

RIGHTS, BILL OF, one of the bulwarks of the British Constitution, obtained by Parliament from King Charles I., although he had endeavored by various artifices to avoid granting it, June 26, 1628. To the PETITION of RIGHTS, preferred March 17, 1627-8, his majesty answered, "I will that right be done, according to the laws and customs of the realm." Both houses addressed the king for a fuller answer to their petition of rights, whereupon he gave them an answer less evasive, "Soit fait comme il est désiré," June 7, 1628. An important declaration was made by the Lords and Commons of England to the Prince and Princess of Orange on Feb. 13, 1689, in an act "declaring the rights and liberties of the subject, and settling the succession of the crown."

RIMNIK, near Martinesti, Wallachia. Here the Austrians and Russians, under Prince Coburg and Suwarrow, gained a great victory over the Turks, Sept. 22, 1789.

RINDERPEST, German for cattle-plague (which see).

RINGS anciently had a seal or signet engraved on them, to seal writings, and they are so used to this day. In Genesis xlii, 42, it is said that Pharaoh gave Joseph his ring. Rings are now put upon women's fourth finger at marriage; but the first use of rings by the Jews was at the espousal or contract before marriage.

RIO JANEIRO (S. America) was made capital of the Empire of Brazil in 1807.

RIOTS IN NEW YORK, July 13-16, 1863. The immediate and exciting occasion of these riots was the conscription bill which exempted those who paid $300 commutation. That particular feature of the conscription was especially unpopular. The opposition journals of New York City dwelt upon this obnoxious feature, and it is due mainly to articles printed in these journals on the morning of the 13th that the popular tumult rose to its height and culminated in violence. The draft began on the 11th, and on that day there was no disturbance; the next day was Sunday, and the matter was that day made a subject of universal discussion, so that the dissatisfied and turbulent only needed an incendiary spark to flame them into fury. The opposition press furnished this spark. The riot began at the corner of Forty-ninth Street and Third Avenue, where Captain Jenkins was about to recommence the drafting. The building in which the operation was proceeding was broken open and finally burned, the rioters not allowing the fire company to extinguish the fire. The city was denounced of troops, the militia having been sent to the front to resist Lee's invasion of Pennsylvania. A detachment of marines was sent to disperse the mob. No sooner had these arrived and fired their volley of blank cartridges, than they were overwhelmed by the rioters, some of them killed, some terribly beaten, and the others dispersed. A squad of police also suffered a like fate in a similar attempt. The mob, in the mean while joined by gangs of thieves and desperadoes, gave itself up to the work of pillage, arson, and murder, and the city was panic-stricken and helpless for defense. The negroes were the especial objects of its brutality, and were hunted down, and in many instances suffered the most shameful torture and death. The colored orphan asylum on Fifth Avenue was burned down. Several conflicts occurred between the police and the rioters, in which the former were almost invariably successful. Several buildings were burned. The mob was quiet in its operations, but exceedingly malignant. But with the city at its mercy, it is remarkable that its outrage was not more extensive and ruinous. The 14th was a repetition of the previous day, but the operations of the mob were chiefly directed against negroes. On this day what military force there was in the city was organized, and was successful in all cases of collision. The citizens also began to take measures for self-defense. It was not until the 16th that quiet was restored. In these riots the mob suffered more than those opposed to it, losing over a thousand men.

RIOTS IN BRITISH HISTORY. The riotous assembling of twelve or more persons, and their not dispersing upon proclamation, was first made high treason by a statute enacted 2 & 3 Edw. VI., 1548-9. The present Riot Act was passed 1 Geo. I., 1714. See below.

RIPON (Yorkshire), an ancient town. About 661 an abbey cell was built here by Eata. Ripon was made a bishopric by Archbishop Wilfred in 690, but did not endure so. It suffered much by the ravages of the Danes, the Normans (1069), and the Scots (1319 and 1323). The present see was erected Oct., 1836, out of the archdeaconry of York in the West Riding. Income, £4500.

RIVER RAISIN is remarkable in history as the place of a foul massacre, on the 25d of January, 1813. General Winchester, with about 800 Americans, was encamped on that river, and at dawn on the 22d of January, General Proctor, with 1500 British and Indians, fell upon them. After a severe action, Winchester surrendered, under promise of protection from the Indians. But Proctor marched off, leaving no guard for the Americans. His Indians returned, and killed and scalped a large number of them. The entire loss of the Americans was 397 killed, 27 wounded, and 35 officers and 487 men made prisoners. The British lost 24 killed and 153 wounded.

ROAD MURDER. On the night of June 20-30, 1860, Francis Savile Kent, four years old, was murdered, and his body hid in a garden water-closet. His sister, Constance Kent (aged sixteen), and the nurse, Elizabeth Gough, the first suspected, after several examinations, were discharged for want of evidence. The coroner was severely blamed for charging the jury improperly, but the Court of Queen's Bench, in Jan., 1861, refused to issue a writ for a new inquiry. Constance Kent, on April 25, 1865, before Sir Thomas Henry, at Bow Street, and on July 21 following, at her trial at Salisbury, confessed herself to be guilty of the murder. Her punishment was commuted to penal servitude for life.

ROADS OF ENGLAND. The first general repair of the highways of this country was directed about 1285. Acts were passed for the purpose in 1524 and 1555, followed by others in Elizabeth's and succeeding reigns. Roads through the Highlands of Scotland were begun by Gen. Wade in 1746. Loudon M'Adam's roads were introduced about 1813; he prescribes the breaking of stones to six ounces' weight, and calculates the expense of breaking stones at a shilling a ton; clean flints and granite clippings answer best. Wooden pavements were tried with partial success in the streets of London; at Whitehall in 1839, and in other streets in 1840. Asphalt pavement soon after. See Roman Roads and Wooden Pavements. An act "for the better management of the highways" was passed in 1862, after much opposition. See M'Adam.

ROANOKE ISLAND (North Carolina), BATTLE OF, Feb. 8, 1862. Roanoke Island was occupied by General Wise with 2500 men. On the north shore were three forts—Barton, Huger, and Blanchard. An expedition for the capture of this island started from Hampton Roads Jan. 11th. The fleet, consisting of 20 vessels, 50 guns, was commanded by Flag-officer L. M. Goldsborough; the military force, nearly 15,000 strong, by General A. E. Burnside. The forts were bombarded Feb. 7th, and under cover of this bombardment the troops were landed. On the 8th, after a short conflict, Wise's command was surrendered. The National loss in all amounted to 260. On the Confederate side, a son of General Wise was killed.

ROASTING ALIVE. An early instance is that of Bocchoris, king of Egypt, by order of Sabacon of Ethiopia, 737 B.C.—Lenglet. Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, was thus put to death in 1418, and M. Servetus, for heresy, at Geneva, in 1553. See Burning Alive and Martyrs.

ROBBERS. First punished with death by Edmund I.'s laws, which directed that the eldest robber should be hanged. Remarkable robbers were Robin Hood, in England, 1189 (see Robin Hood), and Claud du Val, "executed at Tyburn," says a historian, quaintly, "to the great grief of the women." In Ireland, the famous MacCabe was hanged at Naas, Aug. 19, 1691. Galloping Hogan, the Kapparee, flourished at this period. Freney, the celebrated highwayman, surrendered himself, May 10, 1749. The accomplished Barrington was transported, Sept. 22, 1790. See Trails.

ROBIN HOOD, captain of a band of robbers, in Sherwood Forest, Nottinghamshire. Some assert that he was the Earl of Huntingdon, disgraced and banished the court by Richard I. at his accession (1189). Robin Hood and Little John and their band are said to have continued their depredations till 1247, when Robin died.—Stow.

"ROBINSON CRUSOE," by Daniel de Foe, first appeared in 1719.

ROCHELLE (W. France), a sea-port on the Atlantic, belonged to the English for some time, but finally surrendered to the French leader, Du Guesclin, in 1372. It became a strong-hold of the Calvinist party, and was vainly besieged by the Duke of Anjou in 1573. It was taken after a siege of thirteen months by Cardinal Richelieu in 1628. The Duke of Buckingham was sent with a fleet and army to relieve it, but the citizens declined to admit him. A conspiracy here in 1822 caused loss of life to Sergeant Bories and others.

ROCHESTER, in Kent, an ancient city, built by the Romans, and called Durobrivis. The bishopric, founded by Augustine, 604, is the next in age to Canterbury. The first cathedral was erected by Ethelbert, king of Kent. St. Justus was bishop in 604; alterations were made in the diocese in 1845. Rochester is valued in the king's books at £258 3s. 2½d. per annum. Present income, £5000.

ROCKETS, destructive war implements, were invented by Sir William Congreve about 1803. The carcass-rockets were first used at Boulogne, Oct. 8, 1806, when they set the town on fire, their powers having been previously demonstrated in the presence of Mr. Pitt and several of the cabinet ministers, 1806. Improved rockets were made by Hales in 1846.

ROCKINGHAM ADMINISTRATIONS.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION, July, 1765, to Aug., 1766. Charles, marquess of Rockingham, First Lord of the Treasury. William Dowdeswell, Chancellor of the Exchequer. Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham, Lord President. Duke of Newcastle, Privy Seal. Earl of Northampton, Lord Chancellor. Duke of Portland, Lord Chamberlain. Duke of Rutland, Master of the Horse. Lord Talbot, Lord Steward. Henry Seymour Conway and the Duke of Grafton, Secretaries of State. Lord Egmont, Admiralty. Marquess of Granby, Ordnance. Viscount Barrington, Secretary at War. Viscount Howe, Treasurer of the Navy. Charles Townshend, Paymaster of the Forces. Earl of Dartmouth, First Lord of Trade. Lords Besborough and Grantham, Lord John Cavendish, Thomas Townshend, etc.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION, March to July 2, 1782, when the marquess died.

Marquess of Rockingham, First Lord of the Treasury. Lord John Cavendish, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Lord Camden, President of the Council.
Duke of Grafton, Privy Seal.
Lord Thurlow, Lord Chancellor.
William, earl of Shelburne, and Charles James Fox, Secretaries of State.
Augustus Keppel, First Lord of the Admiralty.
Duke of Richmond, Master General of the Ordnance.
Thomas Townshend, Secretary at War.
Isaac Barré, Edmund Burke, etc.

ROCKY MOUNT, BATTLE AT. On the 30th of July, 1780, General Sumter, with a considerable force, attacked a British post at Rocky Mount, on the Catawba River, in South Carolina. The skirmish was severe, and Sumter was repulsed. He lost three men killed and ten wounded. The British lost ten killed and the same number wounded.

ROGROY (N. France). Here, May 19, 1643, the Spaniards were totally defeated by the French, commanded by the great Condé.

RODNEY'S VICTORIES. Admiral Rodney fought, near Cape St. Vincent, the Spanish admiral, Don Langara, whom he defeated and made prisoner, capturing six of his ships, one of which blew up, Jan. 16, 1780. On April 12, 1782, he encountered the French fleet in the West Indies, commanded by the Count de Grasse, took five ships of the line, and sent the French admiral prisoner to England: Rodney was raised to the peerage, June, 1782.

ROGATION WEEK. Rogation Sunday received its title from the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following it, called Rogation Days, derived from the Latin rogare, to beseech.*

ROHILLAS, an Afghan tribe, who emigrated from Cabul at the end of the 17th century, and established themselves in the eastern parts of Delhi. They were defeated by the English in 1774, and nearly exterminated by the sovereigns of Oude; and after a struggle, finally subdued by the English in 1849.

ROLLS. See Master of the Rolls, and Records.

ROLLS' CHAPEL (London), founded by Henry III., in 1233, for ordaining Jewish rabbis converted to Christianity. On the banishment of the Jews, the buildings now called the Rolls, and the Chapel, were annexed by patent to the office of the keeper or master of the rolls of Chancery, from which circumstance they took their name. A number of public records from the time of Richard III. were kept in presses in this chapel.

ROMAGNA, a province of the Papal States, comprised in the legations of Forlì and Ravenna. It was conquered by the Lombards; but taken from them by Pepin, and given to the Pope, 753. Caesar Borgia held it as a duchy in 1501, but lost it in 1503. In 1859 the Romagna threw off the temporal authority of the pope, and declared itself subject to the King of Sardinia, who accepted it in March, 1860. It now forms part of the province of Emilia, in the new kingdom of Italy. Population (1860) 1,014,682. See Rome.

ROMAINVILLE and BELLEVILLE, heights near Paris, where Joseph Bonaparte, Mortier, and Marmont were defeated by the Allies after a vigorous resistance, March 30, 1814. The next day Paris capitulated.

ROMAN CATHOLICS, called also ROMANISTS and PAPISTS. Their religion was the established one till the Reformation. Since then many laws were made against them, which have been repealed.† See Religion.

* Extraordinary prayers and supplications for these three days are said to have been appointed in the 14th century, as a preparation for the devout observance of our Saviour's Ascension on the next day succeeding to them, denominated Holy Thursday, or Ascension Day. The whole week in which these days happen is styled Rogation Week; and in some parts it is still known by the other name, of Crop Week, Grass Week, and Procession Week. The perambulations of parishes have usually been made in this week.

† Among other disabilities, Roman Catholics were excluded from corporate offices, 1667; from Parliament, 1691; forbidden to marry Protestants, 1705; to possess arms, 1695, etc. See Scully's History of the Penal Laws, &c.

ROMAN ROADS IN ENGLAND. Our historians maintain, but are mistaken, that there were but four of these roads.—Camden. "The Romans," says Isidore, "made roads almost all over the world, to have their marches in a straight line, and to employ the people;" and criminals were frequently condemned to work at such roads, as we learn from Suetonius, in his life of Caligula. They were commenced and completed at various periods, between the 2d and 4th centuries, and the Roman soldiery were employed in making them, that inactivity might not give them an opportunity to raise disturbances.—Beede.

1st, WATLING STREET, so named from Vitellianus, who is supposed to have directed it, the Britons calling him in their language Guetalin (from Kent to Cardigan Bay).
2d, IKENELD or IKENILD STREET, from its beginning among the Iceni (from St. David's to Tynemouth).
3d, FOSSE, or FOSSE WAY, probably from its having been defended by a fosse on both sides (from Cornwall to Lincoln).
4th, ERMIN STREET, from Irmunsul, a German word, meaning Mercury, whom our German ancestors worshipped under that name (from St. David's to Southampton).

ROMAN WALLS. One was erected by Agricola (79 to 85) to defend Britain from the incursions of the Picts and Scots; the first wall extended from the Tyne to the Solway Frith (80 miles); the second from the Frith of Forth, near Edinburgh, to the Frith of Clyde, near Dumbarton (36 miles). The former was renewed and strengthened by the Emperor Adrian (121), and by Septimius Severus (208). It commenced at Bowness, near Carlisle, and ended at Wallsend, near Newcastle. It had battlements and towers to contain soldiers. The more northern wall was renewed by Lollius Urbicus in the reign of Antoninus Pius, about 140. Many remains of these walls still exist, particularly of the southern one. See Bruce's "Roman Wall," published in 1853.

ROMANCES. As Heliodorus, a bishop of Tricea, in Thessaly, was the author of Ethiopes, in Greek, the first work in this species of writing, he is hence styled the "Father of Romances." He flourished 398.—Heut de Origine Fabul. Roman. Dunlop's "History of Fic- tion," published in 1814, is an esteemed book on this subject.

ROME. The foundation of the city, by Romulus, was laid on the 20th of April,* according to Varro, in the year 2961 of the Julian period (3251 years after the creation of the world, 753 before the birth of Christ, 431 years after the Trojan War, and in the fourth year of the sixth Olympiad. Other dates given: Cato, 751; Polybius, 750; Fabius Pictor, 747; Cincius, 728 B.C.). The Romans conquered nearly the whole of the then known world. In the time of Julius Caesar, the empire was bounded by the Euphrates, Taurus, and Armenia on the east; by Æthiopia on the south; by the Danube on the north; and by the Atlantic on the west. Numerous ecclesiastical councils have been held at Rome, beginning in 197.

* In its original state, Rome was but a small castle on the summit of Mount Palatine; and the founder, to give his followers the appearance of a nation or a barbarian horde, was obliged to erect a standard as a common asylum for criminals, debtors, or murderers, who fled from their native country to avoid the punishment which attended them. From such an assemblage a numerous body was soon collected, and before the death of the founder the Romans had covered with their habitations the Palatine, Capitoline, Aventine, and Esquiline hills, with Mount Cælius and Quirinalis.

† Appius Claudius became enamored of her, and attempted to remove her from the place where she resided. She was claimed by one of his favorites as the daughter of a slave, and Appius had adjudged her to his friend, when Virginius arrived from the camp. The father demanded to see his daughter, and when she came he plunged a knife into her breast, exclaiming, “This is all, my daughter, I can give thee to preserve thee from the lust of a tyrant!” Virginius ran to the camp with the bloody knife in his hand, and the incensed soldiers marched to Rome. Appius was seized, but destroyed himself in prison. Spurius Oppius, another decemvir, killed himself also. Marcus Claudius, the favorite of Appius, was put to death, and the decemviral power abolished.

KINGS OF ROME.

BEFORE CHRIST.

735. Romulus, murdered by the senators.
 [Tatius, king of the Sabines, had removed to Rome in 747, and ruled jointly with Romulus six years.]
 716. [Interregnum.]
 715. Numa Pompilius, son-in-law of Tatius the Sabine, elected; died at the age of 82.
 672. Tullus Hostilius, murdered by his successor, by whom his palace was set on fire; his family perished in the flames.
 640. Ancus Martius, grandson of Numa.
 616. Tarquinius Priscus, son of Demaratus, a Corinthian emigrant, chosen king.
 578. Servius Tullius, a manumitted slave, married the king's daughter, and succeeded by the united suffrages of the army and the people.
 534. Tarquinius Superbus, grandson of Tarquinius Priscus, assassinated his father-in-law, and usurps the throne.
 510. [The rape of Lucretia, by Sextus, son of Tarquin, and consequent insurrection, leads to the abolition of royalty and the establishment of the consulate.]

REPUBLIC.

BEFORE CHRIST.

- 510-82. First period. From the expulsion of Tarquin to the dictatorship of Sylla.
 82-27. Second period. From Sylla to Augustus.

EMPERORS OF ROME.

BEFORE CHRIST.

48. Caius Julius Cæsar, perpetual dictator; assassinated March 15, 44 B.C.
 31. Octavianus Cæsar; in the year 27 B.C. AUGUSTUS IMPERATOR (Liby).

AFTER CHRIST.

14. Tiberius (Claudius Nero).
 37. Caius Caligula, murdered by a tribune.
 41. Claudius I. (Tiber. Drusus), poisoned by his wife Agrippina, to make way for
 54. Claudius Nero; deposed; kills himself, 68.
 68. Servius Sulpicius Galba, slain by the prætorians.
 69. M. Salvius Otho, stabbed himself.
 " Aulus Vitellius, deposed by Vespasian, and put to death.
 " Titus Flavius Vespasian.
 79. Titus (Vespasian), his son.
 81. Titus Flavius Domitian, brother of Titus; last of the twelve Cæsars; assassinated.
 96. Cocceius Nerva.
 98. Trajan (M. Ulpius Crinitus).
 117. Adrian or Hadrian (Publius Ælius).
 138. Antoninus Titus, surnamed Pius.
 161. Marcus Aurelius (a philosopher) and Lucius Verus, his son-in-law; the latter died in 169.
 180. Commodus (L. Aurelius Antoninus), son of Marcus Aurelius, poisoned by his favorite mistress, Martia.
 193. Publius-Helvius-Pertinax, put to death by the prætorian band.
 [Four emperors now start up: Didianus Julianus, at Rome; Pescennius Niger, in Syria; Lucius Septimius Severus, in Pannonia; and Clodius Albinus, in Britain.]
 " Lucius Septimius Severus, died at York, in Britain, in 211; succeeded by his sons, 211. M. Aurelius Caracalla and Septimius Geta. Geta murdered the same year by his brother, who reigned alone till 217, when he was slain by his successor,
 217. M. Opilius Macrinus, prefect of the guards; beheaded in a mutiny.
 218. Heliogabalus (M. Aurelius Antoninus), a youth, put to death for enormities.
 222. Alexander Severus, assassinated by some soldiers corrupted by Maximinus.
 235. Caius Julius Verus Maximinus, assassinated in his tent before the walls of Aquileia.
 237. M. Antonius Gordianus and his son; the latter having been killed in a battle with the partisans of Maximinus, the father strangled himself in a fit of despair, at Carthage, in his 50th year.

233. Balbinus and Pupienus, put to death.

" Gordian, junior, grandson of the elder Gordian, in his 16th year; assassinated by the guards at the instigation of his successor.

244. Philip the Arabian; assassinated by his own soldiers; his son Philip was murdered at the same time, in his mother's arms.

249. Metius Decius; he perished with his two sons, and their army, in an engagement with the Goths.

251. Gallus Hostilius, and his son Volusianus; both slain by the soldiery.

253. Emilianus; put to death after a reign of only four months.

253. Valerianus and his son Gallienus; the first was taken prisoner by Sapor, king of Persia, and layed alive.

260. Gallienus reigned alone.

[About this time thirty pretenders to imperial power start up in different parts of the empire; of these, Cyriades is the first, but he is slain.]

263. Claudius II. (Gallienus having been assassinated by the officers of the guard) succeeds; dies of the plague.

270. Quintillus, his brother, elected at Rome by the senate and troops; Aurelian by the army in Illyricum. Quintillus, despairing of success against his rival, who was marching against him, opened his veins and bled himself to death.

270. Aurelian, assassinated by his soldiers on his march against Persia, in Jan., 275.

275. [Interregnum of about nine months.]
" Tacitus, elected Oct. 25; died at Tarsus, in Cilicia, April 13, 276.

276. Florian, his brother; his title not recognized by the senate.

276. M. Aurelius Probus; assassinated by his troops at Sirium.

282. M. Aurelius Carus; killed at Ctesiphon by lightning; succeeded by his sons

283. Carinus and Numerianus; both assassinated, after transient reigns.

284. Diocletian, who associated as his colleague in the government

286. Maximianus Hercules; the two emperors resign in favor of

305. Constantius Chlorus and Galerius Maximianus; the first died at York, in Britain, in 306, and the troops saluted as emperor his son

306. Constantine, afterward styled the Great, while at Rome the pretorian band proclaimed

" Maxentius, son of Maximianus Hercules. Besides these were,

" Maximianus Hercules, who endeavored to recover his abdicated power;

" Flavius Valerius Severus, murdered by the last-named pretender; and

307. Flavius Valerianus Licinius, the brother-in-law of Constantine.

[Of these, Maximianus Hercules was strangled in Gaul in 310; Galerius Maximianus died wretchedly in 311; Maxentius was drowned in the Tiber in 312; and Licinius was put to death by order of Constantine in 324.]

323. Constantine the Great now reigned alone; died on Whitsunday, May 22, 337.

337. { Constantine II. sons of Constantine, divided the empire between them; the first was slain in 340, and the second murdered in 350, when the third became sole emperor.

364. Valentinian and Valens.

375. Valens with Gratian and Valentinian II.

379. Theodosius I., etc.

392. Theodosius alone.

The Roman Empire divided. See Eastern Empire, Western Empire, and Popes.

RONCESVALLES (in the Pyrenees), where, it is said, Charlemagne's paladin, Roland, or Orlando, was surprised, defeated, and slain, 778. On July 25, 1813, Marshal Soult was defeated by the British entering France.

ROOF. The largest in the world is said to be that over a riding-school at Moscow, erected in 1791, being 235 feet in span. The proposed width of the roof of the London station of the Midland Railway is 240 feet (1866).

ROPE-MAKING MACHINE. One was patented by Richard March in 1784, and by Edmd. Cartwright in 1792. Many improvements have been made since.

ROSAMOND'S BOWER. Rosamond was daughter of Lord Clifford, and mistress of Henry II. about 1154. A conspiracy was formed by the queen, Prince Henry, and his other sons, against the king, on account of his attachment to her. Henry kept her in a labyrinth at Woodstock, where his queen, Eleanor, it is said, discovered her apartments by the clew of a silk thread, and poisoned her. She was buried at Godstow church, from whence Hugh, bishop of Lincoln, had her ashes removed, 1191.

ROSARY. See Beads.

ROSAS (N.E. Spain), BAY OF, where a brilliant naval action was fought by the boats of the Cumberland, Volante, Apollo, Topaze, Philomel, Scout, and Tuscan, commanded by Lieut. Tallow, which ended in the capture or destruction of eleven armed vessels in the bay, Nov. 1, 1809.

ROSBACH (Rosebec), in Flanders. Here Charles VI. of France beat the Flemings, who had revolted against their count, 1382. At Rosbach, in Prussia, a great battle was fought between the Prussians, commanded by Frederick the Great, and the combined army of French and Austrians, in which the latter sustained a complete defeat and severe loss, Nov. 5, 1757.

ROSE.* See under Flowers.

ROSES, WARS OF THE, between the Lancastrians (who chose the red rose as their emblem) and the Yorkists (who chose the white rose), began 1455 and ended 1485.† It is stated that in the Wars of the Roses there perished 12 princes of the blood, 200 nobles, and 100,000 gentry and common people. The union of the roses was effected in the marriage of Henry VII. with the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV., 1486.

ROSETTA (in Egypt), taken by the French in 1798; ‡ and by the British and Turks, April 19, 1801. The Turks repulsed the British here, May 21, 1807. Near Rosetta, at the mouth of the Nile, was fought the memorable battle of Aug. 1, 1798, between the fleets of France and England, the latter commanded by Nelson. See Nile. Ali Pacha rendered great service to his country by constructing a canal between Rosetta and Alexandria.

ROSTCRUCIANS, a sect of mystical philosophers, who first appeared in Germany in the 14th century, and again early in the 17th century. They derived their name from the Confessio Rosce Crucis of Valentine Andreas, 1615. They swore fidelity, promised secrecy, and wrote hieroglyphically, and affirmed that the ancient philosophers of Egypt, the Chaldeans, Magi of Persia, and Gymnosophists of the Indies, taught the same doctrine.

ROTHSCHILD FAMILY. Meyer Amschel, or Anselm, was born at No. 148 Judengasse (Jew Lane), Frankfurt, in 1743. In 1772 he began business as a money-lender and dealer in old coins, in the same

* The rose, a symbol of silence, gave rise to the phrase sub rosa, "under the rose;" said by Italian writers, to have risen from the circumstance of the pope's presenting consecrated roses, which were placed over the confessionals at Rome, to denote secrecy, 1526.

† Richard II., who succeeded his grandfather Edward III. in 1377, was deposed and succeeded in 1399 by his cousin Henry IV. (son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, the fourth son of Edward III.), in prejudice to the right of Roger Mortimer (grandson of Lionel, duke of Clarence, Edward's third son), who was declared presumptive heir to the throne in 1385. Roger's grandson, Richard, duke of York, first openly claimed the crown in 1449. Attempts at compromise failed, and the war began in 1455. The Lancastrians were defeated at St. Alban's, May 23, 1455. The Protector Somerset was slain; a truce was made, and Richard became his successor. The war was renewed, and the Yorkists defeated the Lancastrians at Bloreheath, Sept. 23, 1459, but eventually dispersed, and the duke was slain. In 1460 he defeated his opponents at Northampton, took Henry prisoner, and was declared heir to the crown, but fell into an ambuscade near Wakefield, and was put to death, Dec. 31, 1460. His son (Edward) continued the struggle. He was installed as king, March 4, 1461; defeated the Lancastrians at Towton, March 29; was deposed by Warwick, who restored Henry VI., Sept., 1470; defeated the Lancastrians at Barnet, April 14, 1471; and finally at Tewkesbury, May 4. The struggle ended with the defeat and death of Richard III. at Bosworth, Aug. 22, 1485.

‡ The Rosetta Stone, discovered by the French in 1799, was brought from Rosetta in a French vessel, from whence it was taken by Mr. Wm. R. Hamilton, who deposited it in the British Museum. In 1841, Mr. Letronne published the text and a translation of the Greek inscription. It is a piece of black basalt, about 3 feet long and 2½ feet wide, with an inscription in three languages, viz., hieroglyphics, modified hieroglyphics (enchorial), and Greek, setting forth the praises of Ptolemy Epiphanes (about 154 B.C.). It has been investigated by Dr. T. Young and Champollion.

house, over which he placed the sign of the Red Shield (in German, Roth Schild). Having had dealings with the Landgrave of Hesse, that prince intrusted him with his treasure (said to have been £250,000) in 1806, when the French held his country. With this sum as capital, Anselm traded and made a large fortune, and restored the £250,000 to the landgrave in 1815. At his death his sons continued the business as partners. His son Nathan began at Manchester in 1798, removed to London in 1803, and died immensely rich, July 28, 1836.

ROTTERDAM, the second city in Holland. Its importance dates from the 13th century. The commerce of Antwerp was transferred to it in 1509. It suffered much from the French revolutionary wars, and from inundations in 1775 and 1825. Desiderius Erasmus was born here in 1467. The museum and picture-gallery of Rotterdam were destroyed at the fire of the Schieland palace, Feb. 16, 1864.

ROUEN (N. France), an archbishopric, 260, became the capital of Normandy in the 10th century. It was held by the English king till 1204, and was retaken by Henry V., Jan. 19, 1419. Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, was burnt here, May 30, 1431. It was subdued by the King of France in 1449, and was besieged 1562 and 1591.

ROUMANIA, the name assumed by the Danubian principalities on Dec. 23, 1861, when their union was proclaimed at Bucharest and Jassy.

ROUNDHEADS. In the civil war which began in 1641, the adherents of Charles I. were called Cavaliers, and the friends of the Parliament were Roundheads. The term, it is said, arose from those persons who distinguished themselves by having a round bowl or wooden dish put upon their heads, and their hair cut by the edges or brim of the bowl. See Cavaliers.

ROUNDWAY DOWN, near Devizes, Wiltshire. Here the Royalists defeated the Parliamentarians with great slaughter, July 13, 1643.

ROXBURGHE CLUB was instituted in 1812 by Earl Spencer and a number of gentlemen for the republication of rare books or hitherto unpublished MSS.

ROYAL ACADEMY. A society of artists met in St. Peter's Court, St. Martin's Lane, about 1739, which Hogarth established as the Society of Incorporated Artists, who held their first exhibition at the Society of Arts, Adelphi, April 21, 1760. From this sprang the Royal Academy, in consequence of a dispute between the directors and the fellows. On Dec. 10, 1768, the institution of the present Royal Academy was completed under the patronage of George III.; and Sir Joshua Reynolds, knighted on the occasion, was appointed its first president.—Leigh. The first exhibition of the Academicians (at Pall-Mall) was in 1769. In 1771 the king granted them apartments in old Somerset House, and afterward, in 1780, in new Somerset House, where they remained till 1838, when they removed to the National Gallery. Among its professors have been Johnson, Gibbon, Goldsmith, Macaulay, and Hallam. Turner, the painter, gave funds to the academy for the award of a medal triennially for landscape painting, which was awarded to Mr. N. O. Lupton in 1857. A commission of inquiry into the affairs of the academy, appointed in 1862, recommended various changes in July, 1863.

PRESIDENTS.

- 1768. Sir Joshua Reynolds.
- 1792. Benjamin West.
- 1820. Sir Thomas Lawrence.
- 1830. Sir Martin A. Shee.
- 1850. Sir Charles Eastlake, died Dec. 23, 1865.
- 1866. Sir Edwin Landseer elected president, declines Jan. 24; Francis Grant elected Feb. 1.

ROYAL EXCHANGE (Cambium Regis), London. The foundation of the original edifice was laid by Sir Thomas Gresham, June 7, 1566, on the site of the ancient Tun Prison. Queen Elizabeth opened it in Jan. 23, 1571, and her herald named it the Royal Exchange.—Hume. It was totally destroyed by the great fire, Sept., 1666. Charles II. laid the foundation-stone of the next edifice, Oct. 23, 1667, which was completed by Mr. Hawksmore, a pupil of Sir Christopher Wren's, in about three years; it was repaired and beautified in 1769. This also was burnt, Jan. 10, 1838, with a number of public offices, etc. The new Royal Exchange, commenced in 1842 under the direction of Mr. Tite, was opened by the queen Oct. 28, 1844.—The ROYAL EXCHANGE, Dublin, was commenced in 1769, and opened in 1779.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, the earliest of the kind in London, was founded March, 1799, by Count Rumford and Sir Joseph Banks, assisted by Earls Spencer and Morton, and other noblemen and gentlemen. It received the immediate patronage of George III., and was incorporated Jan. 13, 1800, by royal charter, as "The Royal Institution of Great Britain, for the diffusing knowledge, and facilitating the general introduction of useful mechanical inventions and improvements, and for teaching, by courses of philosophical lectures and experiments, the application of science to the common purposes of life." It was enlarged and extended by an act of Parliament in 1810, the original plan, as drawn up by Count Rumford in 1799, having been considerably modified.*

ROYAL SOCIETY (London). In 1645 several learned men met in London to discuss philosophical questions and report experiments, the Novum Organum of Bacon, published in 1620, having given great impulse to such pursuits. Some of them (Drs. Wilkins, Wallis, etc.), about 1648-9, removed to Oxford, and with Dr. (afterward Bishop) Seth Ward, the Hon. Robert Boyle, Dr. (afterward Sir) W. Petty, and several doctors of divinity and physic, frequently assembled in the apartments of Dr. Wilkins, in Wadham College, Oxford. They formed what has been called the Philosophical Society of Oxford, which only lasted till 1690. The members were, about 1653, called to various parts of the kingdom on account of their respective professions; and the majority, coming to London, constantly attended the lectures at Gresham College, and met occasionally till the death of Oliver Cromwell in 1659. See Societies.

RUBICON, a small river flowing into the Adriatic Sea, separated Cisalpine Gaul from Italy proper. Roman generals were forbidden to pass this river at the head of an army. Julius Cæsar did so, 49 B.C., and thereby began a revolt and deadly civil war.

RUBIDIUM, an alkaline metal, discovered by Bunsen by means of the spectrum analysis, and made known in 1861.

RUGBY SCHOOL (Warwickshire), was founded in 1567 by Lawrence, sheriff, a London tradesman. Dr. Thomas Arnold, the historian, entered on the duties of head-master here in August, 1828, and under him the school greatly prospered. He died June 12, 1842.

RUHMKORFF'S INDUCTION COIL. See Induction.

RULING MACHINES, used for ruling paper with faint lines for merchants' account-books, etc. They were invented by an ingenious Dutchman, resident in London, in 1782, and were subsequently greatly improved by Woodmason, Payne, Brown, and others. They were improved in Scotland in 1808. An invention has lately rendered account-books perfect by the numbering of the pages with types, instead of the numbers being written by a pen, so that a page can not be torn out from them without being discovered.

RUM (French rhum), ardent spirit distilled from sugar lees and molasses, deriving its peculiar flavor from a volatile oil. Rum is principally made in the West Indies. The duty (since 1855) on colonial rum imported into the United Kingdom is 8s. 2d. per gallon, on foreign rum (since 1846) is 15s. per gallon. The duty on rum to be employed as methylated spirits was reduced in 1863.

RUMP PARLIAMENT. See Pride's Purge.

RUNNY-MEDE (council-mead), near Egham, Surrey. Here King John signed Magna Charta, June 15, 1215.

RUSSELL ADMINISTRATIONS.† See Palmerston Administration, etc.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION (formed on the resignation of Sir Robert Peel), July, 1846.

First Lord of the Treasury, Lord John Russell.

* The members are elected by ballot, and pay five guineas on admission, and five guineas annually, or a composition of sixty guineas.

† Lord John Russell, 3d son of John, duke of Bedford, was born Aug. 19, 1792; M.P. for Tavistock, 1813; for London, 1841-61; was paymaster of the forces, 1830-34; secretary for home department, 1835-9; for the colonies, 1839-41; first minister, July, 1846, to March, 1852; secretary for foreign affairs, Dec., 1852, to Feb., 1853; president of the council, June, 1854, to Feb., 1855; secretary for the colonies, March to Nov., 1855; secretary for foreign affairs, June, 1859, to Oct., 1865, when he succeeded Lord Palmerston as premier; created a peer as Earl Russell, July 30, 1861. His motion for reform in Parliament was negatived in 1822; adopted March 1, 1831; he introduced the Registration Bill, and a new Marriage Bill, in 1836.

Lord Chancellor, Lord Cottenham (succeeded by Lord Truro).
Lord President of the Council, Marquess of Lansdowne.
Privy Seal, Earl of Minto.
Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. (now Sir Charles) Wood.

RUSSELL INSTITUTION (Great Coram Street, London) was founded in 1808 by Sir Samuel Romilly, Francis Horner, Dr Mason Good, Henry Hallam, Lord Abinger, and others. The building comprises a library, lecture-room, news-room, etc.

RUSSELL TRIAL. William, lord Russell's trial for complicity in the Rye-house Plot was marked by a most touching scene. When he supplicated to have some one near him to take notes to help his memory, he was answered that any of his attendants might assist him; upon which he said, "My wife is here, and will do it for me." He was beheaded in Lincoln's Inn Fields, July 21, 1683, having slept soundly the night before his execution. Lady Russell survived him 40 years, dying Sept. 29, 1723, in her eighty-seventh year. The attainder of this nobleman was reversed, 1 Will. III., 1689, his execution having been deemed a MURDER.

RUSSIA, the eastern part of ancient Sarmatia. The name is generally derived from the Roxolani, a Sclavonic tribe. Ruric, a Varangian chief, appears to have been the first to establish a government, 862. His descendants ruled amid many vicissitudes till 1598. The progress of the Russian power under Peter the Great and Catharine II. is unequalled for rapidity in the history of the world. The established religion of Russia is the Greek Church, with a free toleration, however, of other sects, even the Mohammedans. By an imperial ukase in 1802, six universities were established, viz., at St. Petersburg, Moscow, Wilna, Dorpat (in Livonia), Charcov, and Kasan; but literature has made little progress, the native publications being very few, and the best books being all translations. The Russian language, though not devoid of elegance, is, to a foreigner, of very difficult pronunciation: the number of letters and diphthongs is forty-two. The estimated population of the empire in 1865 was 80,255,430. By the first Russian budget (1862), the estimated revenue was £34,500,000; expenditure, £37,850,000.

RUSO-TURKISH WAR.* The Russian and

* In 1844, when the czar was in England, he conversed with the Duke of Wellington and Lord Aberdeen (whom he had known many years) respecting the dissolution of the Turkish Empire, and on his return he embodied his views in a memorandum drawn up by Count Nesselrode, which was transmitted to London, but kept secret till March, 1854. In January and February of that year the czar had several conversations on the subject with the British envoy at St. Petersburg, Sir G. H. Seymour, in one of which (Jan. 14) he compared Turkey to a man in a state of decrepitude and sickness, on the point of death, and made proposals to the British government as to the disposal of his property. He stated frankly that he would not permit the British to establish themselves at Constantinople, but said in another conversation he would not object to their possessing Egypt. The purport of these conversations was conveyed in dispatches to Lord John Russell, who replied that the French governments having each taken a side in the dispute between the Greek and Latin churches as to the exclusive possession of the Holy Places (which see) in Palestine, the Porte advised the formation of a mixed commission, which decided in favor of the Greeks, and a firman was promulgated accordingly, March 9, 1853: to this decision the French acceded, although dissatisfied.

The Russians make farther claims, and Prince Menschikoff (who arrived at Constantinople Feb. 28, 1853), by various notes (between March 22 and May 18), demands that a convention should be signed by the sultan granting to the czar such a protectorate over the Greek Christians in Turkey as the sultan considered inimical to his own authority. . . . - RUTHVEN, RAIN OF, a term applied to the seizure of the person of James VI. of Scotland by William Ruthven, earl of Gowrie, and other nobles, in 1582. They compelled the king to dismiss his favorites, Arran and Lennox. Ostensibly for this, Gowrie was judicially put to death by his two opponents in 1584.
- RYE-HOUSE PLOT, a plot (some think pretended) to secure the succession of the Duke of Monmouth to the throne in preference to the Duke of York (afterward James II.), a Roman Catholic. Some of the conspirators are said to have projected the assassination of the king, Charles II., and his brother. This design was said to have been frustrated by the king's house at Newmarket accidentally taking fire, which hastened the royal party away eight days before the plot was to take place, March 22, 1683. See Newmarket. The plot was discovered June 12 following. Lord William Russell on July 21, and Algernon Sidney on Dec. 7 following, suffered death for being concerned in this conspiracy. The name was derived from the conspirators' place of meeting, the Rye-house at Broxbourne, Hertfordshire.
- RYSWICK (Holland), where the celebrated peace was concluded between England, France, Spain, and Holland, signed, by their representatives, Sept. 20, and by the Emperor of Germany, Oct. 30, 1697.

* 40,000 men, a large number of horses, and a powerful artillery were landed in one day.

* The English lost: killed in action and died of wounds, about 3500; died of cholera, 4244; of other diseases nearly 16,000; total loss nearly 24,000 (including 270 officers); 2873 were disabled. The war added to the national debt £41,041,000. The French lost about 63,500 men; the Russians about half a million. The army suffered greatly by sickness. See Scutari, Times, and Nightingale.

SABBATARIANS. Traces exist of Sabbatarii, or Sabbathaires, among the sects of the 16th century on the Continent. Upon the publication of the "Book of Sports" in 1618, a long and violent controversy arose among English divines on these two points: first, whether the Sabbath of the fourth commandment was in force among Christians; and secondly, whether, and on what ground, the first day of the week was entitled to be distinguished and observed as "the Sabbath." In 1628, Theophilus Bradbourne, a clergyman, published the first work in favor of the Seventh-day or Saturday, as the true Christian Sabbath. He and several others suffered great persecution for this opinion; but after the Restoration there were three or four congregations observing the last day of the week for public worship in London, and seven or eight in the country parts of England. In 1851 there were three Sabbatarian or Seventh-day Baptist congregations in England; but in America (especially in the New England states) they are more numerous.

SABBATH: ordained by God (Gen. ii.; Exod. xx., 8; Isaiah lviii., 13). Jews observe the seventh day in commemoration of the creation of the world and of their redemption from the bondage of the Egyptians; Christians observe the first day of the week in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and the redemption of man. See Sunday.

SABBATH-SCHOOLS. The first "Sabbath-school" was founded by Ludwig Hacker between the years 1740 and 1747, at Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, among the German Seventh-day Baptists there. The school-room was used as a hospital after the battle of Brandywine, fought in 1777. This event occasioned the breaking up of the school, about five years before the first Sunday-school was instituted in England, at Gloucester, by Robert Raikes, about 1782. See Sunday-schools.

SABBATICAL YEAR: a Jewish institution, 491 B.C. Every seventh year, during which time the very ground had rest, and was not tilled; and every fortieth year all debts were forgiven, slaves set at liberty, and estates, etc., that were before sold or mortgaged, returned to their original families, etc.—Josephus.

SABELLIANISM, from Sabellius (of Ptolemais, in Egypt), who flourished in the 3d century, and who taught that there was but one person in the Godhead, the other persons of the Trinity being but different names of the same person. This doctrine was condemned at a council held at Rome, 263.

SABINES, from whom the Romans, under Romulus, took away their daughters by force, having invited them to some public sports or shows on purpose. When the Sabines determined to revenge this affront, the women became mediators to their fathers in behalf of their husbands, the Romans, and a lasting peace was made between them; the Sabines became a part of the Roman people, 750 B.C. One of the ecclesiastical provinces is still called Terra Sabina; chief town, Magliano.

SACKETT'S HARBOR, DEFENSE OF. A British force of 750 men landed from a British fleet and attacked Sackett's Harbor, at the east end of Lake Ontario, on the 29th of May, 1813. They were repulsed by 1000 men under Gen. Jacob Brown. The Americans lost 22 killed and 84 wounded; the British loss was somewhat greater.

SACRAMENT (from sacramentum, an oath, obligation, also mystery). The Council of Trent, in 1547, affirmed that there were seven sacraments, viz., baptism, the Lord's Supper, confirmation, penance, holy orders, matrimony, and extreme unction. The name was given to the Lord's Supper by the Latin fathers. The wine was laid aside, and communion by the laity under one form alone, that of bread, took its rise in the West, under Pope Urban II., 1096.—M. de Marca. Communion in one kind only was authoritatively sanctioned by the Council of Constance in 1414.—Dr. Hook. Henry VIII. of Germany was poisoned by a priest in the consecrated wafer, 1514. The sacramental wine was poisoned by the grave-digger of the church at Zürich, by which sacrilegious deed a number of persons lost their lives, Sept. 4, 1776. In 1614, by the Test Act, all members of both houses of Parliament were ordered to take the sacrament, as a guard against the introduction of Roman Catholics. The act was repealed in 1828.

SACRAMENTO, Sr., a Portuguese settlement in S. America, claimed by Spain in 1680, but relinquished in 1713; ceded in 1777; and acquired by Brazil in 1825.

SACRED WAR (Sacrum Bellum). The first, concerning the temple of Delphi, took place 448 B.C. The Athenians and Lacedæmonians were auxiliaries on opposite sides. The second Sacred War occurred on Delphi being seized by the Phocians, 357 B.C. This latter war was terminated by Philip of Macedon taking all the cities of the Phocians, and dispersing the inhabitants, 346 B.C.—Plutarch.

SACRIFICE. The first religious sacrifice was offered to God by Abel, 375 B.C. Sacrifices to the gods were introduced into Greece by Phoroneus, king of Argos, 1773 B.C. Human sacrifices seem to have originated with the Chaldeans, from whom the custom passed into other Eastern nations. All sacrifices to the true God were to cease with the sacrifice of Christ, 33 (Heb. x., 12, 14). Pagan sacrifices were forbidden by the Emperor Constantius II., 341.

SADDLES. In the earlier ages the Romans used neither saddles nor stirrups. Saddles were in use in the 3d century, and are mentioned as made of leather in 304, and were known in England about 600. Side-saddles for ladies were introduced by Anne, queen of Richard II., in 1388.—Stow.

SADUCEES, a Jewish sect, said to have been founded by Sadoc, a scholar of Antigonus, about 200 B.C., who, misinterpreting his master's doctrine, taught that there was neither heaven nor hell, angel nor spirit; that the soul was mortal, and that there was no resurrection of the body from the dead. The Sadducees were opposed by the Pharisees.

SADLER'S WELLS (N. London), so called after Mr. Sadler, who built an orchestra to entertain the invalids who used the waters medicinally, 1683. In time the orchestra was inclosed, and the building became a place for dramatic performances. The present theatre was opened in 1765. Eighteen persons were trampled to death at this theatre, on a false alarm of fire, Oct. 15, 1807. See under Theatres.

SAFETY-LAMP. One was invented in 1815 by Sir Humphry Davy to prevent accidents which happen in coal and other mines. The safety-lamp is founded on the principle that flame, in passing through iron-wire meshes, loses so much of its heat as not to be capable of igniting inflammable gases. It should be mentioned that the father of all safety-lamps is Dr. Reid Clanny, of Sunderland, whose invention and improvements are authenticated in the Transactions of the Society of Arts for 1817. A safety-lamp, the "Geordy," was also devised by George Stephenson, the engineer, in 1815. A miner's electric light, by MM. Dumas and Benoit, was exhibited in Paris on Sept. 8, 1862.

SAFFRON (Saffran, French; Saffrano, Italian), the flower of crocus, was first brought to England in the reign of Edward III. by a pilgrim, about 1339, probably from Arabia, as the word is from the Arabic saphar.—Miller. It was cultivated in England in 1582; and the best grows in Essex, between Cambridge and Saffron Walden.

SAGE (Sauge, French; Salvia, Latin), a wholesome herb, comfortable to the brain and nerves.—Mortimer. A species of this garden plant grew early in England, and some varieties were imported. The Mexican sage, Salvia Mexicana, was brought from Mexico, 1724. The blue African sage, Salvia Africana, and the golden African sage, Salvia aurea, were brought to England from the Cape of Good Hope in 1731.

SAGUNTUM (now MURVEDRO, in Valencia, Eastern Spain), renowned for the dreadful siege it sustained, 219 B.C. The heroic citizens, after performing incredible acts of valor for eight months, chose to be buried in the ruins of their city rather than surrender to Hannibal. They burnt themselves, with their houses and all their effects, and the conqueror became master of a pile of ashes, 218 B.C.

SALADS, introduced into England from the Low Countries, 1520-47.

SALAMANCA (W. Spain), taken from the Saracens 861. The University was founded 1240, and the Cathedral built 1513. Near here the British and Allies, commanded by Lord Wellington, totally defeated the French army under Marshal Marmont, July 22, 1812. The loss of the victors was most severe, amounting in killed, wounded, and missing to nearly 6000 men. Marmont left in the victor's hands 7141 prisoners, 11 pieces of cannon, 6 stands of colors, and 2 eagles. This victory was followed by the capture of Madrid.

SALAMIS (near Athens). In a great sea-fight here, Oct. 20, 480 B.C., Themistocles, the Greek commander, with only 810 sail, defeated the fleet of Xerxes, king of Persia, which consisted of 2000 sail.—Near Salamis, in Cyprus, the Greeks defeated the Persian fleet, 449 B.C.

SALDANHA BAY, S. Atlantic Ocean, northward of the Cape of Good Hope. Here, on Aug. 17, 1796, a Dutch squadron, under Admiral Lucas, was captured by Vice Admiral Sir George Keith Elphinstone, without resistance; Sir George was created Lord Keith.

SALEM WITCHCRAFT. See Witchcraft.

SALENCKEMEN, on the Danube. Here a victory was gained by the Imperialists, under Prince Louis of Baden, over the Turks, commanded by the Grand Vizier Mustapha Kiuprigli, Aug. 19, 1691.

SALIQUE, or SALIC LAW, by which females are excluded from inheriting the crown of France, is said to have been instituted by Pharamond, 424, and ratified in a council of state by Clovis I., the real founder of the French monarchy, in 511.—Henault. This law prevailed long in Spain, but was formally abolished, March, 1830; and on the death of Ferdinand VII. his daughter succeeded to the sceptre as Isabella II., Sept. 29, 1833. See Spain. By this law also Hanover was separated from England when Queen Victoria ascended the English throne in 1837.

SALISBURY (Wilts), founded in the beginning of the 13th century, on the removal of the Cathedral thither from Old Sarum. National councils or Parliaments were repeatedly held at Salisbury, particularly in 1296, by Edward I.; in 1328, by Edward III.; and in 1384. Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was executed here, by order of Richard III., in 1483. On SALISBURY PLAIN is Stonehenge (which see). This plain was estimated at 500,000 acres. On it were so many cross-roads, and so few houses to take directions from, that Thomas, earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at each milestone from Salisbury to Shaftesbury, for the traveler's guide. The first seat of the BISHOPRIC was at Sherborne, St. Aldhelm being prelate, 705. Herman removed the seat to Old Sarum, about 1072; and the see was removed to this city, under the authority of a papal bull, in 1217. It has yielded to the Church of Rome one saint and two cardinals. The building of the Cathedral commenced April 28, 1220, and was completed in 1283. This edifice is reckoned one of our finest ecclesiastical erections. Its spire, the loftiest in the kingdom, was considered in danger in April, 1864, and subscriptions were begun for its repair. The bishopric is valued in the king's books at £1367 11s. 8d. Present income, £5000.

SALMON FISHERIES. The laws relating to them were consolidated and amended in 1861, and the report of a commission of inquiry (including Sir Wm. Jardine) was published in Feb., 1862. An act restricting the exportation of salmon at certain times was passed in 1863.

SALT (chloride of sodium, a compound of the gas chlorine and the metal sodium) is procured from rocks in the earth, from salt-springs, and from sea-water. The famous salt-mines of Wieliczka, near Cracow, in Poland, have been worked 600 years. The salt-works in Cheshire, called the wroces (Nantwich, Northwich, and Middlewich), were of great importance in the time of the Saxon Heptarchy. Since 1797 salt has been largely employed in the manufacture of bleaching powder (by obtaining its chlorine) and soap (by obtaining its soda). On this are based the chemical works of Cheshire and Lancashire. The salt-mines of Staffordshire were discovered about 1670. Salt duties were first exacted in 1702; they were renewed in 1732; reduced in 1823; and in that year were ordered to cease in 1825. During the French War, the duty reached to £30 per ton. For the salt-tax in France, see Gabelle. The government monopoly in India was abolished in May, 1863, by Sir C. Trevelyan.

SALTPETRE (from sal petrae, salt of the rock), or NITRE, is a compound of nitric acid and potash (nitrogen, oxygen, and potassium), and hence is called Nitrate of Potash. It is the explosive ingredient in gunpowder, many detonating powders, and lucifer matches. Boyle, in the 17th century, demonstrated that saltpetre was composed of aqua fortis (nitric acid) and potash; but the discoveries of Lavoisier (1777) and Davy (1807) showed its real composition. Its manufacture in England began about 1625. During the French Revolutionary War, the manufacture was greatly increased by the researches of Berthollet.

SALUTE AT SEA. It is a received maxim at sea, that he who returns the salute always fires fewer guns than he receives, which is done even between the ships of princes of equal dignity; but the Swedes and Danes return the compliment without regarding how many guns are fired to them. The English claim the right of being saluted first in all places, as sovereigns of the seas; the Venetians claimed this honor within their gulf, etc. See Flag and Naval Salute.

SALVADOR, SAN, one of the Bahamas, and the first point of land discovered in the West Indies or America by Columbus. It was previously called Guanahama, or Cat's Isle, and Columbus (in acknowledgment to God for his deliverance) named it San Salvador, Oct. 11, 1492.—A small republic, with a Constitution, established January 24, 1859. It has been much troubled by internal dissension. Present president, Francis Dueñas, elected April, 1865. The capital, San Salvador, was destroyed by an earthquake, April 16, 1854, and is now abandoned.

SAMARCAND (in Tartary) was conquered by the Mohammedans, 707; by Genghis Khan, 1219; and by Timour in 1359.

SAMARITANS. Samaria was built by Omri, 925 B.C., and became the capital of the kingdom of Israel. On the breaking up of that kingdom (721 B.C.), the conqueror Shalmaneser placed natives of other countries at Samaria. The descendants of these mixed races were abominable to the Jews, and much more so in consequence of the rival temple built on Mount Gerizim by Sanballat, the Samaritan, 332 B.C., which was destroyed by John Hyrcanus, 130 B.C. (See John iv., and viii., 48, and Luke x., 33.)

SAMNITES, a warlike people of S. Italy, who strenuously resisted the Roman power, and were not subjugated till after three sanguinary wars, from 343 to 292 B.C. Their brave leader, Caius Pontius, who spared the Romans at Caudium, 320, having been taken prisoner, was basely put to death, 292. They did not acquire the right of citizenship till 88 B.C.

SAMOS, an island on the W. coast of Asia Minor. Colonized by Ionians about 1043 B.C. The city was founded about 986. Here Pythagoras was born 555 B.C., and flourished in the favor of Polycrates, who aided him in his travels, 532. Samos was taken by the Athenians, 440; and, with Greece, became subject to Rome, 146. It was taken by the Venetians, A.D. 1125, who here made velvet (samet), and became subject to the Turks, 1459.

SANCTUARIES. See Asylum. Privileged places for the safety of offenders are said to have been granted by King Lucius to churches and their precincts. St. John's, of Beverley, was thus privileged in the time of the Saxons. St. Burein's, in Cornwall, was privileged by Athelstan, 935; Westminster, by Edward the Confessor; St. Martin's-le-Grand, 1529. Being much abused, the privilege of sanctuary was limited by the pope in 1503, at the request of Henry VII.; it was abolished at the Reformation.—In London, persons were secure from arrest in certain localities: these were the Minorities, Salisbury Court, Whitefriars, Fulwood's Rents, Mitre Court, Baldwin's Gardens, the Savoy, Clink, Deadman's Place, Montague Close, and the Mint. This security was abolished 1696, but lasted in some degree till the reign of George II.

SANDALS. See Shoes.

SANDEMANIANS. See Glasites.

SANDERS'S CREEK, BATTLE OF. This engagement occurred a few miles north of Camden, South Carolina, on the morning of the 16th of August, 1780, between the Americans, under Gen. Gates, and the British, under Cornwallis. They were approaching each other over a deep sandy road, without each other's knowledge of the fact, and met suddenly in the dark at a little past midnight. A brief skirmish then ensued between the vanguards, and early in the morning a general battle began. The Americans were utterly defeated and dispersed, the British being overwhelming in numbers. The loss of the Americans in killed, wounded, and prisoners was about 1000 men.

Among the killed was the Baron de Kalb. The British loss was 325.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, a group in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Cook in 1778. In Orukheo or Hawaii, one of these islands, he fell a victim to the sudden resentment of the natives, Feb. 14, 1779. The king and queen visited London in 1824, and died there in July. These people have made great progress in civilization, and embraced Christianity before any missionaries were settled among them. The present king, Kamehameha V., succeeded his brother, Nov., 1863. The preceding king, Kamehameha IV., married Miss Emma Rooker, 1856. She came to England in 1865, landing at Southampton July 13, and visited the queen, Sept. 9. An English bishopric was established at Honolulu in 1861, for which Dr. Thomas Staley was consecrated, Aug. 18, 1862.

SANDY CREEK. On the 30th of May, 1814, a party of 160 British landed at Sandy Creek, on Lake Ontario, and attacked Major Appling, who was stationed there with 120 riflemen and some Oneida Indians. The British were all killed, wounded, or made prisoners. They had 10 killed and 30 wounded. The Americans had one rifleman and one Indian warrior killed.

SANHEDRIM. An ancient Jewish council of the highest jurisdiction, of seventy, or, as some say, seventy-three members, usually considered to be that established by Moses, Numb. xi., 16—1490 B.C. It was yet in being at the time of Jesus Christ, John xviii., 31. A Jewish Sanhedrim was summoned by the Emperor Napoleon I. at Paris, July 23, 1806, and assembled accordingly, Sept. 18.

SANITARY LEGISLATION. Strict cleanliness is enjoined in the law of Moses, 1490 B.C. Great attention has been paid to the public health in France since 1802. Tardieu published his "Dictionnaire de Hygiène," 1852-54. To Dr. Southwood Smith is mainly attributable the honor of commencing the agitation on the subject of public health in England about 1832, his "Philosophy of Health" having excited much attention. Since 1838 he has published numerous sanitary reports, having been much employed by the government. Among the results are—

SAN SALVADOR. See Salvador.

SANSKRIT, the language of the Brahmins of India, spoken at the time of Solomon, has been much studied of late years. Sir William Jones, who published a translation of the poem Sakuntalā in 1783, discovered that a complete literature had been preserved in India, comprising sacred books (the Vedas), history and philosophy, lyric and dramatic poetry. Texts and translations of many works have been published by the aid of the East India Company, the Oriental Translation Fund, and private liberality. The professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford was founded by Colonel Boden. The first professor, H. W. Wilson, appointed in 1832, translated part of the Rig-veda Samhitā, the sacred hymns of the Brahmins, and several poems, etc. The present professor, Monier Williams (elected 1860), published an English and Sanskrit Dictionary, 1851. Professor Max Müller published his History of Sanskrit Literature in 1859, and has edited part of the original text of the Vedas. Philologists have discovered an intimate connection between the Sanskrit, Persian, Greek, Latin, Teutonic, Slavonian, Celtic, and Scandinavian languages.

SANTA CRUZ (Teneriffe, Canary Islands). Here Admiral Blake, by daring bravery, entirely destroyed sixteen Spanish ships, secured with great nautical skill, and protected by the castle and forts on the shore, April 20, 1657.—Clarendon. In an unsuccessful attack made upon Santa Cruz by Nelson, several officers and 141 men were killed, and the admiral lost his right arm, July 24, 1797.*

* It was remarkable that Captain Fremantle, the friend of Nelson, and his companion in most of his brilliant achievements, was also wounded in the arm immediately before Nelson had received his wound in the same limb. The following characteristic note, addressed to the lady of Captain Fremantle (who was on board with her husband at the time he wrote), has been preserved, as being the first letter written by SANTA ROSA ISLAND (Florida). This island is a sand reef opposite Florida, on the Gulf coast, and enclosing Pensacola Harbor. On the western extremity of the island is Fort Pickens. An attack was made on the night of October 8, 1861, by the Confederates upon the Sixth New York Zouaves, Col. "Billy" Wilson. The National troops were surprised at first, but succeeded in repulsing the Confederates.

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELLA (N.W. Spain), was sacked by the Moors in 995, and held by them till it was taken by Ferdinand III. in 1235. The order of Santiago, or St. James, was founded about 1170 to protect pilgrims to the shrine of St. James, said to be buried in the cathedral. The town was taken by the French in 1809, and held till 1814.—SANTIAGO, the capital of Chili, S. America, was founded by Valdivia in 1541, has suffered much by earthquakes, especially in 1822 and 1829. About seven o'clock in the evening of Dec. 8, 1863, the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary, and the last day of a series of religious celebrations in the "month of Mary," the church of the Campana, when brilliantly illuminated in a dangerous manner, was burnt down, the fire beginning amid the combustible ornaments, and above 2000 persons, principally women, perished, the means of egress being utterly insufficient. On the 20th the government ordered the church to be razed to the ground, and much public indignation was excited against the fanatical priesthood.

SAPPHIC VERSE, invented by Sappho, the lyric poetess of Mitylene. She was equally celebrated for her poetry, beauty, and a hopeless passion for Phaon, a youth of her native country, on which last account it is said she threw herself into the sea from Mount Leucas, and was drowned. The Lesbians, after her death, paid her divine honors, and called her the tenth muse, 594 B.C. Some consider the story fabulous.

SAPPHIRE, a precious stone of an azure color, and transparent; in hardness it exceeds the ruby, and is next to the diamond. Thomas Kouli Khan is said to have possessed a sapphire valued at £500,000, 1733. Artificial sapphires were made in 1857 by M. Gardin. Equal parts of alum and sulphate of potash were heated in a crucible.

SARACENS, an Arab race, the first disciples of Mohammed, who within forty years after his death (632) had subdued a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They conquered Spain in 711, et seq., and (under Abderahman) established the caliphate of Cordova in 755, which gave way to the Moors in 1237. The empire of the Saracens closed by Bagdad being taken by the Tartars, 1258.—Blair.

SARAGOSSA (N.E. Spain), anciently Cæsarea Augusta, was taken from the Arabs by Alfonso of Spain in 1118. Here Philip V. was defeated by the Archduke Charles in 1710. On Dec. 17, 1778, 400 of the inhabitants perished in a fire at the theatre. Saragossa was taken by the French, after a most heroic defense by General Palafox, Feb. 20, 1809. The inhabitants, of both sexes, resisted until worn out by fighting, famine, and pestilence.

SARAH SANDS. See Wrecks, 1857.

SARATOGA (New York State, U. S.). Here General Burgoyne, commander of a body of the British army, after a severe engagement with the Americans (Oct. 7), being surrounded, surrendered all his army (5791 men) to the American General Gates, Oct. 17, 1777. This was the greatest check the British suffered in the war.

SARDINIA, an island in the Mediterranean, successively possessed by the Phœnicians, Greeks, Carthaginians (550 B.C.), Romans (subjugated it 231), Saracens, Genoese, and Spaniards. From settlers belonging to these various nations the present inhabitants derive their origin. Victor Amadeus, duke of Savoy, acquired Sardinia in 1720, with the title of king. See Savoy. Population of the Sardinian dominions in 1858, 5,194,807. The King of Sardinia was recognized as King of Italy by his Parliament in Feb., 1861. See Italy.

1802. Victor-Emmanuel I.

1805. [Sardinia merged in the kingdom of Italy, of which the Emperor Napoleon was crowned king, May 26, 1805.]

1814. Victor-Emmanuel restored; resigned in March, 1821; and died in 1824.

1821. Charles-Felix; succeeded by his nephew.

1831. Charles-Albert; abdicated in favor of his son, March 23, 1834. Died at Oporto, July 28, 1849.

1849. Victor-Emmanuel II., March 23; born March 14, 1820; the present King of Italy.

[Heir: Humbert, prince of Piedmont; born March 14, 1844.]

SARDIS. See Seven Churches.

SARMATIA, the ancient name of modern Russia and Poland.

SARUM, Old (Wiltshire), an ancient town, the origin of Salisbury, which see.

SATIRE. About a century after the introduction of comedy, satire made its appearance at Rome in the writings of Lucilius, who was so celebrated in this species of composition that he has been called the inventor of it, 116 B.C.—Livy. The Satires of Horace (35 B.C.), Juvenal (about A.D. 100), and Persius (about A.D. 60), are the most celebrated in ancient times, and those of Churchill (1761) and Pope (1729) in modern times.

SATRAPIES, divisions of the Persian Empire, formed by Darius Hystaspes about 516 B.C.

SATURDAY (the last, or seventh day of the week; the Jewish Sabbath. See Sabbath). It was so called from an idol worshipped on this day by the Saxons, and, according to Verstegan, was named by them Saterne's day.—Pardon. It is more properly from Saturn, dies Saturni.—Addison.

SATURN, the planet, ascertained to be about 900 millions of miles distant from the sun, and its diameter to be about 77,220 miles. One of the eight satellites was discovered by Huyghens (March 25, 1655); four by Cassini (1671-84); two by Sir William Herschel (1789), and one by Bond and Lassells (1848). The ring was discovered to be twofold by Messrs. Ball, Oct. 13, 1665; and an inner ring was detected in 1850 by Dawes in England (Nov. 29) and by Bond in America.

SATURNALIA, festivals in honor of Saturn, father of the gods, were instituted long before the foundation of Rome, in commemoration of the freedom and equality which prevailed on the earth in his golden reign. Some, however, suppose that the Saturnalia were first observed at Rome in the reign of Tullus Hostilius, after a victory obtained over the Sabines; while others suppose that Janus first instituted them in gratitude to Saturn, from whom he had learned agriculture. Others assert that they were first celebrated after a victory obtained over the Latins by the Dictator Posthumus. During these festivals no business was allowed, amusements were encouraged, and distinctions ceased.—Lenglet.

SAVANNAH, CAPTURE OF. Sir Henry Clinton, perceiving the exposed condition of the South, sent Colonel Campbell to invade Georgia at the close of 1778. He landed at Savannah on the 29th of December, with about 2000 troops, where he was opposed by 1000 Americans under Gen. Robert Howe. Howe was repulsed, fled up the Savannah River, and took refuge in the bosom of South Carolina. Campbell took possession of the capital of Georgia. The Americans lost, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, 553 men, including 38 officers.

SAVANNAH, SIEGE OF. A combined force of Americans under General Lincoln, and Frenchmen under the Count D'Estaing, laid siege to Savannah in the autumn of 1779. A cannonade and bombardment was opened upon the British works on the morning of the 4th of October, and continued five days. On the 9th a vigorous assault was made upon the town. The conlict continued five hours, during which nearly 1000 of the French and Americans had been killed or wounded. There was a truce to bury the dead. D'Estaing, anxious to leave the coast before the autumn storms commenced, would not renew the conflict. The siege was raised, D'Estaing went to sea, and Lincoln retreated into South Carolina, leaving the British in possession of Savannah. The French lost 637 men, the Americans 457, and the British 120.

SAVINGS' BANKS.* The Rev. Joseph Smith, of Wendover, began a Benevolent Institution in 1799; and in 1803-4 a Charitable Bank was instituted at Tottenham by Miss Priscilla Wakefield. Henry Dundas established a parish bank at Ruthwell in 1810. One was opened at Edinburgh in 1814. The benefit clubs, among artisans, having accumulated stocks of money for their progressive purposes, a plan was adopted to identify these funds with the public debt of the country, and an extra rate of interest was held out as an inducement; hence were formed savings' banks to receive small sums, returnable with interest on demand.

Sir Geo. Rose developed the system and brought it under Parliamentary control, 1816.

In 1840 there were 550 banks; 766,354 depositors; amount, £22,060,904.

Acts to consolidate and amend previous laws relating to savings' banks were passed in 1828 and 1847, extended to Scotland in 1835; again consolidated and amended in 1863.

On Nov. 20, 1851, the number of savings' banks in Great Britain and Ireland was 574, besides above twenty thousand friendly societies and charitable institutions. The depositors (in the banks) were 1,092,531, while the societies embraced a vast but unknown number of persons: the amount of deposits was £32,893,511.

Amount of stock held on account of savings' banks in 1853, £34,546,334; in 1857, £35,108,596; in 1859, £38,995,976. In 1861 the savings' banks received £8,764,370; paid, £9,621,539; estimated capital, £41,532,945 (depositors, 1,479,723). The military savings' bank held £204,377; the seamen's savings' banks held £26,448.

The deposits in the old savings' banks had not diminished in consequence in 1864.

SAVINGS' BANKS IN THE UNITED STATES. The system of savings' banks, introduced in England in 1817, was early adopted in this country. The number, resources, and liabilities of the various institutions in this country are not known. In the state of New York, as reported in 1858, the resources of the savings' banks were put at $43,885,991.

SAVOY, the ancient Sapaudia or Sabaudia, formerly a province in N. Italy, east of Piedmont. It became a Roman province about 118 B.C. The Alemanni seized it in A.D. 395, and the Franks in 496. It shared the revolutions of Switzerland till about 1048, when Conrad, emperor of Germany, gave it to Humbert, with the title of count. Count Thomas acquired Piedmont in the 13th century. Amadeus, count of Savoy, having entered his dominions, solicited Sigismund to erect them into a duchy, which he did at Cambay, Feb. 19, 1417. Victor-Amadeus, duke of Savoy, obtained the kingdom of Sicily, by a treaty from Spain, in 1713, which he afterward exchanged with the emperor for the island of Sardinia, with the title of king, 1720. See Sardinia. The French subdued Savoy in 1792, and made it a department of France, under the name of Mont Blanc, in 1800. It was restored to the King of Sardinia in 1814, but was once more annexed to France in 1860, in accordance with a vote by universal suffrage, April 23, 1860. Savoy was visited by the Emperor and Empress of the French in August, 1860. The annexation was censured in England.

DUKES OF SAVOY.

1391. Count Amadeus VIII. is made duke in 1417; he was named pope as Felix V. He abdicated as Duke of Savoy, 1439; renounced the tiara, 1449; died in 1451.

1637. Francis Hyacinthe.

1638. Chas.-Emmanuel II.

1675. Victor-Amadeus II.

became King of Sicily, 1713; exchanged for Sardinia in 1720.

SAVOY PALACE (London) was given to Peter of Savoy, uncle of Eleanor, queen of Henry III., in 1236. Here was held the conference between the clergy and the Non-conformists in 1661. It was partially taken down to make way for Waterloo Bridge. The ancient chapel was destroyed by fire, July 7, 1864, and was rebuilt at the queen's expense, and reopened, Nov. 26, 1865.

SAW. Invented by Dædalus.—Pliny. Invented by Talus.—Apollodorus. Talus, it is said, having found the jaw-bone of a snake, employed it to cut through a piece of wood, and then formed an instrument of iron like it. Saw-mills were erected in Madeira in 1420; at Breslau in 1427. Norway had the first saw-mill in 1530. The Bishop of Ely, ambassador from Mary of England to the court of Rome, describes a saw-mill there, 1555. The attempts to introduce saw-mills in England were violently opposed, and one erected by a Dutchman in 1663 was forced to be abandoned. Saw-mills were erected near London about 1770. Excellent saw-machinery exists in Woolwich dock-yard. Powis and James's band-saw was patented in 1853.

SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA (Central Germany), capitals Gotha and Coburg. Population, December, 1861, 159,431. The reigning family is descended from John, younger son of Ernest, who became Elector of Saxony in 1464.

DUKES.

1826. Ernest I., duke of Saxe-Saalfeld-Coburg; married Louisa, heiress of Augustus, duke of Saxe-Gotha, and became by convention Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Nov. 12.*

1844. Ernest II., son, Jan. 29; born June 21, 1818 (married Alexandrina, duchess of Baden, May 3, 1842; no issue).

(Heir (presumptive): Prince Alfred of England, born Aug. 6, 1844 (in whose favor the Prince of Wales resigned his rights, April 19, 1863).]

SAXE-WEIMAR (Central Germany). The grand-dukes are descended from John Frederick, the Protestant Elector of Saxony, who was deprived by the emperor in 1548. See Saxony. The houses of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Saxe-Gotha, Hilberghausen, and Saxe-Meiningen also sprang from him. They are all termed the senior or Ernestine branch of the old family.—Saxe-Weimar became a grand-duchy in 1815. The dukes have greatly favored literature, and their capital, Weimar, has been called the Athens of Germany. Population of the duchy, Dec., 1861, 273,252.

GRAND-DUKES.

1815. Charles Augustus.

1828. Charles Frederick.

1833. Charles Alexander, July 8; born June 24, 1818, the PRESENT (1866) grand-duke.

(Heir: Charles Augustus, born July 31, 1844.)

SAXONY, a kingdom in N. Germany. The Saxons were a fierce, warlike race, the terror of the inhabitants of the later Western Empire, frequently attacked France, and conquered Britain (which see). After a long series of sanguinary conflicts they were completely subdued by Charlemagne, who instituted many fiefs and bishoprics in their country. Witikind, their great leader, who claimed descent from Woden, professed Christianity about 785. From him descended the first and the present ruling family (the houses of Supplenburg, Guelph, and Ascania intervened from 1106 to 1421). Saxony became a duchy, 880; an electorate, 1180; and a kingdom, 1806. It was the seat of war in 1813, the king being on the side of Napoleon. Population, Dec., 1861, 2,225,240.

ELECTORS.

1423. Frederick I.

1428. Frederick II.

(His sons Ernest and Albert divide the states.)

1464. Ernest.

 1854. John, Aug. 9 (born Dec. 12, 1801), the PRESENT king.
 [Heir: His son, Frederick Augustus Albert, born April 23, 1828.]

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM, a special statute relating to any wrong, by words or in writing, done to high personages of the land, such as peers, judges, ministers of the crown, officers in the state, and other great public functionaries, by the circulation of scandalous statements, false news, or horrible messages, by which any debate or discord between them and the commons, or any scandal to their persons, might arise.—Chambers. This law was first enacted 2 Rich. II., 1378.

SCANDINAVIA, the ancient name of Sweden, Norway, and great part of Denmark (which see), whence proceeded the Northmen or Normans, who conquered Normandy (about 900), and eventually England (1066). They were also called Sea-kings or Vikings. They settled Iceland and Greenland, and it is thought, the northern regions of America, about the 9th century. A "National Scandinavian Society" has been formed at Stockholm. See Sweden. Dec., 1864.

SCARLET, or kermes dye, was known in the East in the earliest ages; cochineal dye, 1518. Kepler, a Fleming, established the first dye-house for scarlet in England, at Bow, 1643. The art of dyeing red was improved by Brewer, 1667.—Beckmann.

SCÉPTRE, a more ancient emblem of royalty than the crown. In the earlier ages the sceptres of kings were long walking-staves; afterward carved and made shorter. Tarquin the Elder was the first who assumed the sceptre among the Romans, about 468 B.C. The French sceptre of the first race of kings was a golden rod, A.D. 481.—Le Gendre.

SCHELDT TOLL was imposed by the treaty of Munster (or Westphalia), 1648. The toll was abolished for a compensation. The House of Commons voted £175,650 for the British portion on March 9, 1864. The Scheldt was declared free on Aug. 3, with much rejoicing at Antwerp and Brussels.

SCITHEALLIEN, a mountain in Perthshire, where Dr. Neville Maskelyne, the astronomer royal, made his observation with a plumb-line in 1774, from which Hutton calculated that the density of the earth is five times greater than water.

SCHELESWIG. See Holstein, Denmark, and Gastein.

SCHOOLS. Charity schools were introduced in London to prevent the seduction of the infant poor into Roman Catholic seminaries, 3 James II., 1687.—Rapin. Charter schools were instituted in Ireland, 1733.—Scully. In England there were, in 1847, 13,642 schools (exclusively of Sunday-schools) for the education of the poor; and the number of children was 998,431. The parochial and endowed schools of Scotland were (exclusively of Sunday-schools) 4836, and the number of children 181,467. The schools in Wales were 841, and the number of children 38,164; in Ireland, 13,327 schools, and 774,000 children. In 1851 there were 2310 schools in connection with the Education Committee actually inspected in England and Scotland. They included: 1713 Church of England schools in England and Wales; 282 Protestant Dissenting schools in England and Wales; 98 Roman Catholic schools in Great Britain; and 217 Presbyterian schools in Scotland, whereof 91 were of the Free Church; the whole affording accommodation for 299,425 scholars. See Education, Design, etc.

SCILLY ISLES (the Cassiterides or Tin Islands). They held commerce with the Phœnicians; and are mentioned by Strabo as being ten in number. A memorable shipwreck of the British squadron under Sir Cloudesley Shovel occurred here. This brave admiral, returning from an expedition against Toulon, mistook these rocks for land, and struck upon them. His ship, the Association, in which were his lady, two sons, many persons of rank, and 800 brave men, went instantly to the bottom. The Eagle, Captain Hancock, and the Romney and Firebrand, were also lost. The rest of the fleet escaped. Oct. 22, 1707. Sir Cloudesley's body, being found, was conveyed to London, and buried in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory.

SCIO MASSACRE. See Chios.

SCONE (near Perth). The Scotch coronation chair was brought from Scone to Westminster Abbey by Edward I. in 1296.

SCOTLAND. (See Caledonia.) A kingdom till the death of Queen Elizabeth, when James VI. of Scotland, as the most immediate heir, was called to the throne of England. Each country had a separate Parliament till 1707, when both kingdoms were united under the general name of Great Britain. See England.

KINGS OF SCOTLAND.

BEFORE CHRIST.

[The early accounts of the kings are by many historians deemed in a great measure fabulous. The series of kings is carried as far back as Alexander the Great.]

330. Fergus I.: ruled 25 years; lost in the Irish Sea.*

AFTER CHRIST.

357. Eugenius I., son of Fincormachus; slain in battle by Maximus, the Roman general, and the confederate Picts.

* * With this battle ended the kingdom of the Scots, after having existed from the coronation of Fergus I., a period of 706 years; the royal family fled to Denmark.—Boece; Buchanan.
 [Interregnum of 27 years.]

404. Fergus II.† (I.), great-grandson of Eugenius and 40th king; slain in battle with the Romans.

420. Eugenius II., or Evens, son of Fergus; reigned 31 years.

451. Dongardus or Domangard, brother of Eugenius; defeated and drowned.

457. Constantine I., brother of Dongardus; assassinated by Dugal, a noble whose daughter he had dishonored.

479. Congallus I., nephew; just and prudent.

501. Goranus, brother; murdered.—Boece. Died while Donald of Athol was conspiring to take his life.

—Scott.

535. Eugenius III., nephew—"none excelled him in justice."

558. Congallus II., brother.

569. Kinnatellus, brother; resigned for

570. Aidanus or Aidan, son of Goranus.

605. Kenneth, son of Congallus II.

606. Eugenius IV., son of Aidanus.

621. Ferchard or Ferquhard I., son; confined for misdeeds to his palace, where he laid violent hands upon himself.—Scott.

632. Donald IV., brother; drowned in Loch Tay.

646. Ferchard II., son of Ferchard I.—"most execrable."

664. Malduinus, son of Donald IV.; strangled by his wife for his supposed infidelity, for which crime she was immediately afterward burnt.

684. Eugenius V., brother.

688. Eugenius VI., son of Ferchard II.

698. Amberkehtus, nephew; fell by an arrow from an unknown hand.

699. Eugenius VII., brother; some ruffians, designing the king's murder, entered his chamber, and he being absent, stabbed his queen, Spontana, to death.—Scott.

715. Mordachus, son of Amberkehtus.

730. Etninus, son of Eugenius VII.

761. Eugenius VIII., son of Mordachus; sensual and tyrannous; put to death by his nobles.

764. Fergus III., son of Etninus; killed by his jealous queen, who afterward stabbed herself to escape a death of torture.

767. Solvathius, son of Eugenius VIII.

787. Achais; a just and wise prince.

819. Congallus III.; a peaceful reign.

824. Dongal or Dougal, son of Solvathius; drowned.

* Fergus, a brave prince, came from Ireland with an army of Scots, and was chosen king. Having defeated the Britons and slain their King Collus, the kingdom of the Scots was entailed upon his posterity forever. He went to Ireland, and, having settled his affairs there, was drowned on his return, launching from the shore, near the harbor, called Gerrick-Fergus to this day, 3609 A.M.—Anderson.
 † Some call this Fergus the first king, and suppose that either the foregoing kings were fabulous, or that they were only chiefs or generals of armies, having no royal authority. The controversy thus arising I leave to be decided by the antiquaries, and must follow the received histories of Scotland.—Anderson.

531. Alpine, son of Achaius; beheaded by the Picts.
 534. Kenneth II., son of Alpine, and surnamed Mac Alpine; defeated the Picts, slew their king, and united them and the Scots under one sceptre, and became the first sole monarch of all Scotland, 843.
 554. Donald V., brother; dethroned; committed suicide.
 555. Constantine II., son of Kenneth II.; taken in battle by the Danes and beheaded.
 574. Eth or Ethus, surnamed Lightfoot; died of grief in prison, having been thrown into confinement for his sensuality and crimes.
 576. Gregory the Great; brave and just.
 593. Donald VI., son of Constantine II.; excellent.
 904. Constantine III., son of Ethus; became a monk, and resigned in favor of 944. Malcolm I., son of Donald VI.; murdered.
 953. Indulfus or Gondulph; killed by the Danes in an ambuscade.
 961. Duff or Duffus, son of Malcolm; murdered by Donald, the governor of Forres Castle.
 965. Cullen or Culuens, son of Indulfus; avenged the murder of his predecessor; assassinated at Methven by a thane, whose daughter he had dishonored.
 970. Kenneth III., brother of Duffus; murdered by Fenella, the lady of Fettercarrin.
 994. Constantine IV., son of Cullen; slain.
 995. Grinus or the Grim, son of Duffus; routed and slain in battle by Malcolm, the rightful heir to the crown, who succeeded.
 1003. Malcolm II., son of Kenneth III.; assassinated on his way to Glamis; the assassins, in their flight crossing a frozen lake, were drowned.
 1003. Duncan I., grandson; assassinated by his cousin.
 1003. Macbeth, usurper; slain by Macduff, the thane of Fife.
 * * * Historians so differ up to this reign, in the number of the kings, the dates of succession, and the circumstances narrated, that no account can be taken as precisely accurate.
 1057. Malcolm III. (Canmore), son of Duncan; killed while besieging Alnwick Castle.
 1093. Donald VII. (Donald Bane), brother of the usurper; fled to the Hebrides.
 1094. Duncan II., natural son of Malcolm; murdered. Donald Bane again; deposed.
 1098. Edgar, son of Malcolm (Henry I. of England married his sister Maud).
 1107. Alexander the Pious, brother.
 1124. David I., brother; married Matilda, daughter of Waltheof, earl of Northumberland.
 1153. Malcolm IV., grandson.
 1165. William, surnamed the Lion; brother.
 1214. Alexander II., son; married Joan, daughter of John, king of England.
 1249. Alexander III.; married Margaret, daughter of Henry III. of England; dislocated his neck when hunting near Kinghorn.
 1285. Margaret, the "Maiden of Norway," granddaughter of Alexander, "recognized by the States of Scotland, though a female, an infant, and a foreigner," died on her passage to Scotland.
 A competition for the vacant throne; Edward I. of England decides in favor of 1292. John Baliol, who afterward surrendered his crown and died in exile.
 [Interregnum.]
 1306. Robert (Bruce) I., a great prince.
 1329. David (Bruce) II., son; Edward Baliol disputed the throne with him.
 1332. Edward Baliol, son of John; resigned.
 1342. David II. again; eleven years a prisoner in England.
 1371. Robert (Stuart) II., nephew.
 1390. Robert III., son (whose name was John).
 1406. James I., second son; imprisoned eighteen years in England; set at liberty in 1423; conspired against and murdered at Perth, Feb. 20, 1437.—Banks.
 1437. James II., son; killed at the siege of Roxburgh Castle by a cannon bursting, Aug. 3, 1460.
 1460. James III., son; killed in a revolt of his subjects at Bannockburn field, June 11, 1488.
 1488. James IV., son; married Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII. of England; killed at the battle of Flodden.
 1513. James V., son; succeeded when little more than a year old; a sovereign possessing many virtues.
 1542. Mary, daughter; born Dec. 8, 1542, succeeded in her infancy. See Annals, above.
 1567. James VI., son. Succeeded to the throne of England, and the kingdoms became united, 1603. (See England.)
 SCREW was known to the Greeks. The pumping-screw of Archimedes, or screw-cylinder for raising water, invented 236 B.C., is still in use. It is stated that with the assistance of the screw, one man can press down or raise up as much as 150 men can do without it.—The SCREW-PROPELLER consists of two or more twisted blades, like the vanes of a windmill, set on an axis, running parallel with the keel of a vessel, and revolving beneath the water at the stern. It is driven by a steam-engine. The principle is as old as the windmill. It was shown by Hooke in 1681, and since by Du Quet, Bernoulli, and others. Patents for propellers were taken out by Joseph Bramah in 1784; by Wm. Lyttelton in 1794; and by Edward Shorter in 1799. But these led to no useful result. However, in 1836, patents were obtained by F. P. Smith and Captain John Ericsson, and to them the successful application of the screw-propeller must be attributed. The first vessels with the screw were the Archimedes, built on the Thames in 1836, and the Rattler, built in the United States (1814), and tried in England in 1845. Double screw-propellers are now employed.
 SCULLABOGUE. See Massacres, 1793.
 SCULPTURE is said to have begun with the Egyptians. Pausanias refers the nearest approach to perfection in the art to 560 B.C. Bezaleel and Aholiab built the tabernacle in the wilderness, and made all the vessels and ornaments, 1491 B.C., and their skill is recorded as the gift of God.—Ecod. xxxi., 3. Dipenus and Scyllis, statuarii at Crete, established a school at Sicyon. Pliny speaks of them as being the first who sculptured marble and polished it; all statues before their time being of wood, 563 B.C. Alexander gave Lysippus the sole right of making his statues, 326 B.C. He left no less than 600 pieces, some of which were so highly valued in the age of Augustus that they sold for their weight in gold. Sculpture did not flourish among the Romans; and in the Middle Ages had much degraded. With the revival of painting, it revived also; and Donato di Bardi, born at Florence, A.D. 1383, was the earliest professor among the moderns. An institute of sculptors was established in 1861.
 EMINENT SCULPTORS.
 Pheidon flourished B.C. 869. Bacon 1740-1799
 Myron 480 Canova 1757-1822
 Phidias 442 Flaxman 1754-1726

 Sir I. Newton. died 1762 J. Gibson 1791-1866
 Among the more celebrated American sculptors are Paul Akers, Crawford, Hiram Powers, H. K. Brown, Greenough, Miss Harriet Hosmer, Miss Margaret Foley, Miss Emma Stebbins, and Miss Lander.
 SCUTAGE or ESCUAGE. The service of the shield (scutum) is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord; and is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. The first tax levied in England to pay an army, 5 Hen. II., 1159.—Covel.
 SCUTARI, Asiatic Turkey, opposite Constantinople, of which it is a suburb. It was anciently called Chrysopolis, golden city, in consequence, it is said, of the Persians having established a treasury here when they attempted the conquest of Greece. Near here Constantine finally defeated Licinius, 324. The hospital was occupied by the sick and wounded of the Anglo-French army in 1854-5, whose sufferings were much alleviated by the kind exertions of Miss Florence Nightingale and a band of nurses under her, aided by a large fund of money (£15,000) subscribed by the public and placed in the care of the proprietors of the Times newspaper. See Times.
 SCYTHIA, situate in the most northern parts of Europe and Asia. The boundaries were unknown to the ancients. The Scythians made several irruptions upon the more southern provinces of Asia, especially 624 B.C., when they remained in possession of Asia Minor for twenty-eight years, and at different periods extended their conquests in Europe, penetrating as far as Egypt. See Tartary.

SEA-FIGHTS. See Naval Battles.

SEALS OF SIGNETS. Engraved gems were used as such by the Egyptians, Jews, Assyrians, and Greeks (see Exod. xxviii., 14). The Romans in the time of the Tarquins (about 600 B.C.) had gemmed rings. They sealed rooms, granaries, bags of money, etc. The German emperor Frederick I. (A.D. 1152) had seals of gold, silver, and tin. Impressions of the seals of Saxon kings are extant; and the English great seal is attributed to Edward the Confessor (1041-66). "A seal with armorial bearings before the 11th century is certainly false."—Fosbrooke. The most ancient English seal with arms on it is said to be that of Richard I. or John. White and colored waxes were used. Our present sealing-wax, containing shellac, did not come into general use in Germany and England until about 1556. Red wafers for seals came into use about 1624, but were not used for public seals till the 18th century.

SEA, SOVEREIGNTY OF THE. The claim of England to rule the British seas is of very ancient date. Arthur is said to have assumed it, and Alfred afterward supported this right. It was maintained by Selden, and measures were taken by government in consequence, 8 Chas I., 1633. The Dutch, after the death of Charles I., made some attempts to obtain it, but were roughly treated by Blake and other admirals. Russia and other powers of the North aimed to avoid sequestration, 1780; again, 1800. See Armed Neutrality and Flag.

SEBASTIAN, Sr. (N. Spain), was taken by the French, under the Duke of Berwick, in 1719. It was besieged by the British and Allied army under Wellington. After a most heavy bombardment, by which the whole town was laid nearly in ruins, it was stormed by General Graham (afterward Lord Lynedoch), and taken Aug. 31, 1813. The loss sustained by the besiegers, though not considerable, was chiefly British.—On May 5, 1836, the fortified works, through the centre of which ran the high road to Hernani, were carried by the English auxiliary legion under General Evans, after very hard fighting. The British naval squadron off St. Sebastian, under Lord John Hay, lent very opportune aid to the victors in this contest.—A vigorous assault was made on the lines of General De Lacy Evans at St. Sebastian by the Carlists, Oct. 1, 1836. Both parties fought with bravery. The Carlists were repulsed, after suffering severely. The loss of the Anglo-Spanish force was 376 men and 37 officers killed and wounded. General De Lacy Evans was slightly wounded.

SEBASTOPOL or SEVASTOPOL, a town and once a naval arsenal at the S.W. point of the Crimea, formerly the little village of Aktiar. The buildings were commenced in 1784 by Catharine II. after the conquest of the country. The town is built in the shape of an amphitheatre on the rise of a large hill flattened on its summit, according to a plan laid down before 1794, which has been since adhered to. The fortifications and harbor were constructed by an English engineer, Colonel Upton, and his sons, since 1830. The population in 1834 was 15,000. This place will be memorable hereafter for its eleven months' siege by the English and French in 1854 and 1855. Immediately after the battle of the Alma, Sept. 20, 1854, the Allied army marched to Sebastopol, and took up its position on the plateau between it and Balaklava, and the grand attack and bombardment commenced Oct. 17, 1854, without success.* After many sanguinary encounters by day and night, and repeated bombardments, a grand assault was made on Sept. 8, 1855, upon the Malakhoff tower and the Redans, the most important fortifications to the south of the town. The French succeeded in capturing and retaining the Malakhoff. The attacks of the English upon the great Redan, and of the French upon the little Redan, were successful, but the assailants were compelled to retire, after a desperate struggle, with great loss of life. The French lost 1646 killed, of whom 5 were generals, 24 superior and 116 inferior officers, 4500 wounded, and 1400 missing. The English lost 385 killed (29 being commissioned and 42 non-commissioned officers), 1886 wounded, and 176 missing. In the night the Russians abandoned the southern and principal part of the town and fortifications, after destroying as much as possible, and crossed to the northern forts. They also sank or burnt the remainder of their fleet. The Allies found a very great amount of stores when they entered the place, July 9. The works were utterly destroyed in April, 1856, and the town was restored to the Russians in July. See Russo-Turkish War.

SECESSION ORDINANCES. The beginning of the Civil War in the United States dates from the secession from the Union of the Southern States in the spring of 1861. The Ordinances of Secession were passed by these states in the following order: By South Carolina, December 20, 1860; Florida, January 7, 1861; Mississippi, January 9, 1861; Alabama, January 11, 1861; Georgia, January 19, 1861; Louisiana, January 26, 1861; Texas, February 7, 1861; Virginia, April 17, 1861; Arkansas, May 6, 1861; Tennessee, May 6, 1861; North Carolina, May 20, 1861. At the close of a four years' war, in which the armies of the seceded states (which had united in a corporate body styled "the Confederate States of America") were subdued by the National forces, these ordinances were annulled.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The earliest authentic record of a secretary of state is in the reign of Henry III., when John Maunsell is described as "Secretarius Noster," 1253.—Rymmer. Toward the close of Henry VIII.'s reign, two secretaries were appointed; and, upon the union with Scotland, Anne added a third, as secretary for Scotch affairs: this appointment was afterward laid aside; but in the reign of George III. the number was again increased to three, one for the American department. In 1782 this last was abolished by act of Parliament, and the secretaries were appointed for home, foreign, and colonial affairs. When there were but two secretaries, one held the portefeuille of the Northern department, comprising the Low Countries, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, Russia, etc.; the other, of the Southern department, including France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Turkey; the affairs of Ireland belonging to the elder secretary; both secretaries then equally directed the home affairs.—Beaton. There are now five secretaries—home, foreign, colonial, war, and India (appointed in 1858), all in the cabinet. See Administrations.

SECTS, RELIGIOUS. See under Worship, and their respective titles.

SECULAR GAMES (Ludi Seculares). Very ancient Roman games, celebrated on important occasions. Horace wrote his "Carmen Seculare" for their celebration, in the reign of the Emperor Augustus (47). This took place again in the reign of Claudius (47), of Domitian (88), and for the last time, of Philip (248), believed to be 2000 years after the foundation of the city.

SEDAN CHAIRS, so called from Sedan, on the Meuse, in France. The first seen in England was in 1481. One was used in the reign of James I. by the Duke of Buckingham, to the great indignation of the people, who exclaimed that he was employing his fellow-creatures to do the service of beasts. Sedan chairs came into fashion in London in 1634, when Sir Francis Duncomb obtained the sole privilege to use, let, and hire a number of such covered chairs for fourteen years. They came into very general use in 1649.

SEDGEMOOR (Somersetshire), where the Duke of Monmouth (the natural son of Charles II. by Lucy Walters), who had risen in rebellion on the accession of James II., was completely defeated by the royal army, July 6, 1685. The duke was made a prisoner, in the disguise of a peasant, at the bottom of a ditch, overcome with hunger, fatigue, and anxiety. He was beheaded on July 15 following.

SEDITION. Seditious acts were passed in the reign of George III. The proclamation against seditious writings was published May, 1792. The celebrated Seditious Bill passed Dec., 1795. Seditious societies were suppressed by act, June, 1797. The Seditious Meetings and Assemblies' Bill passed March 31, 1817. In Ireland, during the Roman Catholic and Repeal agitation, acts or proclamations against sedition and seditious meetings were published from time to time until 1848.

SEIDLICE (Poland), where a battle was fought April 10, 1831, between the Poles and Russians. The Poles obtained the victory after a bloody conflict, taking 4000 prisoners and several pieces of cannon. The killed and wounded on both sides amounted to many thousands. This success was soon followed by fatal reverses.

* In consequence of the sufferings and disasters of the army in the winter of 1854-5, the Sebastopol Inquiry Committee was appointed, and the Aberdeen administration resigned, Feb., 1855. The committee sat from March 1 to May 15, Lord Aberdeen being the last person examined. Its report was presented June 18. Mr. Roebuck, the chairman, moved on July 17 that the House should pass a vote of severe reprobation on every member of the Aberdeen administration. On July 19 his motion was lost by a majority of 107 against it. In 1855 the government sent Sir John M'Neill and Col. Tulloch to inquire into the state of the armies in the Crimea. Their report was presented to Parliament in Feb., 1856. A commission was appointed to consider the statements in the report (which were very unfavorable to many officers), but the substance of the report was unshaken.

SEISMOMETRY (from seismos, Greek for earthquake), an apparatus for measuring the violence of the shocks. One is described by Mr. Robert Mallet in his work on earthquakes, published in 1858.

SELENIUM, a grayish-white metal discovered in the stone riolite by Berzelius in 1817.

SELEUCIA, a part of Syria, was made the capital of the Syrian monarchy by its builder, Seleucus Nicator, 312 B.C. On the fall of the Seleucide it became a republic, 65 B.C. It was taken by Trajan, A.D. 116; was several times given up and retaken; was subjugated by the Saracens, and united with Ctesiphon, 636.

SELEUCIDES, ERA OF THE, dates from the reign of Seleucus Nicator. It was used in Syria for many years, and frequently by the Jews until the 15th century, and by some Arabians. Opinions vary as to its commencement. To reduce it to our era (supposing it to begin Sept. 1, 312 B.C.), subtract 311 years 4 months.

SELF-DENYING ORDINANCE, which ordained that no member of Parliament should hold any civil or military office or command conferred by either or both of the houses, or by authority derived from them, was passed April 3, 1645, by the influence of Cromwell, who thus removed the Earl of Essex and other Presbyterians out of his way. A somewhat similar ordinance was adopted by the Parliament at Melbourne, in Australia, in 1858.

SELLASIA (Laconia). Here the Spartans under Cleomenes were defeated by Antigonus Doson and the Achæans, 221 B.C.

SEMINCAS (Castile, Spain). Here, in 938, the Moors were totally defeated by Ramirez II., king of Leon and Asturias. It is said that more than 80,000 of the infidels were slain.

SEMINOLE WAR. Toward the close of 1835, the Seminole Indians in Florida, guided by their head sachem, Micanopy, and led by their principal chief, Osceola, commenced a most distressing warfare upon the frontier settlements of Florida and Georgia. The cause of the outbreak was an attempt, by the Federal government, to remove them to the wilderness beyond the Mississippi. Provision had been made for their peaceable removal. The Indians refused to go, and United States troops were sent into Florida, to remove them by force, if necessary. For almost seven years the Seminoles, in their swamps and everglades, resisted the large number of United States troops who were sent there under the most eminent army officers. At one time the Creeks, who were about to be removed from Georgia and Alabama, aided their brethren in Florida by attacking white settlers within their domain. This war cost the United States many valuable lives and millions of treasure. See Battles.

SEMPACH (Switzerland). Here was fought a battle between the Swiss and Leopold, duke of Austria, July 9, 1386. The Swiss gained a great victory, and the duke was slain. The liberty of their country was established, and the day is still commemorated at Sempach.

SEMPER EADEM ("Always the same"), one of the mottoes of Queen Elizabeth, was adopted by Queen Anne Dec. 13, 1702. Many suspected this motto to denote her Jacobitism. It ceased to be used after her reign.

SENESCHAL, a high officer of the French royal household. In the reign of Philip I., 1059, the office was esteemed the highest place of trust.

SENONES, a Celtic tribe, invaded Lower Italy, and were defeated by Camillus, 367 B.C. They defeated Metellus the consul at Arretium, 284, but were almost exterminated by Dolabella, 283.

SENTINUM (Central Italy). The site of a great victory of the Romans over the Samnites and Gauls, whose general, Gellius Egnatius, was slain, 295 B.C.

SEPOYS (a corruption of Sipahi, Hindostanee for a soldier), the term applied to the native troops in India. Under able generals they greatly aided in establishing British rule in India. For their mutinies, see Madras, 1807, and India, 1857.

SEPTEMBER, the seventh Roman month reckoned from March (from septimus, seventh). It became the ninth month when January and February were added to the year by Numa, 713 B.C. The Roman senate would have given this month the name of Tiberius, but the emperor opposed it; the Emperor Domitian gave it his own name, Germanicus; the senate under Antoninus Pius gave it that of Antoninus; Commodus gave it his surname, Hercules; and the Emperor Tacitus his own name, Tacitus.

SEPTEMBRIZERS. In the French Revolution a dreadful massacre took place in Paris, Sept. 2-5, 1792. The prisons were broken open, and the prisoners butchered, among them an ex-bishop, and nearly 100 non-juring priests. Some accounts state the number of persons slain at 1200, others at 4000. The agents in this slaughter were named Septembrizers.

SEPTENNIAL PARLIAMENTS. Edward I. held but one Parliament every two years. In the 4th Edward III. it was enacted "that a Parliament should be holden every year once." This continued to be the statute-law till 16th Charles I., 1641, when an act was passed for holding Parliaments once in three years at least; repealed in 1664. The Triennial Act was re-enacted in 1694. Triennial Parliaments thence continued till the second year of George I.'s reign, May, 1716, when, in consequence of the allegation that "a popish faction were designing to renew the rebellion in this kingdom, and the report of an invasion from abroad, it was enacted that the then Parliament should continue for seven years." This Septennial Act has ever since been in force. See Parliaments. Several unsuccessful motions have been made for its repeal; one in May, 1837.

SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY in 1866, Jan. 28; in 1867, Feb. 17; in 1868, Feb. 9. See Quadragesima Sunday and Week.

SEPTUAGINT VERSION OF THE BIBLE, made from Hebrew into Greek, 277 B.C. Seventy-two translators were shut up in thirty-six cells; each pair translated the whole; and on subsequent comparison, the thirty-six copies did not vary by a word or letter.—Justin Martyr. St. Jerome affirms that they translated only the Pentateuch; but St. Justin and others say they translated the whole. Ptolemy Philadelphus gave the Jews about a million sterling for a copy of the Testament, and seventy translators half a million more for the translation.—Josephus. Finished in seventy-two days.—Hewlett. The above statements are merely traditional. See Bible.

SERAPIS, TEMPLE OF (near Naples), was exhumed in 1750. The investigations of Lyell and Babbage into the history of the sinking and burying of this temple are of great geological interest.

SERFS. See Slavery (note), and Russia, 1861, 1863.

SERINGAPATAM (S. India). See Mysore. The battle of Seringapatam, called also the battle of Arikera, in which the British defeated Tippoo Sahib, was fought May 15, 1791. The redoubts were stormed, and Tippoo was reduced by Lord Cornwallis, Feb. 6, 1792. After this capture preliminaries of peace were signed, and Tippoo agreed to cede one half of Mysore, and to pay 33,000,000 of rupees (about £3,300,000 sterling) to England, and to give up to Lord Cornwallis his two eldest sons as hostages.—In a new war, the Madras army, under General Harris, arrived before Seringapatam April 5, 1799; it was joined by the Bombay army April 14; and the place was stormed and carried by Major General Baird, May 4, same year. In this engagement Tippoo was killed.

SERVIA, a hereditary principality nominally subject to Turkey, south of Hungary. The Servians are of Slavonic origin. They embraced Christianity about 640. The Emperor Manuel subjected them in 1150; but they recovered their independence in 1180, and were ruled by princes, generally named Stephen, till their country was finally subdued by the Sultan Mohammed II. in 1459. Population in 1854, 985,000.

SESSION COURTS in England were appointed to be held quarterly in 1413, and the times for holding them regulated in 1831. See Quarter Sessions and Court of Session. The kirk-session in Scotland consists of the ministers and elders of each parish. They superintend religious worship and discipline, dispense the money collected for the poor, etc.

SESTUS, on the Thracian Chersonesus. See Hellespont. Near Sestus was the western end of Xerxes' bridge across the Hellespont, 480 B.C. Sestus was retaken from the Persians by the Athenians 478 B.C., and held by them till 404, giving them the command of the trade of the Euxine.

SETTLEMENT, Act or, for securing the succession to the British throne, to the exclusion of Roman Catholics, was passed in 1689. This name is also given to the statute by which the crown, after the demise of William III. and Queen Anne, without issue, was limited to Sophia, electress of Hanover, granddaughter of James I., and to heirs being Protestants, 1702. The Irish Act of Settlement, passed in 1662, was repealed in 1689. See Hanover.

SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA, to the angels (ministers) of which the Apostle John was commanded to write the epistles contained in the 2d and 3d chapters of his Revelation, viz., Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, 96.

1. Ephesus (which see). Paul founded the church here, 57. In 59 he was in great danger from a tumult created by Demetrius; to the elders of this church he delivered his warning address, 60 (Acts xix., xx.). Ephesus was in a ruinous state even in the time of Justinian (527), and still remains so.
2. Smyrna. Now an important commercial city and sea-port of Ionia. Polycarp, its first bishop, suffered martyrdom, 175.
3. Pergamos. Capital of the kingdom of the same name, founded by Philetærus, whom Lysimachus, one of Alexander's generals, had made governor, 283 B.C. He was succeeded by Eumenes I., 263; Attalus (who took the title of king), 241; Eumenes II. (who collected a great library), 197; Attalus II., 159; Attalus III., 138. He bequeathed his kingdom to the Romans, 133. It revolted, was subdued, and made the Roman province, Asia. Pergamos is still an important place, called Bergamo. Parchment is said to have been invented here.
4. Thyatira. Now a mean town of 2000 houses, called Ak-hissar, "White Castle."
5. Sardis. Formerly the capital of Lydia, the kingdom of Croesus (560 B.C.), is now a miserable village named Sart.
6. Philadelphia was built by Attalus (III.) Philadelphus, king of Pergamos (159-138 B.C.); was taken by Bajazet I., A.D. 1390. It is now called Allah Shehr, "The city of God," and is a miserable town of 3000 houses.
7. Laodicea. In Phrygia, near Lydia, has suffered much from earthquakes. It is now a deserted place called Eske-hissar, "The old castle."

SEVEN YEARS' WAR, the conflict maintained by Frederick II. of Prussia against Austria, Russia, and France, from 1756 to 1763. See Battles. He gained Silesia.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST. See article Sabbatarians, etc.

SEVERUS'S WALL. See Roman Walls.

SEVILLE (S.W. Spain), the Hispanis of the Phenicians, and the Julia of the Romans, was the capital until Philip II. finally established his court at Madrid, 1563. It opened its gates to the Saracens in 712, and was taken from them by the Christians in 1247, after an obstinate siege. The peace of Seville between England, France, and Spain, and also a defensive alliance with which Holland acceded, signed Nov. 9, 1729. In the Peninsular War, Seville surrendered to the French, Feb. 1, 1810; and was taken by assault by the British and Spaniards, after the battle of Salamanca, Aug. 27, 1812.

SEVRES. See Porcelain.

SEWERS. An act was passed in 1847 enforcing the conveyance of the sewerage of houses into the public sewers. The Commissioners of Sewers in London were superseded by the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, nominated by the government. They abolished the large brick sewers, introducing pipe drains, and turned the contents of 30,000 cesspools into the River Thames. The necessity for purifying the river led to the construction of a new system of drainage, under the superintendence of the Metropolitan Board of Works (which see). The main drainage (the plan of Mr. J. W. Bazalgette) consists of the Northern High-level, Middle-level, and Low-level, and Southern High-level and Low-level. On March 14, 1865, the works were said to be completed, except the Low-level sewer on the north side, which was waiting for the completion of the Thames embankment, etc. On April 4, 1865, the Prince of Wales started the engines which commenced lifting the waters of the southern outfall, at Crossness Point, near Erith.* Estimated total cost, £4,000,000. See Carbolic Acid.

SEWING MACHINE. First invented by Elias Howe, of Cambridgeport, Massachusetts (born 1819, died 1867). His first invention was given to the public in 1847, but he could not find any one willing to believe that it was a success. He carried his machine to England with no better result. At last the tide turned in his favor, and in 1854 his rights were generally acknowledged. Many other machines have been invented, but they are all more or less indebted to Howe for the idea, particularly the needle. These machines are adapted for any fabric, and the amount of work which can be done with them is almost incredible.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY. See Quadragesima Sunday and Week.

SEXTANT, an instrument used like a quadrant, containing sixty degrees, or the sixth part of a circle, invented by Tycho Brahe, at Augsburg, in 1550.—Vincent's Astron. The Arabian astronomers are said to have had a sextant of fifty-nine feet nine inches radius, about 995.—Ashe.

SHAKERS, a religious society of celibates in the United States, which originated in England at the middle of the last century. Ann Lee, wife of a blacksmith, professed to have had a revelation that marriage and its rites were impure, and that she was the female manifestation of Christ in the world (Jesus of Nazareth being the male), the Deity being composed of the two sexes, and became incarnate in the form of man and woman at different periods. They live in communities, the men and women separate, are remarkable for the purity of their lives, cleanliness, industry, and thrift. Ann Lee came to the United States, with a few followers, just as the Revolution was kindling, and established the "Millennial Church" at Niskayuna, a few miles from Albany, where her remains lie buried. Her followers almost worship her, and call her Mother Ann. They have 18 societies in the United States, with an aggregate membership of about 4000.

SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS. William Shakespeare was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, April 23, 1564, and died on his birthday, 1616. The first collected edition of his works is dated 1623 [a fac-simile of this edition was published 1862-5]; the second, 1632;† the third, 1644; the fourth, 1655—all in folio. Critical editions of the text, edited by Alexander Dyce, were published in 1857 and 1864-6; Boydel's edition, with numerous plates, was published in nine vols., folio, in 1802. Ayscough's Index to Shakespeare was published in 1790; Twiss's Index, in 1806; and Mrs. Cowden Clarke's Concordance, 1847. See Ireland's Forgeries.

SHAKESPEARE'S GLOBE THEATRE, London, was situated near the spot still called Bankside, at the commencement of the 17th century. Shakespeare was himself part proprietor; here some of his plays were first produced, and he himself first performed

* The utilization of disinfected sewage as manure is now much advocated. Great success is said to have been attained at Edinburg, Carlisle, Croydon, and other places. Much hot controversy has arisen respecting this disposal of the London sewage. On Nov. 15, 1864, the Metropolitan Board accepted a contract for its disposal from Messrs. Hope and Napier. The Sewage Utilization Act and the Metropolitan Sewage and Essex Reclamation Acts were passed in June, 1865.

† In 1849, Mr. J. P. Collier, editor of an edition of Shakespeare, purchased a copy of the second folio, on which was written in pencil a number of corrections, supposed to have been made soon after the time of publication. At first he thought little of these marks; but in 1853 he was induced to publish "Notes and Emendations" derived from this volume. Much controversy ensued as to the authenticity of these corrections; and in 1859 it was generally agreed that they were of modern date, and consequently of little value.

in them. It was of a horse-shoe form, partly covered with thatch. After it was licensed, the thatch took fire, through the negligent discharge of a piece of ordnance, and the whole building was consumed. The house was crowded to excess, to witness the play of Henry VIII., but the audience escaped unhurt. This was the end of Shakspeare's connection with this theatre: it was rebuilt the following year, much in the same style, about 1603.

SHAKSPEARE'S JUBILEE, and that projected by David Garrick, was celebrated at Stratford-on-Avon, Sept. 6-8, 1769; a similar festival was kept April 23, 1836. The tercentenary of Shakspeare's birth was celebrated with many festivities at Stratford-on-Avon, April 23, 1865.

SHAKSPEARE'S NATIVE PLACE.—In 1847, a number of persons of distinction interested themselves for the preservation of the house in which Shakspeare was born, then actually set up for sale: they held a meeting at the Thatched-House Tavern, London, Aug. 26, in that year, and took measures for promoting a subscription set on foot by the Shakspearian Club at Stratford-upon-Avon, and a committee was appointed to carry out their object. In the end Shakspeare's house was sold at the Auction Mart in the city of London, where it was "knocked down" to the United Committee of London and Stratford for the large sum of £3000, Sept. 16, 1847. In 1856, a learned Oriental scholar, John Shakspeare, no relation of the poet, gave £2500 to purchase the adjoining house, that it might be pulled down, in order to insure the poet's house from the risk of fire.

SHAKSPEARE'S GARDEN was bought by subscription got up by Mr. J. O. Halliwell, in Oct. and Nov., 1861.

SHAMROCK. It is said that the shamrock used by the Irish was introduced by Patrick M'Alpine, since called St. Patrick, as a simile of the Trinity, 432. When he could not make them understand him by his words, he showed the Irish a stem of clover or trefoil, thereby exhibiting an ocular demonstration of the possibility of three uniting into one, and one into three.

SHAWLS are of Oriental origin. The manufacture was introduced by Barrow and Watson, in 1784, at Norwich. It began at Paisley and Edinburgh about 1805.—Ure.

SHEEP were exported from England to Spain, and, the breed being thereby improved, produced the fine Spanish wool, which proved detrimental to our woollen manufacture, 8 Edw. IV., 1467.—Anderson. Their exportation was prohibited on pain of fine and imprisonment, 1522. The number of sheep in the United Kingdom has been variously stated—by some at 43,000,000, by others at 49,000,000, and by more at 60,000,000, in 1840. The number must have progressively increased to the present time, particularly as the unrestricted importation since 1846 vastly swells the amount. In 1851 there were imported into England 201,859 sheep and lambs; in 1855, 184,482; in 1864, 496,243. In Aug. and Sept., 1862, many sheep in Wiltshire died of small-pox; and on Sept. 11, government declared its intention of enforcing the act for the prevention of contagion. The evil soon abated.

SHEERNESS (N. Kent), a royal dock-yard, planned and fortified by Charles II. in 1667, was taken by the Dutch, under De Ruyter, June 11, same year. Improved since 1815.

SHEFFIELD, on the River Sheaf, West Riding, Yorkshire; renowned for cutlery, plated goods, etc. Sheffield thwytles are mentioned by Chaucer, in the time of Edward III. Sheffield, in the time of the Conqueror, was obtained by Roger de Buisil, and has since been held by the Lovetots, Nevills, Talbotts, Howards.

SHERIFF. The office of sheriff is from shire-reve, governor of a shire or county. London had its sheriffs prior to William I.'s reign; but some say that sheriffs were first nominated for every county in England by William in 1079. According to other historians, Henry Cornhill and Richard Reynere were the first sheriffs of London, 1 Rich. I., 1189. The nomination of sheriffs according to the present mode took place in 1461.—Stow. Anciently sheriffs were hereditary in Scotland, and in some English counties, as Westmoreland. The sheriffs of Dublin (first called bailiffs) were appointed in 1308, and obtained the name of sheriff by an incorporation of Edward VI., 1543. Thirty-five sheriffs were fined, and eleven excused in one year, rather than serve the office for London, 1734. See Bailiffs.

SHERIFFMUIR. See Dumblane.

SHERMAN'S MARCH. This expression is used to designate the bold and important movement of Sherman's army, between 60,000 and 70,000 strong, from Atlanta to Savannah, and thence through the Carolinas to Goldsborough, Nov. 16, 1864—March 22, 1865. When Hood, after the loss of Atlanta, moved against Sherman's communications, the latter followed him with nearly his entire army, in order to protect the railroad until it should have served his purpose. After the Confederate reverse at Allatoona Pass, Hood evaded a battle, and Sherman gave up the chase, left the Department of the Mississippi virtually in Thomas's hands, and, on the 16th of Nov., having destroyed Atlanta and made a wreck of the railroad back to Dalton, marched eastward for the Atlantic coast. He destroyed the railroad as he moved, threatened both Macon and Augusta, thus forcing the Confederates to divide their forces, then passed both, and moved down the peninsula between the Ogeechee and Savannah Rivers. About the middle of Dec., Sherman stood before Savannah, then held by the Confederate General Hardee, almost completely invested the city, and captured Fort M'Allister (Dec. 13), thus gaining access to Dahlgren's fleet. Hardee evacuated Savannah Dec. 20, and the next day Sherman's army entered that city. Over 200 guns were captured with Savannah, and 35,000 bales of cotton were seized as a legitimate prize of war. Sherman transferred the forts and city to General Foster (Jan. 18, 1865), and began his march through the Carolinas. He threatened at once Augusta and Charleston, and passed both. On the 12th of Feb., Charleston, evacuated by Hardee, was occupied by the national forces. While Sherman was approaching Goldsborough, Hardee's forces, with the remnants of Hood's old army and detachments from other sources, were gathered together in North Carolina and placed under General Johnston. A portion of this force, under Hardee, contested Sherman's approach to Goldsborough (March 16) at Aversborough, and was defeated. Johnston's entire army was encountered at Bentonville (March 18), but Slocum held his ground until the right wing came to his support, and Johnston retreated on the 22d. Terry and Schofield in the mean time joined Sherman. After Lee's surrender (April 9), Johnston and Sherman entered into negotiations for surrender, which were disapproved by the government. Johnston's army was surrendered on the 26th of April. This was followed by the surrender of Dick Taylor (May 4-9), and of Kirby Smith (May 26). Jefferson Davis was captured May 10.

SHETLAND ISLES. See Orkneys.

SHIBBOLETH, the word by which the followers of Jephthah tested their opponents the Ephraimites, on passing the Jordan, about 1143 B.C.—Judges xii. The term is now applied to any party watchword or dogma.

SHITES, a Mohammedan sect, predominated in Persia. See Mohammedanism.

SHILLING. The value of the ancient Saxon coin of this name was fivepence, but it was reduced to fourpence about a century before the Conquest. After the Conquest the French solidus of twelvepence, in use among the Normans, was called shilling. The true English shilling was first coined, but in small quantity, 18 Hen. VII., 1563.—Dr. Kelly. In 1505.—Bishop Fleetwood. A peculiar shilling, value ninepence, but to be current at twelve, was struck in Ireland, 1560; and a large but very base coinage in England for the service of Ireland, 1598. Milled shillings were coined 13 Chas. II., 1662. See Coins.

SHIP-BUILDING. The first ship (probably a galley) was brought to Egypt from Greece by Danaus, 145 B.C.—Blair. The first double-decked ship was built by the Tyrians, 786 B.C.—Lenglet. The first double-decked one built in England was of 1000 tons burden, by order of Henry VIII., 1509; it was called the Great Harry, and cost £14,000.—Stow. Port-holes and other improvements were invented by Deschamps, a French builder at Brest, in the reign of Louis XII., about 1500. Ship-building was first treated as a science by Hoste, 1696. A 74-gun ship was put upon the stocks at Van Diemen's Land, to be sheathed with India-rubber, 1829. Iron is now greatly used in ship-building. See Navy and Steam Vessels.

SHIP-MONEY was first levied about 1007, to form a navy to oppose the Danes. This impost being illegally levied by Charles I. in 1634-6 led to the Revolution. He assessed London in seven ships, of 4000 tons, and 1500 men; Yorkshire in two ships, of 600 tons, or £12,000; Bristol in one ship, of 100 tons; Lancashire in one ship, of 400 tons. John Hampden refused to pay the tax, and was tried in the Exchequer in 1636. Ship-money was included in a redress of grievances in 1641. The five judges, who had given an opinion in its favor, were imprisoned. Hampden received a wound in a skirmish with Prince Rupert, and died June 24, 1643.

SHIPWRECKS. See Wrecks.

SHIRTS are said to have been first generally worn in the west of Europe early in the 8th century.—Du Fresnoy. Woolen shirts were commonly worn in England until about 1253, when linen, but of a coarse kind (fine coming at this period from abroad), was first manufactured in England by Flemish artisans.—Stow.

SHOEBURYNESSE (Essex). Some ground here, purchased in 1842 and 1855, and by an act of Parliament in 1862, was set apart as "ranges for the use and practice of artillery." See Cannon, note. Experiments with Mr. Whitworth's projectiles on the 12th Nov., 1862, showed their great improvement in form and material. Shells were sent through 5½ inch plate and the wood-work behind it. It was objected that they might not do this with ships in motion.

SHOES, among the Jews, were made of leather, linen, rush, or wood. Moons were worn as ornaments in their shoes by the Jewish women.—Isaiah iii., 13. Pythagoras would have his disciples wear shoes made of the bark of trees; probably that they might not wear what were made of the skins of animals, as they refrained from the use of every thing that had life. The Romans wore an ivory crescent on their shoes; and Caligula enriched his with precious stones. In England, about 1462, the people wore the beaks or points of their shoes so long that they encumbered themselves in walking, and were forced to tie them up to their knees; the fine gentlemen fastened theirs with chains of silver or silver gilt, and others with laces. This was prohibited, on the forfeiture of 20s., and on pain of being cursed by the clergy, 7 Edward IV., 1467. See Dress. Shoes, as at present worn, were introduced about 1633. The buckle was not used till 1668.—Stow; Mortimer. The buckle-makers petitioned against the use of shoe-strings in 1791.

SHORE, JANE, the mistress of Edward IV. and afterward of Lord Hastings. She did public penance in 1483, and was afterward confined in Ludgate; but upon the petition of Thomas Hymore, who agreed to marry her, King Richard III., in 1484, restored her to liberty; and Sir Thomas Moore mentions having seen her, which contradicts the story of her having perished by hunger.—Harleian MSS.

SHORT-HAND. See Stenography.

"SHORT-LIVED" ADMINISTRATION—that of William Pulteney, earl of Bath, Lord Carlisle, Lord

Winchelsea, and Lord Granville, existed from Feb. 10 to Feb. 12, 1746.

SHOT. In early times various missiles were shot from cannon. Bolts are mentioned in 1413; and in 1418 Henry V. ordered his clerk of the ordnance to get 7000 stones made at the quarries at Maidstone. Since then, chain, grape, and canister shot have been invented, as well as shells, all of which are described in Scoffers's work on "Projectile Weapons of War and Explosive Compounds," 1858. See Bombs and Cannon.

SHREWSBURY ADMINISTRATION. Charles, duke of Shrewsbury, was made lord treasurer July 30, 1714, two days before the death of Queen Anne; his patent was revoked soon after the accession of George I., Oct. 13 following, when the Earl of Halifax became first lord of the treasury. See Halifax. The office of lord treasurer has been executed by commissioners ever since.

SHREWSBURY (Shropshire) arose on the ruin of the Roman town Uriconium (see Wroxeter), and became one of the chief cities of the kingdom, having a mint till the reign of Henry III. Here Richard II. held a Parliament in 1397. On July 21 or 23, 1403, was fought the sanguinary battle of Shrewsbury between the army of Henry IV. and that of the nobles, led by Percy (sur-named Hotspur), son of the Earl of Northumberland, who had conspired to dethrone Henry. Henry was seen in the thickest of the fight, with his son, afterward Henry V. The death of Hotspur by an unknown hand gave the victory to the king.—Hume. Shrewsbury grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. in 1553, and endowed by Elizabeth.

SIAM,† a kingdom in India, bordering on the Burmese Empire. Siam was rediscovered by the Portuguese in 1511, and a trade established, in which the Dutch joined about 1604. A British ship arrived about 1613. In 1683, a Cephalaonian Greek, Constantine Phaulcon, became foreign minister of Siam, and opened a communication with France; Louis XIV. sent an embassy in 1685 with a view of converting the king, without effect. After several ineffectual attempts, Sir John Bowring succeeded in obtaining a treaty of friendship and commerce between England and Siam, which was signed April 30, 1855, and ratified April 5, 1856; and one with France followed in August. Two ambassadors from Siam arrived in Oct., 1857, and had an audience with the queen; they brought with them magnificent presents, which they delivered crawling, on Nov. 16. They were at Paris in June, 1861.

SIBERIA (N. Asia). In 1580 the conquest was begun by the Cossacks under Jermak Timofejew. In 1710 Peter the Great began to send prisoners thither.

SIBYLS. Sibyllæ were women believed to be inspired, who flourished in different parts of the world. Plato speaks of one, others of two, Pliny of three, Ælian of four, and Varro of ten. An Erythraean sibyl is said to have offered to Tarquin II. nine books containing the Roman destinies, demanding for them 300 pieces of gold. He denied her; whereupon the sibyl threw three of them into the fire, and asked the same price for the other six, which being still denied, she burnt three more, and again demanded the same sum for those that remained; when Tarquin, conferring with the pontiffs, was advised to buy them. Two magistrates were created to consult them on all occasions, 531 B.C.

SICILIAN VESPERS, the term given to the massacre of the French in Sicily, commenced at Palermo,

* It is asserted that while Caractacus was being led through Rome, his eyes were dazzled by the splendors that surrounded him. "Alas!" he cried, "how is it possible that a people possessed of such magnificence at home, could envy me a humble cottage in Britain?" The emperor was affected with the British hero's misfortunes, and won by his address. He ordered him to be unshackled upon the spot, and set at liberty with the rest of the captives.

† SIAMESE TWINS.—Two persons born about 1811, enjoying all the faculties and powers usually possessed by separate and distinct individuals, although united together by a short cartilaginous band at the pit of the stomach. They are named Chang and Eng, and were first discovered on the banks of the Siam River by an American, Mr. Robert Hunter, by whom they were taken to New York, where they were exhibited. Captain Coffin brought them to England. After having been exhibited for several years in Great Britain, they went to America, where they settled on a farm, and married sisters. In 1869 they were said to be living in North Carolina in declining health.

March 30, 1282. The French had become hateful to the Sicilians, and a conspiracy against Charles of Anjou was already ripe, when the following occurrence led to its development and accomplishment. On Easter Monday, the chief conspirators had assembled at Palermo; and while the French were engaged in festivities, a Sicilian bride happened to pass by with her train. She was observed by one Drochet, a Frenchman, who began to use her rudely, under pretense of searching for arms. A young Sicilian, exasperated at this affront, stabbed him with his own sword; and a tumult ensuing, 200 French were instantly murdered. The enraged populace now ran through the city, crying out, "Let the French die!" and, without distinction of rank, age, or sex, slaughtered all of that nation they could find, to the number of 8000. Even the churches proved no sanctuary, and the massacre became general throughout the island.

SICILY (anciently Trinacria, three-cornered). The early inhabitants were the Sicani, a people of Spain, and Etruscans, who came from Italy about 1294 B.C. A second colony, under Siculus, arrived eighty years before the destruction of Troy, 1284 B.C. The Phœnicians and Greeks settled some colonies here (735-582). It is supposed that Sicily was separated from Italy by an earthquake, and that the Straits of the Charybdis were thus formed. Its government has frequently been united with and separated from that of Naples (which see); the two now form part of the kingdom of Italy. Population of Sicily in 1856, 2,231,020.

SICYON, an ancient Grecian kingdom in the Peloponnesus, founded, it is said, about 2080 B.C. In 252 it became a republic, and joined the Achaean league formed by Aratus. It was the country of the sculptors Polyceletes (436) and Lysippus (233 B.C.).

SIDON (Syria), a city of Phœnicia, to the north of Tyre. It was conquered by Cyrus about 537 B.C., and surrendered to Alexander 332 B.C. See Phœnicia. The town was taken from the Pacha of Egypt by the troops of the sultan and of his allies, assisted by some ships of the British squadron, under Admiral the Hon. Sir Robert Stopford and Commodore Charles Napier, Sept. 27, 1840. See Syria and Turkey.

SIEGES, MEMORABLE. Azoth, which was besieged by Psammeticus the Powerful, held out for nineteen years.—Usher. It held out for twenty-nine years.—Herodotus. This was the longest siege recorded in the annals of antiquity. The siege of Troy was the most celebrated, and occupied ten years, 1184 B.C. The following are the most memorable sieges since the 12th century; for details, see separate articles.

SIERRA LEONE (W. Africa), discovered in 1460. In 1786, London swarmed with free negroes living in idleness and want; and 400 of them, with 60 whites, mostly women of bad character and in ill health, were sent out to Sierra Leone, at the charge of government, to form a settlement, Dec. 9, 1786. The settlement was attacked by the French, Sept., 1794; by the natives, Feb., 1802. Sir Charles MacCarthy, the governor of the colony, murdered by the Ashantee chief, Jan. 21, 1824. 16 & 17 Vict., c. 86, relates to the government, etc., of the colony. It is now a bishopric. See Ashantees.

SIGNALS are alluded to by Polybius. Elizabeth had instructions drawn up for the admiral and general of the expedition to Cadiz, to be announced to the fleet in a certain latitude: this is said to have been the first set of signals given to the commanders of the English fleet. A system for the navy was invented by the Duke of York, afterward James II., 1665.—Guthrie. See Pog-signals.

SIGNETS. See Seals.

SIGN MANUAL ROYAL, a stamp employed when the sovereign was so ill as to be unable to write: in the case of Henry VIII., 1547; James I., 1628; and George IV., May 29, 1830.—Rosse.

SIKHS, a people of N. India, invaded the Mogul's empire, 1703-8. See Punjab and India, 1749.

SILESIA, formerly a province of Poland, was invaded by John of Bohemia, 1325, and ceded to him, 1355. It was conquered and held several times during the Seven Years' War by Frederick of Prussia, but was retained by him at the peace in 1763.

SILICIUM (from silex, flint), a metal, next to oxygen, the most abundant substance in the earth, as it enters into the constitution of many earths, metallic oxides, and a great number of minerals. The mode of procuring pure silicium was discovered by Berzelius in 1823.—Gmelin. See Water-glass and Ransome's Stone.

SILISTRIA, a strong military town in Bulgaria, European Turkey. It was taken by the Russians, Sept. 26, 1829, after nine months' siege, and held some years by them as a pledge for the payment of a large sum by the Porte, but was eventually returned. In 1854 it was again besieged by the Russians, 30,000 strong, under Prince Paskiewitch, and many assaults were made. The Russian general was compelled to return in consequence of a dangerous confusion. On June 2, Musa Pacha, the brave and skillful commander of the garrison, was killed. On June 9 the Russians stormed two forts, which were retaken. A grand assault took place on June 13, under Prince Gortschakoff and General Schilders, which was vigorously repelled. On the 15th the garrison assumed the offensive, crossed the river, defeated the Russians, and destroyed the siege works. The siege was thus raised, and the Russians commenced their retreat, as Omar Pacha was drawing near. The garrison was ably assisted by two British officers, Captain Butler and Lieutenant Nasmyth, the former of whom, after being wounded, died of exhaustion. To them, in fact, the successful defense is attributed. They were highly praised by Omar Pacha and Lord Hardinge, and Lieutenant Nasmyth was made a major.

SILK. Wrought silk was brought from Persia to Greece, 325 B.C. Known at Rome in Tiberius's time, when a law passed in the senate prohibiting the use of plate of massy gold, and also forbidding men to debase themselves by wearing silk, fit only for women. Heliogabalus first wore a garment of silk, A.D. 220. Silk was at first of the same value with gold, weight for weight, and was thought to grow in the same manner as cotton, on trees. Silk-worms were brought from India to Europe in the 6th century. Charlemagne sent Offa, king of Mercia, a present of two silken vests, 780. The manufacture was encouraged by Roger, king of Sicily, at Palermo, 1146, when the Sicilians not only bred the silk-worms, but spun and wove the silk. The manufacture spread into Italy and Spain, and also into the south of France, a little before the reign of Francis I., about 1510; and Henry IV. propagated mulberry-trees and silk-worms throughout the kingdom, about 1600. In England, silk mantles were worn by some noblemen's ladies at a ball at Kenilworth Castle, 1256. Silk was worn by the English clergy in 1534. Manufactured in England in 1604; and broad silk wove from raw silk in 1620. Brought to perfection by the French refugees in London at Spitalfields, 1688. A silk throwing-mill was made in England, and fixed up at Derby, by Sir Thomas Lombe, merchant of London, modeled from the original mill then in the King of Sardinia's dominions, about 1714. Six new species of silk-worm were rearing in France, 1801.*

* In 1858, M. Guérin Ménéville introduced into France a Chinese worm termed the Cynthia Bombyx, which feeds on the Atlantique glandulosa, a hardy tree of the oak kind. The Cynthia yields a silk-like substance termed Atlantique, which promises to become valuable. It was brought to Turin by Fantoni in 1856.

SILURES, a British tribe, occupying the counties of Monmouth and Hereford, was subdued by the Roman general Ostorius Scapula, 50. The chief, Caracatus, was taken to Rome.—From this tribe is derived the geological term "Silurian strata," among the lowest of the palaeozoic or primary series, from the occurrence in the above mentioned counties.—Murchison's "Siluria."

SILVER exists in most parts of the world, and is found mixed with other ores in various mines in Great Britain. The silver mines of South America are far the richest. A mine was discovered in the district of La Paz in 1660, which was so rich that the silver of it was often cut out with a chisel. In 1749, one mass of silver weighing 370 lbs. was sent to Spain. From a mine in Norway a piece of silver was dug, and sent to the Royal Museum at Copenhagen, weighing 560 lbs., and worth £1680. In England silver-plate and vessels were first used by Wilfrid, a Northumbrian bishop, a lofty and ambitious man, 709.—Tyrrrell. Silver knives, spoons, and cups were great luxuries in 1300. See Mirrors. In 1855, 561,906 oz., and in 1857, 532,866 oz., were obtained from mines in Britain. Pattinson's process for obtaining silver from lead ore was introduced in 1829.

SILVER COIN. Silver was first coined by the Lydians, some say at Ægina, in Greece, 753; others, by Phidon of Argos, 569 B.C. At Rome it was first coined by Fabius Pictor, 269 B.C. Used in Britain, 25 B.C. The Saxons coined silver pennies which were 22½ grains weight. In 1502, the penny was yet the largest silver coin in England. See Shillings, etc. New silver coinage, 1816. From 1816 to 1840, inclusive, were coined at the mint in London, £11,108,265 15s. in silver, being a yearly average of £444,330. The total amount of the seniorage received on this coin was £616,747 8s. 2d.—Parl. Rot. From 1837 to 1847, the amount of silver coined was £2,440,614. See Coin of England.

SIMONASAKI. See Japan, 1864.

SIMONIANS, a sect named after the founder, Simon Magus, the first heretic, about 41. A sect of social reformers called St. SIMONIANS sprang up in France in 1819, and attracted considerable attention; the doctrines were advocated in England, particularly by Dr. Prati, who lectured upon them in London, Jan. 24, 1834. St. Simon died in 1825, and his follower, Père Enfantin, died Sept. 1, 1864.

SIMPLOM, a mountain road, leading from Switzerland into Italy, constructed by Napoleon in 1801-7. It winds up passes, crosses cataracts, and passes by galleries through solid rock, and has eight principal bridges. The number of workmen employed at one time varied from 30,000 to 40,000.

SINGAPORE. See Straits Settlements.

SINGING. See Music and Hymns.

SINKING FUND. First projected by Sir Robert Walpole to redeem the debt to the Bank of England; act passed in 1716. The act establishing the sinking fund of Mr. Pitt was passed in March, 1786. A then estimated surplus of £900,000 in the revenue was augmented by new taxes to make up the sum of £1,000,000, which was to be invariably applied to the reduction of the national debt. The fallacy of the scheme was shown by Dr. Hamilton in 1813. In July, 1823, the sinking fund was limited to the actual surplus of revenue.

SINOPE (Sinoub), an ancient sea-port of Asia Minor, formerly capital of the kingdom of Pontus, said to have been the birthplace of Diogenes, the Cynic philosopher. On Nov. 30, 1853, a Turkish fleet of seven frigates, three corvettes, and two smaller vessels, was attacked by a Russian fleet of six sail of the line, two sailing vessels, and three steamers, under Admiral Nachimoff, and totally destroyed, except one vessel, which conveyed the tidings to Constantinople. Four thousand lives were lost by fire or drowning, and Osman Pacha, the Turkish admiral, died at Sebastopol of his wounds. In consequence of this event, the Anglo-French fleet entered the Black Sea, Jan. 3, 1854.

SION COLLEGE AND HOSPITAL, situated on the site of a nunnery, which, having fallen to decay, was purchased by William Elsyng, a citizen and mercer, and converted into a college and hospital, called from his name Elsyng Spital. In 1340 he changed it to an Austin priory, which was afterward granted by Henry VIII. to Sir John Williams, master of the jewel office, who, with Sir Roland Hayward, inhabited it till its destruction by fire. In 1623, Dr. Thomas White having bequeathed £3000 towards purchasing and building a college and alms-house on the ancient site, his executors erected the present college. It is held by two charters of incorporation, 6 Chas. I., 1630, and 16 Chas. II., 1664. It contains a valuable library (easily accessible to the public), maintained by a treasury grant.

SIRENE, an instrument for determining the velocity of aerial vibrations corresponding to the different pitches of musical sounds, was invented by Baron Cagniard de la Tour of Paris in 1819.

SIX ARTICLES. See Articles.

SKEPTICS, the sect of philosophers founded by Pyrrho, about 334 B.C. Pyrrho was in continual suspense of judgment; he doubted of every thing; never made any conclusions, and when he had carefully examined the subject, and investigated all its parts, he concluded by still doubting of its evidence.

SKINS. The raw skins of cattle were usually suspended on stakes, and made use of instead of kettles to boil meat, in the north of England, and in Scotland, 1 Edw. III., 1327.—Leland. In 1857, 4,489,163 skins of oxen, lambs, kid, etc., dressed and undressed, were imported into Great Britain.

SLAVERY has existed from the earliest ages. The traffic in men came from Chaldaea into Egypt, Arabia, and all over the East. In Greece, in the time of Homer, all prisoners of war were treated as slaves. The Lacedæmonian youths, trained up in the practice of deceiving and butchering slaves, were from time to time let loose upon them to show their proficiency; and once, for amusement only, murdered, it is said, 3000 in one night.—Alexander, when he razed Thebes, sold the whole people for slaves, 335 B.C. See Helots. There were 400,000 slaves in Attica, 317 B.C. In Rome slaves were often chained to the gate of a great man's house, to give admittance to the guests invited to the feast. By one of the laws of the Twelve Tables, creditors could seize their insolvent debtors, and keep them in their houses till by their services or labor they had discharged the sum they owed. C. Pollio threw such slaves as gave him the slightest offense into his fish-ponds, to fatten his lampreys, 42 B.C. Cæcilius Isidorus left to his heir 416 slaves, 12 B.C. The first Janissaries were Christian slaves, 1329.*

SLAVERY IN ENGLAND. Laws respecting the sale of slaves were made by Alfred. The English peasants were so commonly sold for slaves in Saxon and Norman times, that children were sold in Bristol market like cattle for exportation. Many were sent to Ireland, and others to Scotland. Under the Normans the vassals were termed villains (of and pertaining to the will). They were devisable as chattels during the feudal times.

Severe statutes were passed in the reign of Richard II., 1377 and 1385; the rebellion of Wat Tyler, 1381, arose partly out of the evils of serfdom.†

In 1574 Queen Elizabeth ordered her bondsmen in the western counties to be made free at easy rates. 1574

Serfdom was finally extinguished in 1660, when tenures in capite, knight's service, etc., were abolished.

In 1772 it was decided that slavery could not exist in England.‡

* Serfs' woe presents attached to, and part of, the landed estates. The system was abolished by Frederick I. of Prussia in 1522; by Christian VII. of Denmark in 1702; by the Emperor Joseph II. in his hereditary states in 1781; by Nicholas I. of Russia, on the imperial domains, in 1842; and by his successor, Alexander II. (March 3, 1861), throughout his empire. Slavery ceased in the Dutch West Indies on July 1, 1863.

† A statute was enacted by Edward VI. that a runaway, or any one who lived idly for three days, should be brought before two justices of the peace, and marked V with a hot iron on the breast, and adjudged the slave of him who bought him for two years. He was to take the slave and give him bread, water, or small drink, and refuse meat, and cause him to work by beating, chaining, or otherwise; and if, within that space, he absented himself fourteen days, was to be marked on the forehead or cheek by a hot iron with an S, and be his master's slave forever; second desertion was made felony. It was lawful to put a ring of iron round his neck, arm, or leg. A child might be put apprentice, and, on running away, become a slave to his master, 1547.

‡ Determined by the judgment of the Court of King's Bench, at the instance of Mr. Granville Sharpe. A poor slave named Somerset, brought to England, was, because of his ill state, turned adrift by his master. By the charity of Mr. G. Sharpe, he was restored to health, when his unfeeling and avaricious master again claimed him. This was resisted, and a suit was the consequence, which established, by its result in favor of the black, the great point, that slavery could not exist in Great Britain, June 22, 1772. In 1853, John Anderson, a runaway slave, killed Septimus Digges, a planter of Missouri, who attempted to arrest him, and escaped to Canada. The American government claimed him as a murderer. The Canadian judges deciding that the law required his surrender, Mr. Edwin James, Q. C. (Jan. 15, 1861), obtained a writ of habeas corpus for his appearance before the Court of Queen's Bench. Anderson was, however, discharged on Feb. 16 following, on technical grounds.

Act for the abolition of slavery throughout the British colonies, and for the promotion of industry among the manumitted slaves, and for compensation to the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such slaves by the grant from Parliament of £20,000,000 sterling, passed. . . . Aug. 23, 1833
Slavery terminated in the British possessions on Aug. 1, 1834, and 770,280 slaves became free.
Slavery was abolished in the East Indies. . . . Aug. 1, 1838

SLAVERY IN THE UNITED STATES. Before the War of Independence all the states contained slaves. In 1783, the statement in the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, "All men are born free and equal," was declared in the Supreme Court at Boston to bar slaveholding in that state. Slaves in the United States in 1790, 697,897; in 1810, 1,191,364; in 1820, 2,009,031; in 1850, 3,204,813; in 1860, 4,002,996.

Congress passes unanimously the celebrated ordinance "for the government of the territory to the N.W. of the Ohio," which contained an "unalterable" article, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude in the said state, July 13, 1787; after 1800, several of the states prayed, without effect, to be relieved from this prohibition.

Louisiana purchased, which was considered by many as fatal to the Constitution. 1803

The enormous increase in the growth of cotton in the Southern States (see Cotton) led to a corresponding increase in the demand for slave labor.

The Missouri Compromise, drawn up by Henry Clay, by which slavery was permitted in that state, but was prohibited in all that part of it to the north of 36° 30' N. lat. carried. Feb., 1820

Contest between the slaveholders and their opponents at the annexation of Texas; a similar division to that of Missouri obtained. Dec. 25, 1845

Another compromise effected: California admitted as a free state; but the Fugitive Slave Act passed (which see). 1850

The Missouri Compromise was abrogated by the admission of Nebraska and Kansas as slaveholding states; civil war ensued (see Kansas). . . . 1854

SLAVE-TRADE. The slave-trade from Congou and Angola was begun by the Portuguese in 1481. The commerce in man has brutalized a tract fifteen degrees on each side of the equator, and forty degrees wide, or of 4,000,000 of square miles; and men and women have been bred for sale to the Christian nations during the last 250 years, and war carried on to make prisoners for the Christian market. The Abbé Raynal computed (1777) that, at the time of his writing, 9,000,000 of slaves had been consumed by the Europeans. The slave-trade is now (1869) approaching extinction.

In 1763 the slaves taken from their own continent amounted to 104,100. In 1786 the annual number was about 100,000.

In 1807 it was shown by documents, produced by government, that since 1792 upward of 3,500,000 Africans had been torn from their country, and had either perished on the passage or been sold in the West Indies.

SLAVE-TRADE OF ENGLAND: begun by Sir John Hawkins. His first expedition, with the object of procuring negroes on the coast of Africa, and conveying them for sale at the West Indies, took place in Oct., 1562. See Guinea.

England employed 130 ships and carried off 42,000 slaves, 1786.

Slave-trade question debated in Parliament, 1787. The debate for its abolition lasted two days, April, 1791.

Mr. Wilberforce's motion lost by a majority of 88 to 83, April 3, 1798.

The question introduced under the auspices of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox, then ministers, March 31, 1806.

The trade abolished by Parliament, March 25, 1807.

Thomas Clarkson, whose whole life may be said to have been passed in laboring to effect the extinction of the slave-trade, died, aged 85, Sept., 1846.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—The trade was abolished by Austria in 1782; by the French Convention in 1794.

The Allies at Vienna declared against it, Feb., 1815.

Napoleon, in the hundred days, abolished the trade, March 29, 1815.

Treaty for its repression with Spain, 1817; with the Netherlands, May, 1818; with Brazil, Nov., 1826.

Its revival was proposed in the Congress of the United States of America, Dec. 14, 1856, and negatived by 153 votes to 58.

In June, 1857, the French government gave permission to M. Regis to convey free negroes from Africa to Guadaloupe and Martinico, French colonies. This, having led to abuses and consequent troubles (see Charles et Georges), was eventually given up in Jan., 1859.

It is said that about 40,000 slaves were landed at Cuba in 1860.

A treaty between Great Britain and the United States for the abolition of the slave-trade was signed April 7; ratified May 20, 1862.

The Spanish government denounce the slave-trade as piracy, Nov., 1865.

SLIDING SCALE. See Corn Laws.

SLING, an ancient missive weapon. In Judges xx., 16, is mentioned the skill of the Benjamite slingers (about 1406 B.C.), and with a sling David slew Goliath, 1063 B.C. (1 Sam. xvii.). The natives of the Balearic Isles (Majorca, Minorca, and Ivica) were celebrated slingers, and served as mercenaries in the Carthaginian and Roman armies. Slings are said to have been used by the Huguenots at the siege of Sancerre in 1672, to economize their powder.

SLUYS (Holland), near which Edward III. gained a signal naval victory over the French. The English had the wind of the enemy, and the sun at their backs, and began the action, which was fierce and bloody, the English archers galling the French on their approach. Two hundred and thirty French ships were taken; thirty thousand Frenchmen were killed, with two of their admirals; the loss of the English was inconceivable: June 24, 1340.

SMALCALD (Hesse), TREATY OF, entered into between the Elector of Brandenburg and the other princes of Germany in favor of Protestantism, Dec. 31, 1530. See Protestants. The emperor, apprehensive that the kings of France and England would join this league, signed the treaty at Nuremberg in July, 1532, allowing liberty of conscience.

SMALL-POX, Variola (the diminutive of varus, a pimple), a highly contagious disease, supposed to have been introduced into Europe from the East by the Saracens. Rhazes, an Arabian, was the first who accurately described it, about 900. From Europe it was carried to America, soon after its discovery, and raged there with great severity, destroying the Indians by thousands. In 1694, Queen Mary of England died of small-pox, as did in 1711 and 1712 the Emperor of Germany, Dauphin and Dauphiness of France and their son, in 1730 the Emperor of Russia, in 1741 the Queen of Sweden, and in 1774 Louis XV. of France. It is stated that in the middle of the last century two millions perished by it in Russia. In London in 1723 one out of fourteen deaths was caused by small-pox, and in France in 1754 the rate was one in ten. For the attempts to alleviate this scourge, see Inoculation, introduced into England in 1722, and Vaccination, announced by Dr. Jenner in 1798. In Sept. and Oct., 1862, a great many sheep died of small-pox in the West of England, till successful preventive measures were resorted to.

SMITHFIELD, WEST, in the heart of London, was once a favorite walk of the London citizens outside the city walls. Sir W. Wallace was executed here, Aug. 24, 1305. On June 13, 1381, Wat Tyler was met by King Richard II. at this place, and was stabbed by Walworth the mayor. Many tournaments were also held here. In the reign of Mary (1553-8), 277 persons perished by fire; and Bartholomew Leggatt and Edward Wightman, Arians, were burnt here in 1612.—Bartholomew Fair was held here till 1853.—This place is mentioned as the site of a cattle-market as far back as 1150. The space devoted to this purpose was enlarged from about three acres to four and a half, and in 1854 to six and a quarter. The ancient regulations were called the "statutes of Smithfield." In one day there were sometimes assembled 4000 beasts and 30,000 sheep. The annual amount of the sales was about £7,000,000. In 1846 there were sold here 226,132 beasts, 1,593,270 sheep and lambs, 26,356 calves, 33,531 pigs. There were about 160 salesmen. The contracted space of the market, the slaughtering places adjoining, and many other nuisances, gave ground to much dissatisfaction, and after Parliamentary investigation, an act was passed on Aug. 1, 1851, appointing metropolitan market commissioners with powers to provide a new market, slaughtering places, etc., and to close the market at Smithfield.*

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men," a handsome building at Washington, D. C., was founded in 1846 by means of a legacy of above £100,000, bequeathed for the purpose to the United States government by Jas. Smithson, illegitimate son of Sir Hugh Smithson, who became Duke of Northumberland in 1766. It publishes and freely distributes scientific memoirs and reports. The library was burnt on Jan. 25, 1865.

SMOLENSKO (Russia). The French, in a most sanguinary engagement here, were three times repulsed, but ultimately succeeded in entering Smolensko, and found the city, which had been bombarded, burning and partly in ruins, Aug. 16-19, 1812. Barclay de Tolly, the Russian commander in chief, incurred the displeasure of the Emperor Alexander because he retreated after the battle, and Kutusoff succeeded to the command.

SMUGGLERS. The customs duties were instituted originally to enable the king to afford protection to trade against pirates; and they afterward became a branch of public revenue; but gave rise to much smuggling. The act so well known as the Smugglers' Act was passed in 1736. Its severity was mitigated in 1781 and 1784. A revision of these statutes took place 1826 and 1835.

SMYRNA. See Seven Churches.

SNEEZING. The custom of saying "God bless you" to the sneezer originated, according to Strada, among the ancients, who, through an opinion of the danger attending it, after sneezing made a short prayer to the gods, as "Jupiter help me." Polydore Vergil says it took its rise at the time of the plague, A.D. 568, when the infected fell down dead sneezing, though seemingly in good health.

SNUFF-TAKING took its rise in England from the captures made of vast quantities of snuff by Sir George Rooke's expedition to Vigo in 1702. It soon became general, from which the British revenue now draws, with tobacco, considerably more than £5,000,000 per annum. In 1839 there were imported into Great Britain 1,622,493 lbs. of snuff, of which 196,305 lbs. were entered for home consumption; the duty was £88,263. See Tobacco. In 1853, 2,573,925 lbs. of snuff and cigars, in 1861, 2,110,429 lbs. were imported.

SOANE MUSEUM, at No. 13 Lincoln's Inn Fields, was gradually formed by Sir John Soane, the architect, who died in 1837, after making arrangements for its being open to the public. It contains Egyptian and other antiquities, valuable paintings, rare books, etc.

SOAP was imperfectly known to the ancients. The first express mention of it occurs in Pliny and Galen; and the former declares it to be an invention of the Gauls, though he prefers the German to the Gallic soap. In remote periods clothes were cleaned by being rubbed or stamped upon in water. Nausicaa and her attendants, Homer tells us, washed theirs by treading upon them with their feet in pits of water.—Odyssey, book vi. The Romans used fuller's earth. Savon, the French word for soap, is ascribed to its having been manufactured at Savona, near Genoa. The manufacture of soap began in London in 1524, before which time it was supplied by Bristol at one penny per pound. In Britain the duty upon soap, imposed in 1711, was totally repealed in 1853, then set down by the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Gladstone, as yielding a yearly revenue of £1,126,000.

SOBRAON (N.W. India). The British army, 35,000 strong, under Sir Hugh (afterward Viscount) Gough, attacked the Sikh force on the Sutlej, Feb. 10, 1846. The enemy was dislodged after a dreadful contest, and all their batteries taken; and in attempting the passage of the river by a floating bridge in their rear, the weight of the masses that crowded upon it caused

* The Smithfield Club, to promote improvements in the breed of cattle, was established in 1788. For many years the members supported a cattle-show in December in Goswell Street, which was removed to Baker Street in 1840, and to the New Agricultural Hall, Liverpool Road, Islington, in 1862.

it to break down, and more than 12,000 Sikhs were killed, wounded, or drowned. The British loss was 2338 men.

SOCIALISM was advocated in London, Jan. 24, 1834, by the celebrated Robert Owen. He labored indefatigably to propagate his doctrines, and established a settlement at New Harmony, in America, in 1824. He died Nov. 17, 1858, aged 90. The French Socialists, termed Communists, became a powerful political body in that country, and were much implicated in the Revolution in 1848.

SOCIAL SCIENCE. The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science originated in a meeting at Lord Brougham's in May, 1857. Its object is to promote improvements in the administration of law, in education, in public health, and in social economy. It holds annual meetings, and publishes its proceedings. The first meeting was at Birmingham, Oct. 12, 1857; the 2d at Liverpool, Oct. 11, 1858; the 3d at Bradford, Oct. 11, 1859; the 4th at Glasgow, Sept. 24, 1860; the 5th at Dublin, Aug. 14, 1861; the 6th in London, June 5, 1862; the 7th at Edinburgh, Oct. 7, 1863; the 8th at York, Sept. 22, 1864; the 9th at Sheffield, Oct. 3, 1865; the 10th at Manchester, Oct. 3, 1866.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS, LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC, in Great Britain. Further details of many of these will be found under their respective heads. All in the list below are in London, except otherwise stated. An act was passed, Aug. 11, 1854, "to afford facilities for the establishment of institutions for the promotion of Literature and Science," by grants of land, etc.; and for their regulation. The Royal and London Institutions are exempted from the operation of the act.

SOCINIANS. Persons who accept the opinions of Faustus Socinus (died 1562), and his nephew Lælius (died 1604), Siennese noblemen. They held—1. That the Eternal Father was the one only God, and that Jesus Christ was not otherwise God than by his superiority to all other creatures; 2. That Christ was not a mediator; 3. That hell will endure for a time, after which the soul and body will be destroyed; and, 4. That it is unlawful for princes to make war.—Hook. They established a church in Poland, and made proselytes in Transylvania, 1563.

SODIUM, a remarkable metal, first obtained in 1807 by Sir Humphry Davy from soda (which was formerly confounded with potash, but proved to be a distinct substance by Duhamel in 1736). This metal, like potassium, was obtained by the agency of the electric battery. In consequence of Deville's improved processes, sodium is now manufactured at greatly reduced cost. Common salt (chloride of sodium) is a compound of sodium and chlorine.

SODOM and GOMORRAH (Palestine), with their inhabitants, were destroyed by fire from heaven, 1898 B. C., Gen. xix.

SODOR is a village of Icolmkill. Dr. Johnson calls it "the luminary of the Caledonian regions, whence," he adds, "savage clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge and the blessings of religion." The bishop's seat was at Rushin, or Castletown, in the Isle of Man, and in Latin is entitled Sodorensis. But when that island became dependent upon the kingdom of England, the Western Islands withdrew themselves from the obedience of their bishop, and had a bishop of their own, whom they entitled also Sodorenis, but commonly Bishop of the Isles. See Isles. Germanus was settled here by St. Patrick in 447. The Bishop of Sodor and Man is not a lord of Parliament. See Man.

SOISSONS (France), capital of the Gallic Snesiones, was subdued by Julius Cæsar, 57 B.C. It was held by Syagrius, after his father Ægidius, till his defeat by Clovis, A.D. 486. Several Councils have been held at Soissons (in 744, 1092, 1122).

SOLAR SYSTEM, nearly as now accepted, is said to have been taught by Pythagoras of Samos, about 529 B.C. He placed the sun in the centre, and all the planets moving in elliptical orbits round it—a doctrine superseded by the Ptolemaic system (which see). The system of Pythagoras, revived by Copernicus (1543), is called the Copernican system. Its truth was demonstrated by Sir Isaac Newton in 1687.

SOLEBAY, or SOUTHWOLD BAY (Suffolk), where a fierce naval battle was fought between the fleets of England and France on one side, and the Dutch on the other, the former commanded by the Duke of York, afterward James II., May 28, 1672. The English lost four ships, and the Dutch three; but the enemy fled, and were pursued to their coasts. The Earl of Sandwich was blown up, and thousands were killed and wounded.

SOLFERINO (in Lombardy), the site of the chief struggle in the great battle of June 24, 1859, between the allied French and Sardinian armies, commanded by their respective sovereigns, and the Austrians under General Hesse, the emperor being present. The Austrians, after their defeat at Magenta, gradually retreated across the Mincio, and took up a position in the celebrated Quadrilateral, and were expected there to await the attack. But the advance of Garibaldi on one side, and of Prince Napoleon and the Tuscans on the other, induced them to recross the Mincio and take the offensive, on June 23. The conflict began early on the 24th, and lasted fifteen hours. At first the Austrians had the advantage; but the successful attack of the French at Cavriana and Solferino changed the fortune of the day, and the Austrians were, after desperate encounters, compelled to retreat. The French attribute the victory to the skill and bravery of their emperor and the Generals M'Mahon and Neil; the Austrians, to the destruction of their reserve by the rifled cannon of their adversaries. The Sardinians maintained a fearful contest of fifteen hours at San Martino, it is said against double their number. Loss of the Austrians, 630 officers, and 19,311 soldiers; of the Allies, 8 generals, 936 officers, and 17,305 soldiers killed and wounded. This battle closed the war; preliminaries of peace being signed at Villa Franca, July 12.

SOLFIDIANS (from solus, only, and fides, faith), a name given to the Antinomians (which see).

SOLICITOR. See Attorney.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE. See Temple.

SOLWAY MOSS, bordering on Scotland. On Nov. 13, 1771, it swelled, owing to heavy rains. Upward of 400 acres rose to such a height above the level of the ground that at last it rolled forward like a torrent above a mile, sweeping along with it houses, trees, etc. It covered 600 acres at Netherby, and destroyed about 30 small villages. Near Solway Moss the Scots were defeated, Nov. 25, 1542.

SOMBRERO (West Indies). On this desert isle, Robert Jeffery, a British man-of-war's man, was put ashore by his commander, the Hon. Captain W. Lake, for having tapped a barrel of beer when the ship was on short allowance. After sustaining life for eight days on a few limpets and water, he was saved by an American vessel, Dec. 13, 1807, and returned to England. Sir Francis Burdett advocated his cause in Parliament, and he received £600 as a compensation from Captain Lake, who was tried by a court-martial and dismissed the service, Feb. 10, 1810.

SOMERSET THE BLACK. See Slavery in England.

SOMERSET HOUSE (London), formerly a palace, founded on the site of several churches and other buildings leveled in 1549 by the Protector Somerset, whose residence fell to the crown after his execution. Here resided at times Queen Elizabeth, Anne of Denmark, and Catharine, queen of Charles II. Old Somerset House, a mixture of Grecian and Gothic, was demolished in 1775, and the present edifice, from a design by Sir William Chambers, was erected for public offices. The Royal Academy of Arts first assembled in the apartments given to the members by the king, Jan. 17, 1771, and the Royal Society met here in 1780. Large suites of government buildings were erected in 1774. The Naval Office, Pipe Office, Victualing and other offices, were removed here in 1788, and various government departments since. The east wing, forming the King's College (see King's College), was completed in 1833. By an act passed in 1854, the offices of the duchy of Cornwall were ordered to be transferred to Pimlico.

SOMNATH GATES. The gates of an ancient Hindoo temple in the town of Somnath, Kattywar, Guzerat, which was destroyed by Mahmud of Ghaznee in 1025. The priests wished to preserve the idol; but Mahmud broke it to pieces, and found it filled with diamonds, etc. He carried the gates to Ghaznee. When that city was taken by Gen. Nott, Sept. 6, 1842, Lord Ellenborough ordered the gates to be restored, after an exile of 800 years. They are made of sandal-wood, and are figured in the Archæologia of the Society of Antiquaries, vol. xxx.

SONDERBUND. See Switzerland, 1846.

SONNET, a poem in fourteen lines, the rhymes being adjusted by rules, invented, it is said, by Guido d'Arezzo, about 1024. The most celebrated sonnets were written by Petrarch (about 1327), Shakespeare (1609), Milton (about 1650), and Wordsworth (1820).

SONNITES, the orthodox Mohammedans who now possess the Turkish Empire. See Mohammedanism.

SONTHALS, a tribe of Northern India, brought to Bengal about 1830, where they prospered, till, partly from the instigation of a fanatic, and partly from the exactions of money-lenders, they broke out into rebellion in July, 1855, and committed fearful outrages. They were quite subdued early in 1856, and many were removed to the newly-conquered province of Pegu.

SOPHIA, Sr. (in Constantinople). The first church was dedicated to St. Sophia (wisdom) by Constantius II., 360; having been destroyed, the second, the present edifice, was founded by Justinian, 532. Since the Mohammedan conquest in 1453, it has been used as an imperial mosque. Its length is 269 feet, and its breadth 243 feet. It abounds in curiosities. Six of its pillars are of green jasper, from the temple of Diana at Ephesus; and of porphyry, from the temple of the Sun at Rome. Four minarets were added by Selim II., who reigned in 1566. The interior of the dome is beautifully ornamented with mosaic work.

SORBONNE, a society of ecclesiastics at Paris, founded by Robert de Sorbonne in 1252. The members lived in common, and devoted themselves to study and gratuitous teaching. They attained a European reputation as a faculty of theology, their judgment being frequently appealed to from the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries. The influence of the Sorbonne was declining when the society was broken up in 1789.

SORCERERS AND MAGICIANS. A law was enacted against their seductions, 33 Hen. VIII., 1541; and another statute equally severe was passed, 5 Eliz., 1563. The pretension to sorcery was made capital, 1 James I., 1603. See Witchcraft.

SODAN, or SOUDAH, the title of the lieutenant generals of the caliphs, which they bore in their provinces and armies. These officers afterward made themselves sovereigns. Saladin, general of the forces of Nouredin, king of Damascus, was the first that took upon him this title in Egypt, 1165, after having killed the Caliph Caym.

SOUND. Roberval stated the velocity of sound to be 560 feet in a second; Gassendi, 1473; Derham, 1142 feet. The velocity increases as the temperature falls. At Paris, where cannon were fired under many varieties of weather, in 1788, it was found to be 1107. The range of perception of sound by the human ear was determined by Savart (1830) to extend from 7 to 24,000 vibrations in a second. The fire of the British on landing in Egypt was distinctly heard 130 miles on the sea. See Acoustics.

SOUNDINGS AT SEA. Captain Ross, of H. M. S. Edipus, in 1840 took extraordinary soundings at sea. One of these was taken 900 miles west of St. Helena, where it extended to the depth of 5000 fathoms. Another sounding was made in the latitude of 33 degrees S., and longitude 9 degrees W., about 300 miles from the Cape of Good Hope, when 2266 fathoms were sounded; the weight employed amounted to 450 lbs.—An invention of Mr. Brooke, an officer of the United States navy, has greatly facilitated the operation of deep-sea sounding, and it is now (1869) possible to reach the bed of the ocean at a depth of 25,000 feet.

SOUTHAMPTON, a sea-port (S. England), a county of itself, near the Roman Clausentum and the Saxon Hantune. It frequently suffered by Danish incursions; Canute, when king, occasionally resided here. The charter was granted by Henry I., and confirmed by Richard I. and John; and the free grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. On July 17, 1861, a monument to Dr. Isaac Watts was inaugurated, and on Oct. 15, 1862, the Hartley Institution was opened by Lord Palmerston.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA was discovered by Capt. Sturt in 1830, and explored shortly after by Capt. Parker and Mr. Kent, the former of whom was killed by the natives. The boundaries of the province were fixed by 4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 95 (1834); and it was occupied Dec. 26, 1836, by Capt. Hindmarsh, the first governor. It was colonized according to Mr. E. Gibbon Wakefield's scheme, which was carried out by the South Australian Colonization Association. The colony for several years underwent severe trials through the great influx of emigrants, land-jobbing, building speculations, etc., which produced almost universal bankruptcy in 1839. In five years after the energy of the colonists had overcome their difficulties, and the prosperity of the colony appeared fully established. In 1842 the highly productive Burra Burra copper mines were discovered, and large fortunes were suddenly realized; but in 1851 the discovery of gold in New South Wales and Victoria almost paralyzed this province by drawing off a large part of the laboring population. Very little gold was found in South Australia; but a reaction took place in favor of the copper mines and agriculture, etc. Before the discovery of gold, little trade existed between Adelaide (the capital of South Australia) and Melbourne; but in 1852 gold was transmitted from the latter to the former to the amount of £2,215,167, principally for breadstuffs, farm produce, etc. The bishopric of Adelaide was founded in 1847. Sir Dominic Daly was appointed governor in Nov., 1861. Population in 1855, 85,521; in 1857, 155,698.

SOUTHCOTT, JOANNA, a fanatic, born in 1750, came from Exeter to London, where her followers at one period amounted to many thousands, among whom were military officers, but the low and ignorant were her principal dupes. In 1792 she announced herself as the woman spoken of in the book of Revelation, chap. xii.; and a disorder gave her the appearance of pregnancy after she had passed her grand climacteric, favoring the delusion that she would be the mother of the promised Shiloh. She died Dec. 27, 1814. In 1851 there existed four congregations professing to expect her return.

SOUTHERN CONFEDERATE STATES. See Confederates.

SOUTHERN CONTINENT. The Southern Ocean was first traversed by Magellan in 1520, and explored by Wallis and Carteret in 1766, and by Cook in 1773 and 1774. Of the southern continent little more is known than that it is ice-bound, and contains active volcanoes. It was discovered in the first instance by Capt. John Biscoe, on Feb. 27, 1831, in lat. 65° 57' S., long. 47° 20' E., extending east and west 200 miles: this he named Enderby Land, after the gentleman who had equipped him for the voyage. Capt. Biscoe also discovered Graham's Land on Feb. 15, 1832, situated in lat. 67° 1' S., long. 71° 48' W. The Messrs. Enderby equipped three other expeditions in search of the southern continent, the last (in connection with some other gentlemen) in 1838, when Capt. Balleny had command, who on Feb. 9, 1839, discovered the Balleny Islands, in lat. 67° S., long. 165° E., and in March, 1839, Salvia Land, in lat. 65° 10' S., long. 118° 30' E. In 1840, a French expedition, under the command of Admiral D'Urville, and an American expedition, under the command of Commodore Wilkes, greatly added to our knowledge in respect to the existence of a southern continent, and this was again increased by the expedition which sailed from England in 1839, under the command of Capt. Sir James Clark Ross, who discovered Victoria Land in 1841, and subsequently penetrated as far south as 78° 11'.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM, near Brompton old church (containing the pictures presented by Mr. Vernon, Mr. Sheepshanks, Mrs. Ellison, and those bequeathed by Turner, the great painter, as well as specimens of sculpture and art, educational collections, products of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms, etc.), was opened on June 24, 1857. A special Exhibition of Works of Art, of immense value, lent for the occasion, was opened here in the summer of 1862, and closed in November.

SOUTH MOUNTAIN (Maryland), BATTLE OF, fought Sept. 14, 1862, three days before the drawn battle at Antietam. South Mountain is the name given to a prolongation of a range of the Blue Ridge north of the Potomac from Harper's Ferry. Turner's Gap affords a passage from Frederick City to Williamsport; Crampton's Gap gives a similar opening toward Harper's Ferry. Lee, after crossing the Potomac, had divided his army, so that an opportunity was given McClellan to cut in between and attack each portion. Franklin was ordered through Crampton's Gap to cut off M'Laws and relieve Harper's Ferry. The remainder of the army was to move via Turner's Gap upon the rear of Lee's main column. The Confederate General D. H. Hill succeeded in reaching the summit of Turner's Gap before the arrival of the Union force. The battle of the 14th consisted of an attempt to wrest this position from the Confederates, soon re-enforced by Longstreet's corps. The National troops were successful, 30,000 Union troops were engaged and 17,000 Confederates. National loss, 312 killed and 1234 wounded; Confederate, 2000. This battle was really the decisive one of the campaign, and forced Lee to fight the battle of Antietam. At Crampton's Gap, six miles south, an action was at the same time going on between Franklin and M'Laws, in which the latter was driven from his position.

SOUTH-SEA BUBBLE commenced with the establishment of the South Sea Company in 1710, which was at first unwisely and afterward dishonestly managed. It exploded in 1720, ruining thousands of families, and the directors' estates, to the value of £2,014,000, were seized in 1721 and sold. Mr. Knight, the cashier, absconded with £100,000; but he compounded the fraud for £10,000, and returned to England in 1743. Almost all the wealthy persons in the kingdom had become speculators; the artifices of the directors having raised the shares, originally £100, to the price of £1000. A Parliamentary inquiry took place in Nov., 1720, and Aislabie, chancellor of the Exchequer, and several members of Parliament, were expelled the House in 1721. See Law's Bubble.

SOUTHWARK (S. London), was governed by its own bailiffs till 1327. The city, however, found great inconvenience from the number of malefactors who escaped thither, in order to be out of the reach and cognizance of the city magistrates, and a grant was made of Southwark to the city of London by the crown for a small annuity. In Edward VI.'s reign it was formed into a city ward, and was named Bridge Ward Without, 1550.—Southwark Bridge was begun September 23, 1814, and was completed March 26, 1819, at an expense of £800,000. It consists of three great cast-iron arches, resting on massive stone piers and abutments; the distance between the abutments is 708 feet; the centre arch is 240 feet span; the two others 210 feet each; and the total weight of iron 5308 tons.

SOUTHWOLD. See Solebay.

SOVEREIGN, an ancient and modern British gold coin. In 1459, 22½ pieces, in value 20s., "to be called the sovereign," were ordered to be coined out of a pound of gold.—Ruding. In 1542 sovereigns were coined in value 20s., which afterward, in 1550 and 1552 (4 & 6 Edw. VI.), passed for 24s. and 30s. "Sovereigns" of the new coinage were directed to pass for 20s. July 1, and half sovereigns for 10s. Oct. 10, 1817. See Coin and Gold.

SPA-FIELDS (N. London). Here upward of 30,000 persons assembled to vote an address from the distressed manufacturers to the prince regent, Nov. 15, 1816. A second meeting, Dec. 2 following, terminated in an alarming riot; the shops of several gunsmiths were attacked for arms by the rioters; and in the shop of Mr. Beckwith, on Snowhill, Mr. Platt was wounded, and much injury was done before the tumult was suppressed. For this riot, Cashman, the seaman, was hanged, March 12, 1817.

SPAHIS, African horsemen, incorporated by the French in Algeria in 1834; three regiments of them came to France in 1863.

[Heir: Alfonso, prince of Asturias, born Nov. 28, 1857.]

In Sept., 1868, Isabella was forced to take refuge in France, a revolution in Madrid, headed by Prim, Serrano, and Topete, having successfully overturned the monarchy. The Cortes met, and, after many months of discussion, a decision in favor of a constitutional monarchy was arrived at; but, as none of the persons put in nomination for the crown were acceptable to a majority, in June, 1869, a regency was declared the government, Serrano being regent, and Prim commander-in-chief. Isabella, in Paris, still claims the crown.

SPANISH ARMADA. See Armada.

SPANISH ERA. See Eras.

SPANISH GRANDEES, the higher nobility, almost equal to the kings of Castile and Aragon, and who often set their authority at defiance, were restrained on the union of the crowns by the marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella in 1474, who compelled several to relinquish the royal fortresses and domains which they held. Charles V. reduced the grantees to sixteen families (Medina-Sidonia, Albuquerque, etc.), dividing them into three classes.

SPANISH LANGUAGE (Lengua Castellana) is a dialect of Latin largely intermingled with Arabic, which was the legal language till the 14th century. Spanish did not become general till the 16th century.

SPANISH SUCCESSION AND MARRIAGES. See Spain, 1700, and Oct. 10, 1846.

SPARTA, the capital of Laconia, the most considerable republic of the Peloponnesus, and the rival of Athens. Though without walls, it resisted the attacks of its enemies by the valor of its citizens for eight centuries. Lelex is supposed to have been the first king. From Lacedæmon the fourth king, and his wife Sparta, who are also spoken of as the founders of the city, it obtained the names by which it is most known. The Lacedæmonians were a nation of soldiers. They cultivated neither the arts, sciences, commerce, nor agriculture.

* This celebrated battle was fought between 300 select heroes of each nation, and all perished except two Argives and one Spartan. The latter remained on the field, while the two former repaired to Argos to announce their victory. Each party claimed the advantage; the Argives because they had lost the fewest men; the Lacedæmonians because they remained masters of the field. A second battle was fought, in which the Argives were beaten.—Pausanias.

SPARTACUS'S INSURRECTION. He was a noble Thracian, who served in an auxiliary corps of the Roman army. Having deserted and been apprehended, he was reduced to slavery and made a gladiator. With some companions he made his escape, collected a body of slaves and gladiators, 73 B.C., ravaged Southern Italy, and defeated the Roman forces under the consuls sent against him. Knowing the impossibility of successfully resisting the republic, he endeavored to conduct his forces into Sicily, but on the way was defeated and slain by Crassus, 72 B.C.

SPEAKERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS. Peter de Montfort, afterward killed at the battle of Evesham, was the first speaker, 45 Hen. III., 1260; but Sir Peter de la Mare is supposed to have been the first regular speaker, 50 Edw. III., 1376. The king refused his assent to the choice of Sir Edward Seymour as speaker, March 6, 1678, and Sergeant William Gregory was chosen in his room. Sir John Trevor was expelled the chair and the house for taking a gratuity after the act for the benefit of orphans had passed, March 20, 1694.

SPEAKING TRUMPET, used by ships at sea. One is said to have been used by Alexander, 335 B.C. One was constructed from Kircher's description by Saland, 1652. Philosophically explained and brought into notice by Moreland, 1671.

SPECIES. Much controversy among naturalists arose in consequence of the publication, in 1859, of Mr. Charles Darwin's "Origin of Species," in which he suggests that all the various species of animals were not created at one time, but have been gradually developed by what he terms "natural selection," and the struggle for life of the strong against the weak.

SPECTACLES, unknown to the ancients, are generally supposed to have been invented by Alexander de Spina, a monk of Florence, in Italy, about 1285. According to Dr. Plot, they were invented by Roger Bacon, about 1280. Mr. Manni, in his Treatise, gives proof in favor of Salvino being the inventor.

SPECTATOR. The first number of this periodical appeared on March 1, 1711; the last was No. 635, Dec. 20, 1714. The papers by Addison have one of the letters CL to at the end. The most of the other papers are by Sir Richard Steele, a few by Hughes, Budgell, Ensden, Miss Shephard, and others. The Spectator newspaper began in 1825.

SPECTRUM, the term given to the image of the sun or any other luminous body formed on a wall or screen, by a beam of light received through a small hole or slit and refracted by a prism. The colors thus produced are red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The discovery was made by Newton, whose "Optics" were published in 1704. Several of these colors are considered to be compounds of three primary ones: by Mayer (1775), red, yellow, and blue; by Dr. Thos. Young (1801), red, green, and violet; by Prof. Clerk Maxwell (1860), red, green, and blue.* As the color of a flame varies according to the substance producing it or introduced into it, so the spectrum varies also. This has led to the invention of a method of chemical analysis by Professors Bunsen and Kirchhoff (1860), by which they have discovered two new metals, and have drawn conclusions as to the nature of the atmosphere of the sun and stars, and of the light of the nebulae, by comparing the spectrum with that produced by flames into which iron, sodium, and other substances have been introduced.†

SPECULATIVE SOCIETY, Edinburgh (which had included among its members David Hume), celebrated its hundredth anniversary on Oct. 14, 1863.

SPIERES. The celestial and terrestrial globes, and also sun-dials, are said to have been invented by Anaximander, 552 B.C.; and the armillary sphere by Eratosthenes, about 225 B.C. The planetarium was constructed by Archimedes before 212 B.C. Pythagoras maintained that the motion of the twelve spheres must produce delightful sounds, inaudible to mortals, which he called the music of the spheres.

SPINNING was ascribed by the ancients to Minerva, the goddess of Wisdom. Arcas, king of Arcadia, taught his subjects the art about 1500 B.C. Lucretia, with her maids, was found spinning when her husband Collatinus paid a visit to her from the camp. The wife of Tarquin was an excellent spinner; and a garment made by her, worn by Servius Tullius, was preserved in the Temple of Fortune. Augustus Caesar usually wore no garments but such as were made by his wife, sister, or daughter. The spinning-wheel was invented at Brunswick about A.D. 1530. Till 1767 the spinning of cotton was performed by the hand spinning-wheel, when Hargreaves, an ingenious mechanic, near Blackburn, made a spinning jenny, with eight spindles. Hargreaves also erected the first carding machine, with cylinders. Arkwright's machine for spinning by water was an extension of the principle of Hargreaves; but he also employed a large and small roller to expand the thread, and, for this ingenious contrivance, took out a patent in 1769. At first he worked his machinery by horses, but in 1771 he built a mill on the stream of the Derwent, at Cromford. In 1774-9, Crompton invented the mule (which see).

SPIRES (in Bavaria). The emperors held many diets at Spire since 1509, and it was the seat of the Imperial Chamber till 1683, when the city was burnt by the French, and not rebuilt till after the peace of Ryswick in 1697. The diet to condemn the reformers was held at Spire, called there by the Emperor Charles V., 1529. See Protestants.

SPIRIT-RAPPING, Etc. Spiritual manifestations (so called) began, it is said, in America about 1848, and attracted attention in England about 1851, in the shape of table-turning, etc. Many inquisitive or credulous persons visited Mr. Home and Mr. Forster, noted "spiritual mediums."

SPIRITS. See Distillation. In all nations spirituous liquors have been considered as a proper subject of heavy taxation for the support of the state. See Alcohol, Brandy, Methylated Spirits, etc.

SPITALFIELDS (East London). Here the French Protestant refugees settled and established the silk manufacture in 1655. In consequence of commercial changes, the weavers endured much distress about 1829.

SPITZBERGEN, an archipelago in the Arctic Ocean, discovered in 1533 by Sir Hugh Willoughby, who called it Greenland, supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595 it was visited by Barentz and Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called it Spitzbergen, or sharp mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds. See Phipps.

SPONTANEOUS GENERATION. The origin of the germs of infusorial animals developed during putrefaction, etc., has been and is still fiercely debated by naturalists. Spallanzani (about 1766), and especially M. Pasteur and others at the present time (1855), assert that these germs are really endowed with organic life existing in the atmosphere. Needham (about 1747), and especially M. Pouchet and his friends in our day, pretend that these germs are spontaneously formed out of organic molecules, and may be formed artificially. Pouchet's "Hétérogenie" appeared in 1859.

SPORTS. The first "Book of Sports," under the title of "The King's Majesty's Declaration to his Subjects concerning Lawful Sports to be used" on Sundays after evening prayers, was published by King James I., May 24, 1618. The second "Book of Sports," with a ratification by his majesty Charles I., is dated Oct. 18, 1633. On the publication of the first "Book of Sports" there arose a long and violent controversy among English divines on certain points. See Sabbatarians, Sunday, etc. The book was ordered to be burnt by the hangman, and the sports were suppressed by the Parliament.

SPRINGFIELD (Missouri), near which was fought the desperate battle of Wilson's Creek (which see).

SPRINGFIELD (New Jersey), BATTLE OF. In June, 1780, a British force sent from New York invaded New Jersey, by way of Staten Island; they were 6000 strong, commanded by General Mathews. Sir Henry Clinton joined him with additional troops, and movements were made to draw Washington, from his strong position at Morristown, into battle in the open country. The British made a feigned movement toward the Highlands, leaving General Greene in command at Springfield, a short distance from Elizabethtown, Washington marched with a considerable force toward the Highlands. The British then, by a quick movement, attacked Greene on the 23d of June, hoping to fall upon the American stores at Morristown. The British were repulsed, and fled in confusion to Staten Island. They consisted of 5000 infantry, a body of cavalry, and 20 pieces of artillery. They set fire to Springfield when they left.

* Fraunhofer's Lines. In 1802 Dr. Wollaston observed several dark lines in the solar spectrum; in 1815 Joseph Fraunhofer not only observed them, but constructed a map of them, giving 500 lines or dark bands. By the researches of Brewster and others the number observed is now above 4000.

† Mr. Fox Talbot observed the orange line of strontium in the spectrum in 1805; and Sir David Brewster observed other lines, 1853-42-3. In 1892-3 Mr. Wm. Huggins analyzed the light of the fixed stars and of the nebulae; and in 1895, Dr. Bence Jones, by means of spectrum analyses, detected the presence of minute quantities of metals in the living body, introduced only a few minutes previously.

SPURS. Anciently the difference between the knight and the esquire was that the knight wore gilt spurs (equus auratus) and the esquire silver ones. Two sorts of spurs seem to have been in use at the time of the Conquest, one called a pryck, having only a single point, the other a number of points of considerable size. Spurs nearly of the present kind came into use about 1400. See Plating.

SPURS, BATTLE OF. Henry VIII. of England, the Emperor Maximilian, and the Swiss, in 1513, entered into an offensive alliance against France. Henry VIII. landed at Calais in the month of July, and soon formed an army of 30,000 men, counting his own troops. He was joined by the emperor with a good corps of horse and some foot. The emperor was so mean as to act as a mercenary to the King of England, who allowed him a hundred ducats a day for his table! They invested Terouenne with an army of 50,000 men; and the Duc de Longueville, marching to its relief, was signally defeated on the 16th of August at Guinegate. This battle was called the battle of Spurs because the French used their spurs more than they did their swords. The English king laid siege to Tournay, which submitted in a few days.—Hénault. See Courtrat for another "battle of spurs."

STADE DUES. At a castle near the town of Stade, in Hanover, certain dues were charged by the Hanoverian government on all goods imported into Hamburg. The British government settled these dues in 1844, and they were resisted by the Americans in 1855. Negotiations on the subject began in 1860, and the dues were abolished in June, 1861. Great Britain paid £160,000 as her share of the compensation.

STADTHOLDER. See Holland.

STAFF COLLEGE (Sandhurst), for providing an education to qualify military officers for the duties of the staff. The foundation stone was laid by the Duke of Cambridge on Dec. 14, 1859.

STAGE-COACHES. So called from the stages or inns at which the coaches stopped to refresh and change horses.—Bailey. The Stage-coach Duty Act passed in 1755. These coaches were made subject to salutary provisions for the safety of passengers in 1809; to mileage duties, 1814. See Mail-coaches, etc.

STAMP DUTIES in England first instituted in 1671. They were re-enacted 1694, when a duty was imposed upon paper, vellum, and parchment. The stamp duty on newspapers was commenced in 1713, and every year added to the list of articles upon which stamp duty was made payable.

The American Stamp Act, a memorable statute, one of those imposed levied by the Parliament of Great Britain which led to the American War and the independence of that country, passed March 22, 1765. It was repealed in 1766. Stamp duties in Ireland commenced in 1774. Stamps on notes and bills of exchange in 1782. The stamp duties produced in England, in 1800, a revenue of £3,126,535.

Many alterations made in 1853 and 1857. In June, 1855, the stamp duty on newspapers as such was totally abolished, the stamp on them being henceforth for postal purposes.

In July and August, 1854, 19,115,000 newspaper stamps were issued; in the same months, 1855, only 6,870,000.

Drafts on bankers to be stamped. 1858. Additional stamp duties were enacted in 1860 (on leases, bills of exchange, dock warrants, extracts from registers of births, etc.); in 1861 (on leases, licenses to house agents, etc.).

Stamp duties reduced in 1864, 1865.

All fees payable in the superior courts of law, after Dec. 31, 1865, are to be collected by stamps, by an act passed in June, 1865.

STANDARD. First fixed by the law for gold and silver in England, 1300. Standard gold is 22 parts out of 24 of pure gold, the other two parts or carats being silver or copper. The standard of silver is 11 oz. 2 dwts. of fine silver alloyed with 18 dwts. of copper, or 37 parts out of 40 pure silver, and three parts copper. In 1300 these 12 oz. of silver were coined into 20 shillings; in 1412 they were coined into 30 shillings; and in 1527 into 45 shillings. In 1545, Henry VIII. coined 6 oz. of silver and 6 oz. of alloy into 48 shillings; and the next year he coined 4 oz. of silver and 8 oz. of alloy into the same sum. Elizabeth, in 1560, restored the old standard in 60 shillings, and in 1601 in 62 shillings. It is now 66 shillings. The average proportions of silver to gold at the royal mint are 15½ to 1. The standard of plate and silver manufactures was affirmed, 6 Geo. I., 1719, et seq. See Gold and Coinage.—BATTLE OF THE STANDARD. See Northallerton.

STANDARD MEASURES. In the reign of Edgar a law was made to prevent frauds arising from the diversity of measures, and for the establishment of a legal standard measure to be used in every part of his dominions. The standard vessels made by order of the king were deposited in the city of Winchester, and hence originated the well-known term of "Winchester measure." The bushel so made is still preserved in the Guildhall of that city. Henry I. also, to prevent frauds in the measurement of cloth, ordered a standard yard of the length of his own arm to be made and deposited at Winchester, with the standard measures of King Edgar. The Guildhall contains the standard measures of succeeding sovereigns.—Camden. The standard weights and measures were settled by Parliament in 1824. The pound troy was to be 5760 grains, and the pound avoirdupois 7000 grains. The "standard yard of 1660," in the custody of the clerk of the House of Commons, was declared to be the imperial standard yard and the unit of measures of extension. This standard having been destroyed by the fire in 1834, a new commission was appointed to reconstruct it, and researches for this purpose, in conformity with the act, which directed the comparison of the standard with a pendulum vibrating seconds of time in the latitude of London, were begun by Francis Baily (died in 1844), continued by the Rev. R. Sheepshanks till his death in 1855, and completed by G. B. Airy, astronomer royal. In 1855 was passed "an act for legalizing and preserving the lost standards of weights and measures." The Parliamentary copies of the standard pound and yard are deposited at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

STANDARDS. See Banners, Flags, etc. The practice in the army of using a cross on standards and shields is due to the asserted miraculous appearance of a cross to Constantine, previously to his battle with Maxentius; Eusebius says that he received this statement from the emperor himself, 312. For the celebrated French standard, see Auriflamme.—STANDARD OF MOHAMMED: on this ensign no infidel dared look. It was carried in procession about 1768, when several hundred Christians, who ignorantly looked upon it, were massacred by the Turkish populace.—The British Imperial Standard was first hoisted on the Tower of London, and on Bedford Tower, Dublin, and displayed by the Foot Guards, on the union of the kingdoms, Jan. 1, 1801.

STANFORD BRIDGE (York). In 1066, Tostig, brother of Harold II., rebelled against his brother, and joined the invading army of Harold Hardrada, king of Norway. They defeated the northern earls and took York, but were defeated at Stanford Bridge by Harold, Sept. 25, and were both slain. The loss by this victory no doubt led to his own ruin at the battle of Hastings on Oct. 14 following.

STANHOPE ADMINISTRATION was formed by James (afterward Earl) Stanhope and the Earl of Sunderland in April, 1717. It included Earl Stanhope, chancellor of the Exchequer; Earl Cowper, lord chancellor; Earl of Sunderland and Joseph Addison, secretaries of state, etc. In March, 1718, Addison resigned, and the Earl of Sunderland became premier.

STANNARY COURTS of Devon and Cornwall for the administration of justice among the tin miners, whose privileges were confirmed by 33 Edw. I., 1305. They were regulated by Parliament in 1641 and 1855.

STARCH is a sediment produced at the bottom of vessels wherein wheat has been steeped in water: it is soft and friable, easily broken into powder, and is used to stiffen and clear linen, with blue; its powder is employed to powder the hair. The art of starching linen was brought into England by Mrs. Dugheine, a Flemish woman, 1 Mary, 1553.—Stow. Patents for obtaining starch from other substances have been taken out: from potatoes by Samuel Newton and others in 1707; from the horse-chestnut by William Murray in 1796; from rice by Thomas Wickham in 1823; from various matters by Orlando Jones in 1839-40. For many years starch has been made in the United States from Indian corn.

STAR-CHAMBER, COURT OF. So called haply from its roof being garnished with stars.—Coke. This court of justice was called Star-Chamber, not from the stars on its roof (which were obliterated even before the reign of Queen Elizabeth), but from the Starra, or Jewish covenants, deposited there by order of Richard I. No star was allowed to be valid except found in those repositories, and here they remained till the banishment of the Jews by Edward I. The court was instituted 2 Hen. VII., 1486, for trials by a committee of the privy council, which was in violation of Magna Charta, as it dealt with civil and criminal cases unfettered by the rules of law. In Charles I.'s reign (1634-37) it exercised its power upon several bold innovators in liberty, who only gloried in their sufferings, and contributed to render government odious and contemptible. It was abolished in 1641. There were in this court from 26 to 42 judges, the lord chancellor having the casting voice.

STAR OF INDIA, a new order of knighthood for India, gazetted June 25, 1861.*

STARS, THE FIXED. They were classed into constellations, it is supposed, about 1200 B.C. Hicetas, of Syracuse, taught that the sun and the stars were motionless, and that the earth moved round them, about 344 B.C. (this is mentioned by Cicero, and perhaps gave the first hint of this system to Copernicus). Job, Hesiod, and Homer mention several of the constellations. The Royal Library at Paris contains a Chinese chart of the heavens, made about 600 B.C., in which 1460 stars are correctly inserted. The aberration of the stars was discovered by Dr. Bradley, 1727. See Astronomy and Solar System. Maps of the stars were published by the Society for the Diffusion of Knowledge in 1839, and a set of Celestial Maps, issued under the superintendence of the Royal Prussian Academy, was completed in 1859.

STATE PAPER OFFICE was founded in 1578. In 1857 the British government began the publication of Calendars of State Papers, which will be invaluable to future historians.

STATES-GENERAL OF FRANCE. An ancient assembly of France, first met, it is said, in 1302 to consider the exactions of the pope. Previously to the Revolution, it had not met since 1614. The States consisted of three orders, the clergy, nobility, and commons. They were convoked by Louis XVI., and assembled at Versailles, May 5, 1789 (308 ecclesiastics, 285 nobles, and 621 deputies or tiers état). A contest arose whether the three orders should make three distinct houses, or but one assembly. The commons insisted upon the latter, and, assuming the title of the National Assembly, declared that they were competent to proceed to business, without the concurrence of the two other orders, if they refused to join them. The nobility and clergy found it expedient to concede the point, and they all met in one hall. See National Assembly.

STATES OF THE CHURCH. See Pope and Rome.

STATIONERS. Books and papers were formerly sold only at stalls, hence the dealers were called stationers. The Company of Stationers of London is of great antiquity, and existed long before printing was invented, yet it was not incorporated until 3 Philip & Mary, 1555. Their old dwelling was in Paternoster Row.—Mortimer.

STATISTICS, defined as the science of figures applied to life, is stated to have been founded by Sir Wm. Petty, who died in 1687. The term is said to have been invented by Professor Achenwall, of Göttingen, in 1749. The first statistical society in England was formed at Manchester in 1833; the Statistical Society of London, which publishes a quarterly journal, was established in 1834; similar societies have been established on the Continent. International Statistical Congresses are now held occasionally. The 1st at Brussels, in 1853; 2d at Paris, 1855; 3d at Vienna, 1857; 4th at London, under the presidency of the prince consort, July 16-21, 1860.

STATUES. See Sculpture, etc. Phidias, whose statue of Jupiter passed for one of the wonders of the world, was the greatest statuary among the ancients, 440 B.C. He had previously made a statue of Minerva at the request of Pericles, which was placed in the Parthenon. It was made of ivory and gold, and measured 39 feet in height. Acilius raised a golden statue to his father, the first that appeared in Italy. Lysippus invented the art of taking likenesses in plaster moulds, from which he afterward cast models in wax, 326 B.C. Michael Angelo was the greatest artist among the moderns. The first equestrian statue erected in Great Britain was that of Charles I. in 1678.* By 17 & 18 Vict., c. 10 (July 10, 1854), public statues are placed under the control and protection of the Board of Works. The following are the chief public statues in London:

STATUTES. See Acts of Parliament, Clarendon, Merton, etc. The Statute Law Revision Act was passed in 1863.

STEAM CARRIAGE (for ordinary roads), invented by the Earl of Caithness, was said to be successful in 1860. It travels over rough roads at the rate of 8 miles an hour, at a cost of less than 1d. per mile. His lordship made a journey of 140 miles in two days.

STEAM-ENGINE AND NAVIGATION. Hero of Alexandria, in his “Pneumatics,” describes various methods of employing steam as a power, and to him is ascribed the Æolipile, which, although a toy, possesses the properties of the steam-engine: he flourished about 284-241 B.C. Roger Bacon appears to have foreseen the application of steam-power. See Railways, Locomotives, etc.

* This statue is of brass, cast by Le Sueurs in 1643, at the expense of the Howard-Arundel family. During the Civil War, the Parliament sold it to John River, a brazier, in Holborn, with strict orders to break it to pieces; but he concealed it under ground till the Restoration, when it was erected, in 1678, on a pedestal executed by Grinlin Gibbons. The first equestrian statue of bronze, founded at one cast, was that of Louis XIV. of France, 1699; it was elevated about 1734.

* It comprises the sovereign, the grand master, 25 knights (European and natives), and extra or honorary knights, such as the prince consort, the Prince of Wales, etc. The queen invested several knights on Nov. 1, 1861.

* The Great Eastern—for a short time only (in 1857-8) called Leviathan—was designed by Mr. I. K. Brunel (who died Sept. 15, 1859), and built by Messrs. Scott Russell and Co., at Millwall. Its launching lasted from Nov. 3, 1857, to Jan. 31, 1858. The capital subscribed having been all expended, a new company was formed to fit her for sea. On Sept. 7, 1859, she left her moorings at Deptford for Portland Roads. On the voyage an explosion took place (off Hastings), through some neglect in regard to the casing of one of the chimneys, when ten firemen were killed, and many persons seriously injured. After repairs she sailed to Holyhead, arriving there Oct. 16; she endured the storm of Oct. 25-26 well, and proceeded to Southampton for the winter. Nov. 4. She was constructed to convey 5000 persons from London to Australia, a distance of 22,500 miles; with accommodations for 800 1st class passengers, 2000 2d class, and 1200 3d class. Her able captain (Harrison) was drowned in the Solent, Jan. 22, 1860, deeply regretted. She sailed for New York, June 17, under command of Captain Vine Hall, and arrived there June 28. After being exhibited, she left New York Aug. 16, and returned to England, Aug. 26. Owing to a lawsuit in STEAM HAMMER was invented by Mr. James Nasmyth in 1838, and patented by him June 18, 1842. The main feature in the construction of the steam hammer is the absolutely direct manner by which the elastic power of steam is employed to lift up and let fall the mass of iron which constitutes the hammer, which mass or block of iron is attached direct to the end of a piston-rod passing through the bottom of an inverted steam cylinder placed immediately over the anvil. The vast range and perfect control over the power of the blows enable the largest or smallest forge-work to be executed by the same steam hammer.* In 1842 Mr. Nasmyth applied his steam hammer to driving piles, which invention has importantly assisted in the execution of every great public work in which pile-driving has been required.

STEAM NAVIGATION. See under Steam.

STEAM PLOW was invented by John Fowler, who died in 1864.

STEAM RAM (to be used in naval warfare), was invented by Mr. James Nasmyth in 1836, and communicated to the Admiralty in 1845. Steam rams built by Mr. James Laird, of Birkenhead, for the Confederate States in North America, were stopped, and eventually bought by the British government in 1864.

STEARINE (from stear, suet), that part of oils and fats which is solid at common temperatures. The nature of these substances was first made known by Chevreul in 1823, who showed that they were compounds of peculiar acids, with a base termed glycerine; of these compounds the chief are stearine, margarine, and elaine. See Candles.

STEEL, metal, a compound of iron and carbon, exists in nature, and has been largely fabricated from the earliest times. A manufactory for cast steel is said to have been set up by Benjamin Huntsman at Handsworth, near Sheffield, in 1740. The manufacture of shear steel began at Sheffield about 1800. German steel was made at Newcastle previously by Mr. Crawley. The inventions of Mushat (1800) and Lucas (1804) were important steps in this manufacture. See Engraving. In 1856, Mr. H. Bessemer made steel by passing cold air through liquid iron; in 1859, tungsten steel was made in Germany; and in 1861, M. Fremy made steel by bringing red hot iron in contact with carbonate of ammonia. The subject has been much investigated by M. Caron, 1861-5. In 1860, much attention was excited by cutlery made from a metallic sand, brought from Taranaki or New Plymouth, in New Zealand. In consequence of improved modes, steel is now made cheaply in large masses, and will be employed in the manufacture of cannon, etc.

STEEL PENS. "Iron pens" are mentioned by Chamberlayne in 1685. Steel pens came into use about 1820, when the first gross of three-slit pens was sold wholesale for £7 4s. In 1830 the price was 8s., and in 1832, 6s. A better pen is now sold for 6d. a gross; the cheapest sort at 2d.; Birmingham in 1858 produced about 1000 million pens per annum. Women and children are principally employed in the manufacture. Perry, Mitchell, and Gilloitt are eminent makers.

STEEL-YARD. An ancient instrument, the same that is translated balance in the Pentateuch. The Statera Romana, or Roman steel-yard, is mentioned in 315 B.C.—The STEEL-YARD COMPANY, London merchants, who had the steel-yard assigned to them by Henry III., A.D. 1232, were Flemings and Germans, and the only exporters, for many years after, of the staple commodities of England.—Anderson. The company lost its privileges in 1551.

STEENKIRK. See Enghien.

STENOGRAPHY (from stenos, narrow), the art of short-hand, said to have been practiced by the ancients. Its improvement is attributed to the poet Ennius, to Tyro, to Cicero's freedman, and still more Appl. the ship came into the hands of sheriff's officers, but was released and sailed for New York on May 1, 1861. On Sept. 12, 1861, she suffered much loss through a violent gale. In 1862 she performed several voyages to and from New York; but in Aug., 1862, ran on a rock near Long Island, and injured her bottom. She was repaired and arrived at Liverpool Jan. 17, 1863, and sailed to New York (May 16-27). The ship was bought by Glass, Elliot, and Co., in March or April, 1864, and was chartered to convey the Atlantic telegraph cable. It sailed from Sheerness July 15, and returned Aug. 19, 1865. See Electric Telegraph, p. 141.

* It is now employed in every country where the working of malleable iron is carried on. Owing to the vast range of power possessed by the steam hammer, forged iron work can now by its means be executed on a scale, and for a variety of purposes, with such ease and perfection as could not have been possible by the means previously existing. Parts of the most gigantic marine steam-engines, anchors, and Armstrong guns, as well as the most minute details of machinery, as in Enfield rifles, are now executed by the steam hammer.

to Seneca. The Ars Scribendi Characteris, written about 1412, is the oldest system extant. Peter Bales, the famous penman, published on stenography in 1500; and John Willis published his "Stenographic" in 1602. There are now numerous systems: Byrom's (1750), Gurney's (1753), Taylor's (1756), Pitman's (phonographic), (1837).

STEPHEN'S CHAPEL, Str., Westminster. The commons of London held their assemblies in this chapel, which was built by King Stephen, and dedicated about 1135. It was rebuilt by Edward III. in 1347, and by him made a collegiate church, to which a dean and twelve secular priests were appointed. Soon after its surrender to Edward VI., about 1548, it was applied to the use of Parliament. See Parliament. It was destroyed by fire, Oct. 16, 1834. The Society of Antiquaries published memorials of it about 1810; and Mr. Mackenzie's work appeared in 1844.

STEPHENSON, Forr., at Lower Sandusky, was garri- soned by 150 men under Major George Croghan, in the summer of 1813. They were attacked on the 2d of August by 500 British regulars and between 700 and 800 Indians, under Colonel Proctor. The fort was nobly defended, and the enemy withdrew. The Americans lost 1 killed and 7 wounded; the assailants lost 150 men.

STEREOCHROMY, a mode of painting in which water-glass (an alkaline solution of flint, silice) serves as the connecting medium between the color and the substratum. Its invention is ascribed to Von Fuchs, who died at Munich on March 5, 1856. Fine specimens of this art by Kaulbach and Echter exist in the Museum at Berlin, and also at Munich.

STEREOMETER, by which is compassed the art of taking the contents of vessels of liquids by gauging, invented about 1350.—Anderson. M. Say's stereometer, for determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, and powders as well as solids, was described in 1797.

STEREOSCOPE (from stereos, solid, and skopein, to see), an optical instrument for representing in apparent relief natural objects, etc., by uniting into one image two plane representations of these objects as seen by each eye separately. The first stereoscope by reflection was constructed and exhibited by Professor Charles Wheatstone in 1838, who announced its principle in 1833. Since 1854, stereoscopes have been greatly improved.

STEREOTYPE (a cast from a page of movable printing—types). It is said that stereotyping was known in 1711. It was practiced by Wm. Ged, of Edinburgh, about 1730. Some of Ged's plates are at the Royal Institution, London.* A Mr. James attempted to introduce Ged's process in London, but failed, about 1735.—Nichols. Stereotype printing was in use in Holland in the last century, and a quarto Bible and a Dutch folio Bible were printed there.—Phillips. It was revived in London by Wilson in 1804. Since 1850 the durability of stereotypes has been greatly increased by electrotyping them with copper or silver.

STERLING (money). Camden derives the word from asterling or esterling, observing that the money brought from the east of Germany, in the reign of Richard I., was the most esteemed on account of its purity, being called in old deeds "nummi asterling."

STETHOSCOPE. In 1816, Laënnec, of Paris, by rolling a quire of paper into a kind of cylinder, and applying one end to the patient's chest and the other to his own ear, perceived the action of the heart in a much more distinct manner than by the immediate application of the ear. This led to his inventing the stethoscope, or "breast-explorer," the principle of which, now termed "auscultation," was known by Hippocrates.

STEWARD OF ENGLAND, LORD HIGH. The first grand officer of the crown. This office was established prior to the reign of Edward the Confessor, and was formerly annexed to the lordship of Hinckley, Leicestershire, belonging to the family of Montfort, earls of Leicester, who were, in right thereof, lord high stewards of England; but Simon de Montfort, the last earl of this family, having raised a rebellion against his sovereign, Henry III., was attainted, and his estate forfeited to the king, who abolished the office, 1265.

* In the library of this institution is an edition of Sallust (printed at Edinburgh by William Ged of Edinburgh, goldsmith, not with movable types, as is commonly done, but with cast tablets or plates, with this imprint: "Edinburgi, Gulielmus Ged, aurifaber Edinensis, non typis mobilibus, ut vulgo fieri solet, sed tabellis seu laminis fusiis, excudebat. 1744."

It is now revived only pro hac vice, at a coronation, or the trial of a peer. The first afterward appointed was Thomas, second son of Henry IV. The first for the trial of a peer was Edward, earl of Devon, on the arraignment of the Earl of Huntingdon, in 1400. The last was Lord Denman, at the trial of the Earl of Cardigan, Feb. 16, 1841. The Duke of Hamilton was lord high steward at the coronations of William IV. and Victoria.

STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD, LORD (an ancient office), has the sole direction of the king's house below stairs: he has no formal grant of his office, but receives his charge from the sovereign in person, who, delivering to him a white wand, the symbol of his office, says, "Seneschal, tenez le baton de notre maison." This officer has been called lord steward since 1540; previously to the 31st of Henry VIII. he was styled grand master of the household. His function as a judge was abolished in 1849.

STICKLESTADT (Norway). Here Olaf II., aided by the Swedes, was defeated in his endeavors to recover his kingdom from Canute, king of Denmark, and slain, July 29, 1050. He was afterward sainted, on account of his zeal for Christianity.

STIRRUPS were unknown to the ancients. Gracchus fitted the highways with stones to enable the horsemen to mount. Warriors had projections on their spears for the same purpose. Stirrups were used in the 5th century, but were not common even in the 12th.

STOCKHOLM, capital of Sweden, was fortified by Berger Jarl in 1254. Here the Swedish nobility were massacred by Christian II. in 1523.

Treaty of Stockholm, between the King of Great Britain and the Queen of Sweden, by which the former acquired the duchies of Bremen and Verden as Elector of Brunswick, Nov. 20, 1719. Treaty of Stockholm, between Sweden and Russia, in favor of the Duke of Holstein-Gottorp, Mar. 24, 1724. Another between England and Sweden, March 3, 1813.

STOCKINGS of silk were first worn by Henry II. of France, 1547. In 1560 Queen Elizabeth was presented with a pair of knit black silk stockings by her silk-woman, Mrs. Montague, and she never wore cloth ones any more.—Hovell. He adds, "Henry VIII. wore ordinary cloth hose, except there came from Spain, by great chance, a pair of silk stockings; for Spain very early abounded with silk." Edward VI. was presented with a pair of Spanish silk stockings by his merchant, Sir Thomas Gresham, and the present was then much taken notice of.—Idem. Others relate that William Rider, a London apprentice, seeing at the house of an Italian merchant a pair of knit worsted stockings from Mantua, made a pair like them, the first made in England, which he presented to the Earl of Pembroke, 1564.—Stow. The art of weaving stockings in a frame was invented in England by the Rev. Mr. Lee, of Cambridge, in 1589, twenty-five years after he had learned to knit them with wires or needles. Cotton stockings were first made in 1730. See Cotton.

STOCKPORT (in Cheshire) has become eminent on account of the cotton trade. Heaton Norris, in Lancashire, is united to it by a bridge over the river. Here the Manchester blanketeers were dispersed, March 11, 1817; and here was a serious religious riot, when two Roman Catholic chapels were destroyed, and the houses of many Roman Catholics were gutted, and their furniture and other contents smashed or burnt, June 29, 1852.

STOCKS, in which drunkards were placed. The last in London was removed from St. Clement's Danes, Strand, Aug. 4, 1826.

STOCKS. The public funding system originated in Venice about 1173, and was introduced into Florence in 1340. The English funding system may be said to have had its rise in 1690.

Act to prevent stock-jobbing, passed March, 1734; repealed. 1560

The foundation of the Stock Exchange, in the Court, the residence of the lord mayor, Sir Wm. Capel, in 1504, was laid on May 18, 1801. It was then the first stone that the public debt was then £552,730,924.

The memorable Stock Exchange hoax, for which Lord Cochrane, the celebrated Admiral Johnstone, and others were convicted, Feb. 22, 1814. Lord Cochrane was in consequence expelled the House of Commons. His innocence was afterward proved, and he was restored to his rank by King William IV., and to the honors belonging to it by Queen Victoria.

STOICS, disciples of Zeno, the philosopher (about 290 B.C.); obtained the name because they listened to his instructions in a porch or portico at Athens, called in Greek Stoa. Zeno taught that man's supreme happiness consisted in living agreeably to nature and reason, and that God was the soul of the world.—Stanley.

STOKE (near Newark, Nottinghamshire). Near here, on June 16, 1487, the adherents of Lambert Simnel, who personated Edward, earl of Warwick, and claimed the crown, were defeated by Henry VII. John de la Pole, the earl of Lincoln, and most of the leaders, were slain; and Simnel, whose life was spared, was afterward employed in the king's household.

STONE BUILDINGS, Etc. Stone buildings were introduced into England, 670. A stone bridge was built at Bow in 1087, and is accounted the first; but a bridge exists at Crowland which is said to have been built in 860. See Bridges. The first stone building in Ireland was a castle, 1161. See Building. Stone china-ware was made by Wedgwood in 1762. Artificial stone for statues was manufactured by a Neapolitan, and introduced into England, 1776. Stone paper was made in 1776. See Ransome's Artificial Stone.

STONE FERRY, BATTLE OF. The British army, under General Prevost, menaced Charleston in May, 1779. They withdrew, but some lingered a month upon John's Island, and at Stone Ferry, ten miles below Charleston, were attacked on the 20th of June by a part of Lincoln's army. After a severe engagement the Americans were repulsed. The British lost about 270; the Americans, 300.

STONEHENGE (on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire) is said to have been erected on the counsel of Merlin, by Aurelius Ambrosius, in memory of 460 Britons who were murdered by Hengist the Saxon, about 450.—Geoffrey of Monmouth. Erected as a sepulchral monument of Ambrosius, 500.—Polydore Vergil. An ancient temple of the Britons, in which the Druids officiated.—Dr. Stukeley. The Britons had annual meetings at Abury and Stonehenge, where laws were made, justice administered, and heinous crimes punished.

STONE OPERATION. Extracting stone from the bladder was first performed by Ammonius of Alexandria about 240. Cutting for the stone was first performed on a criminal at Paris, in 1474, with success. A remedy discovered by Mrs. Stevens, for which she was rewarded by government, 1739. See Lithotomy.

STONE RIVER (Tennessee), BATTLE OF, fought December 31, 1862—January 2, 1863. The battle was fought on the banks of Stone River, a stream which, flowing eastward, crosses the pike a mile north of Murfreesborough, where it abruptly changes its course, flowing northward parallel with the road. On the 31st of December both Rosecrans and Bragg determined to attack, and each had his left massed against the antagonist's right. Bragg completed his preparations first, and disarranged Rosecrans's plan. The Union right was badly cut up; but a new line was formed, against which Bragg hurled his troops in vain. On January 2 Rosecrans attacked Bragg with such marked success that, on the 3d, the latter retreated to Duck River, and the National army occupied Murfreesborough. Each commander claimed that he was largely outnumbered. The Confederate loss was 10,000; the National, 12,000.

STONINGTON, DEFENSE OF. This borough, on Long Island Sound, in the eastern part of Connecticut, was assailed by the British, under Commodore Hardy, on the 9th of August, 1813. A cannonade and bombardment ensued for two or three days. Less than 20 men, with 3 cannon, successfully defended the place and prevented the British landing from their boats. The Americans had 6 men wounded; the British lost 21 men killed and 59 wounded.

STONY CREEK, or BURLINGTON HEIGHTS, at the west end of Lake Ontario, in Upper Canada, was the scene of a night assault upon 1300 American troops, under General Chandler, on the 6th of June, 1813, by a British force of about 800 men, under General Vincent. The Americans lost 17 men killed, 83 wounded, and 5 officers and 93 men made prisoners. Among the latter were Generals Chandler and Winder.

STONY POINT, CAPTURE OF. Stony Point is a rough promontory on the west shore of the Hudson, a few miles below the lower entrance to the Highlands. The British were in possession of works there in the summer of 1779. General Wayne led a force of light infantry to storm it on the night of the 15th of July, 1779, and at two o'clock that morning he wrote to Washington, "The fort and garrison, with Colonel Johnson, are ours." The British lost, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, about 600 men; the Americans lost 15 killed and 83 wounded. The spoils were a large amount of military stores. Thanks and a gold medal were given to Wayne by Congress.

STORMS. The following are among the best authenticated and most memorable. In London a storm raged which destroyed 1500 houses, 944. One in several parts of England, the sky being very dark, the wind coming from the S.W.; many churches were destroyed; and in London 500 houses fell, Oct. 5, 1691. One on the coast of Calais, when Hugh de Beauvais and several thousand foreigners, on their voyage to assist King John against the barons, perished, 1215.—Holinshed. See Meteorology.

It thundered 15 days successively, with tempests of rain and wind, 1233.

Storm with violent lightnings; one flash passed through a chamber where Edward I. and his queen were conversing, did them no damage, but killed two of their attendants, 1255.—Hooveden.

Violent storm of hail near Chartres, in France, which fell on the army of Edward III. then on its march. The hail was so large that the army and horses suffered very much, and Edward was obliged to conclude a peace, 1339.—Matt. Paris.

When Richard II.'s queen came from Bohemia, on her setting foot on shore an awful storm arose, and her ship and a number of others were dashed to pieces in the harbor, Jan., 1382.—Holinshed.

Richard's second queen also brought a storm with her to the English coasts, in which the king's baggage was lost, and many ships cast away, 1396.—Idem.

Hurricane throughout Europe, which did very considerable damage, on Sept. 3, 1658, the day that Cromwell died.—Mortimer.

Storm on the east coast of England: 900 colliers and coasters lost, with most of their crews, 1696.

The "Great Storm," one of the most terrible that ever raged in England. The devastation on land was immense; and in the harbors and on the coasts, the loss in shipping and in lives was still greater, Nov. 26-27, 1703.

Snow-storm in Sweden, when 7000 Swedes, it is said, perished upon the mountains, in their march to attack Drontheim, 1719.

* The loss sustained in London alone was calculated at £2,000,000 sterling. The number of persons drowned in the floods of the Severn and Thames, and lost on the coast of Holland, and in ships blown from their anchors and never heard of afterward, is thought to have been 8000. Twelve men-of-war, with more than 1800 men on board, were lost within sight of their own shore. Trees were torn up by the roots, 17,000 of them in Kent alone. The Eddystone light-house was destroyed, and in it the ingenious contriver of it, Winstanley, and the persons who were with him. The Bishop of Bath and Wells and his lady were killed in bed in their palace in Somersetshire. Multitudes of cattle were also lost: in one level 15,000 sheep were drowned.

One in India, when many hundreds of vessels were cast away, a fleet of Indianmen greatly damaged, and some ships lost, and 30,000 persons perished, Oct. 11, 1737. Dreadful hurricane at Havana: many public edifices and 4048 houses were destroyed, and 1000 inhabitants perished, Oct. 25, 1763.

Awful storm in the North of England, in which many vessels were destroyed, and four Dublin packets foundered, Oct. 29, 1775.

One at Surat, in the East Indies; destroyed 7000 of the inhabitants, April 22, 1782.

One hundred and thirty-one villages and farms laid waste in France, 1785.

One general throughout Great Britain: several hundred sail of shipping destroyed or damaged, Oct. 6, 1794.

One which did vast damage in London, and throughout almost the whole of England, Nov. 8, 1800.

A tremendous storm throughout Great Britain and Ireland, by which immense damage was done, and many ships wrecked, Dec. 16-17, 1814.

An awful gale, by which a great number of vessels were lost, and much damage was done to the shipping in general on the English coast, Aug. 31, 1816.

Dreadful hurricane, ravaged the Leeward Islands, from the 20th to 22d Sept., 1819. At the island of St. Thomas alone, 104 vessels were lost.

Great storm along the coast from Durham to Cornwall; many vessels lost, Nov., 1821.

In Ireland, particularly in the vicinity of Dublin, many houses were thrown down, and vast numbers unroofed, Dec. 12, 1822.

Awful storm on the coast of England: many vessels lost, and 13 driven ashore and wrecked in Plymouth alone, Jan. 12-13, 1823.

At Gibraltar, where more than 100 vessels were destroyed, Feb. 18, 1828.

Dreadful storm at the Cape of Good Hope, where immense property was lost, July 16, 1831.

A hurricane visited London and its neighborhood, which did great damage to the buildings, but without the destruction of human life, though many serious accidents occurred, Oct. 28, 1835.

Awful hurricane on west coast of England and in Ireland. The storm raged through Cheshire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire; 20 persons were killed in Liverpool by the falling of buildings, and 100 were drowned in the neighborhood; the coast and harbors were covered with wrecks, the value of two of the vessels lost being nearly half a million sterling. In Limerick, Galway, Athlone, and other places, more than 200 houses were blown down, and as many more were burnt, the winds spreading the fires. Dublin suffered dreadfully; London and its neighborhood scarcely sustained any damage, Jan. 6-7, 1839.

Fearful storm on the coast of the U. S., totally demolishing the Minot's Ledge Light in Boston Harbor, April 19, 1851.

[The winter of 1852-3 (Dec. and Jan.) was one of storms, many of which were very destructive, particularly to shipping.]

Great storm in the Black Sea, Nov. 13-16, 1854, causing much loss of life, shipping, and stores sent for the allied armies in the Crimea.

Great storm on N. coast of Europe, etc., Dec. 31, 1854.

Great storm on N.E. coast of Scotland; 42 fishermen lost, Nov. 23, 1857.

Dreadful storm on the night of Oct. 25-26: the Royal Charter totally lost, and many other vessels; another storm Oct. 31, and Nov. 1, 1859.

Great storm in the Channel, causing much loss of life and property, Jan. 1, 1860.

Dreadful gales, doing much mischief, Feb. 26, 27, 28; May 28; and June 2, 1860.

Great storm: part of the Crystal Palace blown down; Chichester Cathedral steeple fell, Feb. 20, 21, 1861.

Great storm on British coasts, 143 wrecks, May 28, 1861.

Storm on the northeast; 50 wrecks, Nov. 13, 14, 1861.

At Market Laverton, etc.; hail six and seven feet deep; much damage to crops; Sept. 2, 1862.

Storm on British coasts; very many wrecks; Oct. 19, 20, 1862.

There were severe gales, doing much damage and loss of life, Jan. 19, etc., 1863; and Jan. 14, etc., 1865. See under Wrecks.

Dreadful hurricane in the Indian Ocean, etc. (see Cyclone, Calcutta), Oct. 5, 1864.

Hurricane at Lisbon causes much damage; worst for many years, Dec. 13, 1864.

Severe gales; many vessels and lives lost (see Wrecks), Jan. 6-11, 1866.

STORTHING, the Norwegian Parliament, said to have been first held at Bergen by Hacho V. in 1223.

STOVES. The ancients used stoves which concealed the fire, as the German stoves yet do. They lighted the fire also in a large tube in the middle of the room, the roof being open. Apartments were warmed by portable braziers. Stoves on this old principle, improved, continue in use in many houses and public establishments in England, and generally on the Continent. See Chimneys and Cottager's Stove.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, including Malacca, Penang or Prince of Wales Island, and Singapore, were made a separate dependency of the British crown in 1853, and placed under the governor general of India.

STRAND (London). Houses were first built upon the Strand about 1353, at which period it was the court end of the town, or formed the communication between the two cities of London and Westminster, being then open to the Thames and to the fields. Somerset and other palaces were erected 1549-1605.—Stov. The Strand Bridge was commenced Oct. 11, 1811. See Waterloo Bridge. The Strand improvements were commenced in 1829.

STRASBURG, the Roman Argentoratum, the capital of Alsace. Here Julian defeated the Allemanni, 357. This town, formerly imperial, was taken by Louis XIV. in 1681. The citadel and fortifications which he constructed have been so much augmented that Strasburg may be considered one of the strongest places in Europe. It was confirmed to France by the peace of Ryswick in 1697. Strasburg is remarkable for its magnificent cathedral and tower, the latter the loftiest in the world. An attempt at insurrection in the city was made Oct. 30, 1836, by Prince Louis Napoleon (afterward President of the French Republic, and now Emperor), aided by two officers and some privates. It was instantly suppressed by their arrest. The prince was then shipped off to America by the French government. See France.

STRATHCLYUD, a kingdom formed by the Britons, who retired northward after the Saxon Conquest, about 560. It extended from the Clyde to Cumberland. The Britons in it submitted to Edward the Elder in 924.

STRATHMORE, COUNTESS OF. Miss Bowes, of Durham, the then richest heiress in Europe, whose fortune was £1,040,000, with vast additions on her mother's death, and immense estates on the demise of her uncle, married the Earl of Strathmore, Feb. 25, 1766. Having, after the earl's death, married Mr. Stoney, she was forcibly carried off by him and other armed men, Nov. 10, 1786. She was brought up to the King's Bench by habeas corpus and released, and he committed to prison, Nov. 23. The lady recovered her estates, which she had assigned to her husband under the influence of terror, in May, 1788.

STRATTON HILL, BATTLE OF, in Cornwall, May 16, 1643, between the royal army under Sir Ralph Hopton, and the forces of the Parliament under the Earl of Stamford. The victory was gained over the Parliamentarians, who lost numbers in killed and wounded.

STRAWBERRY HILL, the Gothic villa of Horace Walpole, erected by him, 1753-76, at Twickenham, near London. In April and May, 1842, his collection of pictures, and articles of taste and virtue, were sold by auction for £29,615 8s. 9d.

STREET MUSIC. An act was passed in 1864 for the better regulation of street music in the metropolitan police districts.

STREET RAILWAYS, previously established by Mr. Train in New York, were opened by him at Birkbehead, Cheshire, Aug. 30, 1860, and at Bayswater, London, March 23, 1861. A Street Railway Bill was rejected by the House of Commons in April, 1861. Several of these railways existed for a time in various parts of the metropolis in 1861, but were all taken up in 1862.

STRELITZ, the imperial guard of Russia, established by Ivan IV. in 1568. Becoming frequently seditious, it was suppressed by Peter the Great; great numbers were put to death, many by the czar's own hand, 1697-1704.

STRIKES. See Preston and London, 1859-1861. The tailors of London struck for increase of wages in April, 1834. The strike of the calico-printers of Glasgow lasted nine months in 1834. The strike of the amalgamated engineers took place in 1852; and of the London cabmen, July 27-30, 1853. A strike among the silk-workers at Coventry came to an end, Aug. 30, 1860. An unsuccessful attempt to get up a strike in the building trade began March 23, 1861. A strike of the puddlers in the iron trade occurred in the spring of 1865. See Iron.

STRONTIUM. The native carbonate of strontia was discovered at Strontian, in Argyleshire, in 1787. Sir Humphry Davy first obtained from it the metal strontium in 1808.

STRYCHNIA, a poisonous alkaloid, discovered in 1818 by Pelletier and Cavenou in the seeds of the strychnus ignatia and nux vomica, and also in the upas poison. It is so virulent that half a grain blown into the throat of a rabbit occasions death in four minutes; its operation is accompanied by lock-jaw. Much attention was given to strychnia in 1856, during the trial of William Palmer, who was executed for the murder of Cook, June 14, 1856.

STUCCO-WORK was known to the ancients, and was much prized by them, particularly by the Romans, who excelled in it.—Abbé Lenglet. It was revived by D'Udine about 1550; and in Italy, France, and England in the 18th century.

STYLE. The style was altered by Augustus Cæsar's ordering leap-year to be once in four years, and the month Sextilis to be called Augustus, 8 B.C. See New Style.

STYLE ROYAL. See Majesty and Titles. The styles of the English sovereigns are given in the later editions of Nicolas's "Chronology of History."

SUABIA, a province in S. Germany: was conquered by Clovis, and incorporated into the kingdom of the Franks, 496. After various changes of rulers, it was made a duchy by the Emperor Conrad I. in 912, for Erchanger; according to some, in 916, for Burckhardt. The duchy became hereditary in the house of Hohenstaufen in 1080. Duke Frederick III. became Emperor of Germany as Frederick I. (usually styled Barbarossa, red beard), in 1152. Conradin, his descendant, was defeated at the battle of Tagliacozzo (which see) in 1268, and beheaded shortly after. The breaking up of the duchy gave rise to many of the small German states; part of Suabia is included in Württemberg and Switzerland. Suabia was made a circle of the empire in 1387 and 1500.

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH. See Telegraph (under Electricity).

SUBSIDIES. Subsidies to the kings of England formerly granted in kind, particularly in wool; 30,000 sacks were voted to Edward III. on account of the war with France, 1340.—Anderson. Subsidies were raised upon the subjects of England by James I., 1624; but they were contained in a bill for the redress of grievances, 1639. Four subsidies were granted to Charles II. in 1663. England granted subsidies to foreign powers in several wars, particularly in the war against the revolutionists of France, and the war against Bonaparte. One of the most remarkable of these latter was June 20, 1800, when a treaty of subsidies was ratified at Vienna between Austria and England, stipulating that the war should be vigorously prosecuted against France, and that neither of the contracting powers should enter into a separate peace. Subsidies to Austria, Prussia, Russia, the Porte, and other powers, were afterward given by England to the amount of many millions sterling.—Phillips.

SUCCESSION ACTS. See Settlement.

SUCCESSION DUTY ACT (16 & 17 Vict., c. 51), after much discussion, was passed Aug. 4, 1853. By this act the legacy duty was extended to real estate, and was made payable on succession to both landed and personal property.

SUCCESSION, WAR OF (1702-1713), distinguished by the achievements of the Duke of Marlborough and the Earl of Peterborough, and their unprofitable results, arose on the question whether an Austrian prince or a French prince should succeed to the throne of Spain. The British court opposed Louis, and Marlborough was victorious; but the Allies withdrew one after another, and the French prince succeeded. See Spain, Utrecht.

SUSBURY, in Suffolk, was disfranchised for bribery in 1848.

SUEVI, a warlike Gothic tribe, which, with the Alani and the Visigoths, entered Spain about 408, were overcome by the latter, and absorbed into their kingdom about 554.

SUEZ CANAL. The project is not entirely a modern one. According to Herodotus, the Egyptian King Necho, about 650 B.C., built a canal from the Nile to Suez, 105 miles long, and wide enough for two galleys. When Napoleon was in Egypt in 1798, he requested his chief civil engineer, M. Lepère, to survey and report upon the practicability of a canal between the two seas. The only result of this was to give rise to a blunder which prevailed for a considerable time—the notion that there was a difference of 32½ feet between the level of the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, son of the French vice-consul in the time of Mohammed Ali, was intimately acquainted with Said Pacha, the late Viceroy of Egypt. He suggested to Said Pacha, in 1854, the scheme of the maritime canal from sea to sea. The pacha (who had not then assumed the title of viceroy) took it up with alacrity; M. Lesseps came to Paris and London for the means. He formed a company, named the "Compagnie Universelle du Canal Maritime de Suez," which was to undertake the works. The canal, with its ports at each end, when finished, was to be the property of the company for ninety-nine years, after which it would belong to the Egyptian government. Meantime, that government was to receive annually 15 per cent. of the traffic earnings. The tolls charged for passage were always to be equal for ships of all nations. The company was to take all the land wanted for the construction of the canal, and to quarry the stone for building free of cost. These conditions of the original agreement are still in force; but some other conditions, relating to the supply of labor by the forced service of 20,000 fellahs, or Egyptian peasants, ordinarily bound to work, by way of feudal tribute, on the viceroy's estates, have since been altered; the company has also been deprived of the right of selling or leasing the lands ceded to it; and the Fresh-water Canal, from Suez to Ismailia, and thence to Zagazig, which runs parallel with the intended maritime canal for half its length, has been sold by the company to the viceroy. The share capital of the company is eight millions sterling, besides which four millions sterling have been raised on debentures, and nearly four millions paid by the viceroy as indemnity for the non-fulfillment of conditions above mentioned, and for the resumption of the lands and Fresh-water Canal. The Maritime Canal is to extend from the harbor of Port Said, on the Pelusian coast of the Mediterranean, to the port of Suez, at the head of the Red Sea. The length of the canal is not quite a hundred miles. Its depth throughout is to be 26 feet; its general width is to be 246 feet at the base, and 328 feet at the top of the banks, except in some portions of the line where it has to be cut through high ground; the width is here reduced to 190 feet at the upper part. There will be no locks on the Maritime Canal. Vessels will be able to steam through, or be towed through, from sea to sea, in about sixteen hours. On leaving Port Said the canal enters Lake Menzaleh, through which the channel runs for twenty-nine miles. The waters of this lake are shallow, and the bottom composed of mud. The characteristics of the first half of the Maritime Canal are, that about thirty-four miles of its course lie through lakes; the remainder through elevated plateaux. On August 15, 1863, the flood-gates of the smaller Suez Canal were opened, the fresh water from the Nile was admitted, and a coal vessel passed from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea. On Oct. 15, 1868, out of 96,938,066 cubic yards to be excavated and dredged, there remained 29,775,550 cubic yards to complete the undertaking. The present monthly out-turn of the dredging-machines insures the completion of the canal by the time promised—that is, by October 1, 1869. Manual labor is employed where the working level is above the reach of the dredges. The Lake Timshah is now transformed into a Mediterranean lake, nine miles in circumference. The water required to fill it was about 95,000,000 cubic yards, March, 1869. The Maritime Canal is actually made and opened from Port Said to Ismailia. The Fresh-water Canal is open from Ismailia to Suez.

SUFFRAGAN BISHOPS. Power to appoint them was given by Parliament in 1534 to Henry VIII. as head of the Church. See Supremacy.

SUGAR* (Saccharum officinarum) is supposed to have been known to the ancient Jews. Found in the East Indies by Nearchus, admiral of Alexander, 325 B.C.—Strabo. An Oriental nation in alliance with

* Sugar, long considered a neutral substance, without congeners, has of late years become the head of a numerous family, daily increasing, viz.: Cane-sugar (saccharose), from the sugar-cane; boiled with dilute acids it yields glucose; fruit-sugar (from many recent fruits); grape-sugar (glucose); from dried fruits and altered starch; sugar of milk; Melisso (from Eucalyptus, by Berthelot in 1856); sorbin (from the berries of the mountain ash, by Pelouze); insulin (from muscular tissue, Scherer); dulcose (by Laurent); marmite (from marmite, obtained from the Fraxinus Ornus, a kind of ash); querulose (from acorns); to these have been lately added mycose, by M. Mitscherlich, and meliacetose and trehalose, by M. Berthelot.

Pompey used the juice of the cane as a common beverage.—Lacuna. The best sugar was produced in India.—Pliny. It was prescribed as a medicine by Galen. Brought into Europe from Asia, A.D. 625. In large quantities, 1150. It was attempted to be cultivated in Italy; but, not succeeding, the Portuguese and Spaniards carried it to America about 1510.* Our chief importations of sugar are from the British West Indies, the East Indies, Mauritius, and Brazil. Sugar was first taxed by name, 1 James II., 1685. The previous customs duties upon sugar were repealed, and moderated duties substituted, by the act 9 & 10 Vict., c. 63, passed Aug. 18, 1846, by which act the same duties were levied upon the sugar of foreign countries as levied upon sugar the produce of British colonies: annually reduced until July 5, 1851. The importations of sugar have in consequence considerably increased, and amounted in 1852 to upward of 8,000,000 cwts., paying a duty exceeding £4,000,000 sterling. Sugar imported in 1854, 9,112,564 cwts.; in 1864, 10,767,538 cwts. In 1855, the duty was increased, but was reduced in 1864.† Sugar was extracted from beet-root in France, by Achard, in 1799, and has been since largely manufactured.

SUGAR REFINING was made known to Europeans by a Venetian, 1503, and was first practiced in England in 1659, though some say that they had the art a few years earlier. Dr. Scofield's improved processes were patented in 1848-50.

SUICIDE (from sui, self; cedere, to kill), the slayer of himself. The first instances recorded in Jewish history are those of Samson, about 1120, and Saul, 1055 B.C. The Greek and Roman philosophers deemed it a crime, and burned the offending hand apart from the rest of the body. In the early part of the Roman history, the only instance recorded occurs in the reign of Tarquin I., when the soldiers, thinking themselves disgraced by being ordered to make common sewers, destroyed themselves, 606 B.C. Instances afterward occurred, however, of illustrious men committing suicide, as Cato, 46 B.C.† In the Roman Catholic Church, in the 6th century, it was ordained that no commemoration should be made in the Eucharist for such as committed self-murder. This ecclesiastical law continued till the Reformation, when it was admitted into the statute law of England by the authority of Parliament, with the confiscation of land and goods. Till 1523 the body of the suicide was directed to be buried in a cross-road, and a stake to be driven through it.

* About the year 1128 the sugar-cane was transported from Tripoli and Syria to Sicily, thence to Madeira, and finally to the West Indies and America. It is not known at what date sugar was introduced into England, but it seems to have been prior to the reign of Henry VIII. Mr. Whitaker, in the History of Wiltshire, p. 129, quotes an earlier instance in 1497. A manuscript letter from Sir Edward Wotton to Lord Cobham, dated Calais, 6th March, 1546, advertises him that Sir Edward had taken up for his lordship twenty-five sugar-leaves, at six shillings a load, "which is eight pence a pound."

† In 1840, the imports of sugar into the United Kingdom were nearly 5,000,000 cwts., of which nearly four millions were for home consumption; and the duty amounted to about five millions and a half sterling. In 1850 the imports were 8,285,734 cwts., and the reduced duty amounted to £4,138,951; in 1853, 7,272,833 cwts. were retained for home consumption; duty, £4,083,836; in 1859, 8,641,920 cwts. were retained for home consumption; duty, £5,303,909; in 1864, 8,307,708 cwts. were retained.

‡ There have been three instances of self-destruction by fire; that of the philosopher Empedocles, who threw himself into the crater of Mount Etna; of a Frenchman, who, in imitation of him, threw himself, in 1820, into the crater of Vesuvius; and of an Englishman, who jumped into the furnace of a forge about the year 1811. Plutarch relates that an unaccountable passion for suicide seized the Milesian virgins, from which they could not be prevented by the tears and prayers of their friends; but a decree being issued that the body of every young maid who did self-murder should be drawn naked through the streets, a stop was soon put to the extraordinary frenzy.

SUITORS' FUND (in the Court of Chancery), in 1862, amounted to £1,290,000. As this money had no specific owner, a proposal was made by government to apply it to the building of new law-courts, payment of all legal claims being guaranteed. The scheme was deferred by Parliament.

SULLIVAN, FORT, DEFENSE OF. Fort Sullivan was upon Sullivan's Island, in Charleston Harbor, S. Carolina. It was built of palmetto logs and earth, and garrisoned by 500 men, under Colonel William Moultrie, in the spring of 1776. It was attacked by a fleet, under Sir Peter Parker, on the 28th of June, 1776. A conflict raged for almost ten hours. The fleet was dreadfully shattered, and finally repulsed. The British lost, in killed and wounded, 225; the garrison lost only 9 killed and 22 wounded. Moultrie was promoted for his gallantry, and the name of the fort was called Moultrie in his honor.

SULPHUR has been known from the earliest times. Basil Valentine mentions its production from green vitriol. Sulphuric acid (vitriol), produced from the burning of sulphur, was introduced into England about 1720. Sulphur has been the object of research of many eminent chemists during the present century, and many discoveries have been made, such as its allotropic condition, etc. It is the inflammable constituent in gunpowder.—The sulphur mines of Sicily have been wrought since the 16th century, but the exportation was inconsiderable till about 1820; in 1858 the trade increased so much that Great Britain alone imported 88,654 tons. In that year the Neapolitan government was induced to grant a monopoly of the trade to a French company; but a firm remonstrance from the British government led to a discontinuance of this impolitic restriction in 1841, which, however, gave a great and lasting impetus to the British sulphur manufacture.

SULTAN, a Turkish title, from the Arabic, signifying king of kings, and given to the Grand Signior or Emperor of Turkey. It was first given to the Turkish princes Angrolipetz and Musgad, about 1055.—Vattier. It was first given, according to others, to the Emperor Mahmoud, in the 4th century of the Hegira.

SUMPTUARY LAWS restrain excess in dress, furniture, eating, etc. Those of Zaleucus ordained that no woman should go attended by more than one maid in the street, unless she were drunk; and that she should not wear gold or embroidered apparel, unless she designed to act unchastely, 450 B.C.—Diog. Laert. The Lex Orchia among the Romans (181 B.C.) limited the guests at feasts, and the number and quality of the dishes at an entertainment; and it also enforced that during supper, which was the chief meal among the Romans, the doors of every house should be left open. The English sumptuary laws, chiefly of the reigns of Edward III. and Henry VIII., were repealed in 1556. See Dress.

SUN. * Pythagoras taught that the sun was one of the twelve spheres about 529 B.C. The relative distances of the sun and moon were first calculated geometrically by Aristarchus, who also maintained the stability of the sun, about 280 B.C. Numerous theories were ventured during fifteen centuries, and astronomy lay neglected until about A.D. 1200, when it was brought into Europe by the Moors of Barbary and Spain. The Copernican system was made known in 1530. See Copernican System and Solar System. Galileo and Newton maintained that the sun was an igneous globe. The transit of Mercury was observed by Gassendi.

By the observations of Dr. Halley on the spot which darkened the sun's disk in July and August, 1676, he established the certainty of its motion round its own axis.

Parallax of the sun, Dr. Halley.....1702
Solar spots were first observed by Fabricius and Harriot in 1610. A macula three times the size of the earth passed the sun's centre April 21, 1706, and frequently since.

Herschel measured two spots, whose length together exceeded 50,000 miles.....April 19, 1779
Since 1851 much attention has been given to the luminous protuberances observed on the edge of the sun's disk during a total eclipse. On July 13, 1860, Mr. Warren de la Rue took two photographs at the time of total obscuration. "Solar physics" especially studied by Messrs. Warren de la Rue, Balfour, Stewart, etc.....1865-6

SUNCION, TREATY of, between General Urquiza, director of the Argentine Confederation, and C. A. Lopez, president of the republic of Paraguay, recognizing the independence of Paraguay, July 15, 1852.

SUNDAY, or LORD'S DAY. Most nations have counted one day in seven holy. Sunday was anciently the day on which divine adoration was paid to the Sun. Among Christians it is commonly called Dies Dominica, or Lord's day, on account of our Savior's appearance on that day after his resurrection. The first civil law that was issued for the observance of this day combined it with that of the seventh-day Sabbath and other festivals (Eusebius, Life of Constantine), and it was followed by several imperial edicts in favor of this day, which are extant in the body of Roman law, the earliest being that of Constantine the Great, dated March 7, 321.—Corpus Juris Civilis. See Sabbath; Sabbatarians; Sports, Book of, etc.

* The estimated diameter is 882,000 miles, and the distance from the earth, till lately given as 95,000,000 miles, has been recently corrected to 94,000,000, by the result of the experiments and calculations of N. M. Fizeau and Foucault (1864). The error corrected corresponds to the apparent breadth of a human hair at 125 feet, or of a sovereign at 8 miles off.—Herschel. The sun is now described as consisting of a solid or liquid nucleus, surrounded by a luminous envelope (photosphere), over which is a dense atmosphere, containing the vapors of various metals and other elements (1855). necessity and charity, on forfeiture of five shillings, 29 Charles II.....1677
The Sunday Act was passed in 1781. In March, 1855, Lord Robert Grosvenor (since Lord Ebury) introduced a bill to suppress Sunday trading. It met with much opposition and was withdrawn.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS were first established in England about 1751, by Robert Raikes, an eminent printer of Gloucester, conjointly with Dr. Stock. See Education and Sabbath-schools.

SUNDERLAND ADMINISTRATION, formed in 1718, arose out of a modification of the Stanhope ministry. After various changes, it was broken up in 1721. Charles, earl of Sunderland, First Lord of the Treasury, Earl Cowper, Lord Chancellor, Earl Stanhope and Mr. Craggs, Secretaries, Mr. Aislable, Chancellor of the Exchequer, etc.

SUN-DIALS were invented by Anaximander, 550 B.C.—Pliny, l. 2. The first put up at Rome was by Papius Cursor, at the temple of Quirinus, when time was divided into hours, 293 B.C. Sun-dials were first set up in churches, A.D. 613.—Langlet.

SUPERANNUATION ACT for the Civil Service was passed in April, 1859.

SUPREMACY over the Church was claimed by Pope Gelasius I. as bishop of Rome, 494. On Jan. 15, 1553, Henry VIII., by virtue of the act 26 Hen. VIII., c. 1, formally assumed the style of "on earth Supreme Head of the Church of England," which has been retained by all succeeding sovereigns. The Bishop of Rochester (Fisher) and the ex-lord chancellor (Sir Thomas More), and many others, were beheaded for denying the king's supremacy in 1535; and in 1578, John Nelson, a priest, and Thomas Sherwood, a young layman, were executed at Tyburn for the same offense.

SURAT (E. Indies). Before the English East India Company obtained possession of Bombay, the presidency of their affairs on the coast of Malabar was at Surat; and they had a factory here established under Captain Best in 1611. The Great Mogul had here an officer who was styled his admiral. An attack of the Mahratta chief Sivajee, on the British factory, was defeated by Sir George Oxenden, 1664. The English were again attacked in 1670, and 1702, and often subsequently. The East India Company, in 1759, fitted out an armament, which dispossessed the admiral of the castle; and, soon after, the possession of this castle was confirmed to them by the court of Delhi. Surat was vested in the British by treaty in 1800 and 1803.

SURGEONS, ROYAL COLLEGE OF. The first charter was granted by Henry VIII., 1540. Formerly barbers and surgeons were united, until it was enacted that "no person using any shaving or barbering in London shall occupy any surgery, letting of blood, or other matter excepting only the drawing of teeth." The surgeons obtained a new charter in 1745, 1800, and 1844. Since that period, various legislative and other important regulations have been adopted to promote their utility and respectability; and no person is legally entitled to practice as a surgeon in the cities of London and Westminster, or within seven miles of the former, who has not been examined at this college. The college in Lincoln's Inn Fields was remodeled in 1836, and the interior completed in 1837. The premises were enlarged in 1852-3. See Medical Council.

SURGERY. It was not until the age of Hippocrates that diseases were made a separate study from philosophy, etc., about 410 B.C. Hippocrates mentions the ambe, the ancient instrument with which they reduced dislocated bones. Celsus flourished about A.D. 17; Galen, 170; Aëtius, 500; Paulus Aëgineta, in 640. The Arabians revived surgery about 900; and in the 16th century a new era in the science began; between these periods surgery was confined to ignorant priests and barbers. Anatomy was cultivated under the illustrious Vesalius, the father of modern surgery, in 1538. Surgeons and doctors were exempted from bearing arms or serving on juries, 1513, at which period there were only thirteen in London. See Physic.

SURINAM (Dutch Guiana). The factories established by the English in 1640 were occupied by the Portuguese, 1643; by the Dutch, 1654; taken by the British, 1804; and restored to the Dutch, 1814.

SURNAMES first began in Greece and Egypt, as Soter, Savior; Axiator, conqueror; Euergetes, benefactor; Philopator, lover of his father; Philometor, lover of his mother, etc. Strato was surnamed Physicus, from his deep study of nature; Aristides was called the Just; Phocion, the Good; Plato, the Athenian Bee; Xenophon, the Attie Muse; Aristotle, the Stagwrit; Pythagoras, the Stonian Sage; Menecdemus, the Ecetrian Bull; Democritus, the Laughing Philosopher; Virgil, the Mantuan Swan, etc. Surnames were introduced into England by the Normans, and were adopted by the nobility about 1100. The old Normans used Fitz, which signifies son, as Fitz-herbert. The Irish used O for grandson, as O'Neal, O'Donnell. The Scottish Highlanders used Mac, as Macdonald, son of Donald. The Saxons added the word son to the father's name, as Williamson. Many of the most common surnames, such as Johnson, Wilson, Dyson, Nicholson, etc., were taken by Brabanters and other Flemings, who were naturalized in the reign of Henry VI., 1435. M. A. Lower's "Dictionary of English Surnames" was published in 1860.

SURPLICES. First worn by the Jewish priests, and said to have been first used in churches, 316, and encouraged by Pope Adrian, 786. Every minister saying public prayers shall wear a comely surplice with sleeves, Canon 57. The garb prescribed by stat. 2 Edw. VI., 1547; again, 1 Eliz., 1558; and 13 & 14 Chas. II., 1662.

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS (near London) were established in 1831 by Mr. Edward Cross, who brought hither the menagerie formerly at Exeter Change. Various picture models have been exhibited here since 1837, viz., Vesuvius, Iceland, etc., accompanied by fireworks. In 1856, a company which had taken the gardens erected a large yet elegant building for concerts, the architect being Mr. Horace Jones. On Oct. 19, 1856, when the hall contained about 9000 persons, attending to hear the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, seven were killed and thirty seriously injured by a false alarm of fire. In 1862 the hall was temporarily taken for the reception of the patients of St. Thomas's Hospital.

SURVEY. See Ordinance.

SUSPENSION BRIDGES. The oldest in the world is in China, near King-tung; it is formed of chains. Rope suspension bridges, from rocks to rocks, are also of Chinese origin. The bridge over the Menai Strait is a most surprising work. The Hungerford (or Charing Cross) Suspension Bridge, opened May 1, 1845, was removed to Clifton and opened there, Dec. 8, 1864. Parliament empowered the Commissioners of Woods to erect (among other improvements there) a suspension bridge at Battersea, Sept., 1846; and many bridges of similar construction have been erected in various parts of the kingdom. Lambeth and Westminster Suspension Bridge was opened Nov. 10, 1862. Early in 1869 there was opened to the public the longest suspension bridge in the world, connecting the village of Niagara Falls, U. S., with Clifton, in Canada. The bridge is 1268 feet long, the cables from which it is suspended being nearly 1900 feet; the towers are respectively 100 and 105 feet high. The Cincinnati and Covington Bridge was begun in 1856, and finished in 1867, at a cost of $1,750,000. The total length is 2252 feet, 1057 of which are from tower to tower, and the floor is 100 feet above low-water mark. See Menai Strait, Hungerford, Clifton, Niagara, etc.

SUSSEX, KINGDOM OF. See Britain.

SUTLEJ, a river in N.W. India, on the banks of which were fought the desperate battles of Aliwal and Soobraon (which see).

SUTTEES, the burning of widows. This custom began in India from one of the wives of "Bramah, the Son of God," sacrificing herself at his death, that she might attend him in heaven. So many as seventeen widows have burnt themselves on the funeral pile of a rajah; and in Bengal alone, 700 have thus perished, until lately, in each year. But the English government, after long discouraging suttees, formally abolished them, Dec. 7, 1829. They have since occasionally taken place. The wife of the son of the Rajah of Beygoon thus perished, June, 1864.

SVEABORG, a strong fortress in Finland, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Helsingfors: it is situated on seven rocky islands; the fortifications were commenced by the Swedes in 1748, and were not completed in 1789, when Finland was united to Russia, by whose government the works were zealously continued. It is termed the Gibraltar of the North. On Aug. 6, 1855, the English and a part of the French fleet anchored off Sveaborg, and bombarded it by mortar and gun-boats from the 9th to the 11th, causing the destruction of nearly all the principal buildings, including the dock-yard and arsenal. But few casualties and no loss of life ensued in the allied squadron. Success could not be pursued for want of mortars.

SWEARING ON THE GOSPELS, first used about 528, and introduced in judicial proceedings about 600.—Rapin. SWEDEN (N. Europe). The ancient inhabitants were the Fins, now the modern inhabitants of Finland, a diminutive race, who retired to their present territory on the appearance of the Scandinavians or Goths, who have ever since been masters of Sweden. See Scandinavia. The internal state of this kingdom is little known previously to the 11th century. By the union of Calmar in 1397, Sweden became a province of Denmark, and was not rescued from this subjection till 1521, when Gustavus Vasa recovered the kingdom from the Danish yoke. He became king in 1523, and his descendants ruled till 1809. The government of Sweden is a limited monarchy. The Diet consists of four orders, the nobles, the clergy, the peasants, and the burghers, and meet every three years (last time Oct. 15, 1865). The king is, as in Britain, the head of the executive. There are two universities, Upsal and Lund; and Sweden can boast, among its great men, Linnaeus, Celsus, Scheele, Bergman, Berzelius, Thordwaldsen, and Andersen. Population of Sweden (1863), 4,022,564; of Norway (1855), 1,490,007.

SWEDENBORGIANS, a sect (calling themselves
 "the New Church," or "the New Jerusalem Church") which holds the opinions of Baron Emanuel Swedenborg (born at Stockholm, 1688; died at London, 1772).
 He stated that he began to receive spiritual manifestations, etc., in 1745, of which an account is given in his numerous works. The sect arose about 1760, and began to spread in 1783 in England, where there were 50 congregations in 1851.

SWEET BAY, Laurus nobilis, was brought to En-ca, 1714. Laurus aggregata, or the Glaucom Laurel, came from China in 1806.

SWING. Between 1830 and 1833 many haystacks and barns were fired in the rural districts of England, and attributed to an imaginary person named "Swing." Many persons were caught and punished.
 The probable cause was disputes between the farmers and their deluded laborers.

SWITHIN, St., lived in the 9th century, and, having been the preceptor to King Ethelwolf, was by that prince made Bishop of Winchester in 852. The tradition, that if it rain upon St. Swithin's day, July 15, it will rain forty days following, is supposed to have a shadow of reason only from the circumstance of some constellations, which have the character of portending rain, rising cosmically about the time of St. Swithin's festival.

SWITZERLAND, the ancient Helvetia, was conquered by the Romans, 15 B.C., and afterward was successively subject to the Burgundians and Germans.
 Franks also settled here in the early ages. The can-leaving their original habitation in Scandinavia, invaded Italy, and were defeated by the Roman General

 Marius, after which they fled into Helvetia, about 100

WORDS were formed of iron taken from a mountain by the Chinese, 1879 B.C.—Univ. Hist. The Roman swords were from 20 to 30 inches long. The broadsword and cimeter are of modern adoption. The sword of state carried at an English king's coronation by a king of Scotland, 1194. Damascus steel swords are most prized; the next the sword of Ferrara steel. The Scotch Highlanders were accustomed to procure the latter from the celebrated artificer named Andrea di Ferrara, and used to call them their Andrew Ferraras. The broadsword was forbidden to be worn in Edinburgh in 1724.

SYBARIS, a Greek colony in S. Italy, founded about 720 B.C.; destroyed by the Crotonians about 510 B.C. The people were greatly addicted to luxury, hence the term Sybarite.

SYCAMORE-TREE, called the Egyptian fig-tree. In Mrs. Jameson's "Memoirs of Female Sovereigns," we are told that Mary queen of Scots brought over from France a little sycamore-tree, which she planted in the gardens at Holyrood, and that from this have sprung all the beautiful groves of sycamore now to be seen in Scotland.

SYDNEY, capital of New South Wales; founded by Governor Phillip, on a cove on Port Jackson, in 1788, as a British settlement for the colony of convicts originally intended for Botany Bay. It was named after Lord Sydney, secretary for the colonies. A legislative council was first held July 13, 1829; the University opened Oct. 11, 1852. Sydney was erected into a bishopric in 1836, afterward into an archbishopric. It was lit with gas in May, 1841, the first place so lit in Australia. The Roman Catholic cathedral burnt, and valuable property destroyed, June 29, 1865. See Australia, New South Wales, Convicts, etc.

SYMPIESOMETER, a species of barometer invented by Adie of Edinburgh in 1819.

SYNAGOGUE (usually an assembly), a congregation of the Jews, the place where such assembly is held for religious purposes. When first held is uncertain; some refer it to the times after the Babylonish captivity. In Jerusalem were 480 synagogues. In 1851 there were in London 10 synagogues; in England and Wales, 53.

SYNOD. The first general synods were called by emperors, and afterward by Christian princes; but the pope ultimately usurped this power, one of his legates usually presiding (see Councils). The first national synod held in England was at Hertford, 673; the last was held by Cardinal Pole in 1555. Made unlawful to hold synods but by royal authority, 25 Hen. VIII., 1533. See Dort and Thurles.

SYRACUSE, S.E. Sicily, founded by Archias 734 B. C.; 732 B.C., Eusebius; 749 B.C., Univ. Hist. See Sicily. Gelon beomes supreme. B.C. 485 Succeeded by Hiero. 478 Republic established. 467 Becomes predominant in Sicily. 453 Athenian expedition against Syracuse, under Nicias. 415 Gylippus the Lacedæmonian succors Syracuse; defeats Nicias. 413 Government of Dionysius the elder, 406; he receives Plato well. 389 Dionysius the younger succeeds. 367 Opposed by Dion, 361, who is banished, and Plato, who endeavored to reconcile them, is sold for a slave. 360 Dion returns with a Greek army and fleet, and expels Dionysius, 356; rules Syracuse, 355; assassinated by Callippus. 353 Dionysius recovers his authority, 347, but is banished to Corinth by Timoleon, 343, who governs well till his death. 337 Agathocles usurps power. 317 He is poisoned by Hicetas, and the republic restored. 289 Hiero, pretor of Syracuse, 275; elected king, 270; rules in peace till his death, 216; Hieronymus, his grandson, succeeds, 216; murdered. 214 Syracuse declares against Rome, besieged by Marcellus, 214, and taken; Archimedes, the illustrious mathematician, slain. 212 Syracuse taken by the Saracens, A.D. 669, and retaken by Count Roger, the Norman. 1088 Destroyed by earthquakes in 1542; Jan., 1693; and nearly destroyed. Aug. 6, 1757 In the insurrection, Syracuse surrendered to the Neapolitan troops. April 8, 1849

SYRIA. The capital was originally Damascus; but after the battle of Ipsus, Seleucus founded Antioch. Alliance of David with Hiram, king of Syria, B.C. 1049 Syria conquered by David. 1040 Liberated by Rezin. 980 Benhadad, king of Syria, makes war on the Jews. 898 Benhadad II. reigns. about 830 Syria subjugated by Tiglathpileser, king of Assyria 740 Syria conquered by Cyrus. 537 And by Alexander. 333 Seleucus Nicator enters Babylon. 312 Era of the Seleucidæ (which see). " Great battle of Ipsus; death of Antigonus, defeated by Ptolemy, Seleucus, and Lysimachus. 301 The city of Antioch founded. 299 Antiochus, son of Seleucus, falling in love with his father's queen, Stratonice, he pines away nearly to death; but the secret being discovered, she is divorced by the father, and married by the son. 297 Battle of Cyropedium; Lysimachus slain by Seleucus. 281 Seleucus foully assassinated by Ceraunus; Antiochus I. king. 280 Antiochus I. defeats the Gauls, and takes the name of the Soter, or Saviour. 275 Antiochus II., surnamed by the Milesians Theos (God!), king. 261 Poisoned by Laodice. 246 Seleucus II. (king, 246) makes a treaty of alliance with Smyrna and Magnesia. 243 Seleucus III., Ceraunus (or Thunder), king. 226 Antiochus III., the Great (king, 223), conquers Palestine, but is totally defeated at Raphia. 217 Again conquers Palestine, 198, but gives it to Ptolemy. 193 Enters Greece, 192; defeated by the Romans at Thermopylæ, 191; and at Magnesia. 190 Makes peace with the Romans, giving up to them Asia Minor. 188 Seleucus Philopator king. 187 Antiochus IV. king, who assumes the title of Theos-Epiphanes, or the Illustrious God. 175 He sends Apollonius into Judea; Jerusalem is taken; the Temple pillaged; 40,000 inhabitants destroyed, and 40,000 more sold as slaves. 168 Antiochus V., Eupator (king, 164), murdered by Demetrius Soter, who seizes the throne. 162 Demetrius is defeated and slain by his successor Alexander Bala, 150; who is also defeated and slain by Demetrius Nicator. 146 Antiochus VI., Sidetes (son of Demetrius Soter), rules during the captivity of his brother Demetrius Nicator (after slaying the usurper Tryphon) 137 Antiochus grants peace to the Jews, and placates the Romans, 133; invades Parthia, 129; and is defeated and slain. 128 Demetrius Nicator restored. " Cleopatra, the queen, murders her son Seleucus with her own hand. 124 Her son Antiochus VII., Grypus (king, 125), whom she attempts to poison; but he compels his mother to swallow the deadly draught herself. 123 Reign of Antiochus VII., Cyzicenus, at Damascus, and of Grypus at Antioch. 111 Seleucus king. 95 Antiochus Eusebes king. 94 Dethroned by Philip. 85 Tigranes, king of Armenia, acquires Syria. 83 Antiochus X., Asiaticus, solicits the aid of the Romans. 75 Defeat of Tigranes by Lucullus, 69; he submits to Pompey, who enters Syria, and dethrones Antiochus Asiaticus. 65 Syria made a Roman province. 63 * * * * * Syria invaded by the Parthians. A.D. 162 By the Persians. 256 Violent earthquakes. 341 Invaded by the Saracens, 497, 502, 529; by the Persians. 607 Conquered by the Saracens. 638 Conquest of Syria by the Fatimite caliphs. 970 Revolt of the Emirs of Damascus. 1067 The Emirs of Aleppo revolt. 1068 The Crusades commence (see Crusades). 1095 Desolated by the Crusades (which see). 1096-1272 Nouredin conquers Syria. 1166 Saladin dethrones the Fatimite dynasty. 1171 The Tartars overrun all Syria. 1259 The sultans of Egypt expel the Crusaders. 1291 Syria overrun by Tamerlane. 1400 Syria and Egypt conquered by the Turks. 1517 Syria continued in possession of the Turks till the invasion of Egypt by the French. July 1, 1798 Bonaparte defeats the Mamelukes with great loss, Aug. 6; overruns the country, and takes Gaza and Jaffa. " Siege of Acre. March 6 to May 27, 1799 Bonaparte returns to France from Egypt. Aug. 23. " Egypt and Syria evacuated by the French, Sept. 10, 1801 Mehemet Ali attacks and captures Acre, and overruns the whole of Syria. 1831-32 Ibrahim Pacha, his son, defeats the army of the Grand Signior at Konieh. TABERNACLE, the Holy Place of the Israelites till the erection of Solomon's Temple, was constructed by Divine direction, 1491 B.C. When the Jews were settled in Canaan, the tabernacle was set up at Shiloh by Joshua, 1444 B.C. It was replaced by the Temple erected by Solomon, 1004 B.C.—The chapel erected for George Whitefield in Moorfields in 1741, being of a temporary nature, received the name of Tabernacle, which was afterward given to their chapels by the Calvinistic Methodists. Whitefield's Tabernacle in Tottenham Court Road was erected in 1756, and enlarged in 1760. His lease expired in 1828, and the chapel was opened by the Independents in 1830. A large Metropolitan Tabernacle, erected for the ministrations of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, a Baptist, near the Elephant and Castle, Kennington Road, Surrey, was opened on March 31, 1861.

TABOR, in Bohemia, was founded by Ziska in 1419, and became the chief seat of the Hussites, or Taborites. Casimir of Poland, invited to be their king, was defeated here by Albert of Austria in 1438. Tabor itself was taken by the emperor in 1544.

TADMOR. See Palmyra.

TAEPINGS. See China, 1851, note.

TAFFETA, an early species of silken manufacture, more prized formerly than now, woven very smooth and glossy. It was worn by our elder queens, and was first made in England by John Tyce, of Shoreditch, London, 41 Eliz., 1598.—Stow's Chron.

TAGLIACOZZO, in the Abruzzi Mountains, S. Italy, where, on Aug. 23, 1268, Charles of Anjou, the usurping King of Naples, defeated and made prisoner the rightful monarch, young Conradin (the last of the Hohenstaufens, and grandson of the Emperor Frederick II.), who had been invited into Italy by the Ghibelline or Imperial party; their opponents, the Guelphs, or papal party, supporting Charles. Conradin was beheaded Oct. 29 following.

TAHITI. The French abbreviated name for Otaheite. See Otaheite.

TALavera de la Reyna, Central Spain, was taken from the Mohammedans by Ordoño, king of Leon, 913. Here a battle was fought July 27, 28, 1809, between the united British and Spanish armies, under Sir Arthur Wellesley (19,000 British and 30,000 Spaniards), and the French army (47,000) commanded by Marshals Victor and Sebastiani. After a battle on the 27th, both armies remained on the field during the night, and the French at break of day renewed the attack, but were again repulsed by the British with great slaughter. At noon Victor charged the whole British line, but was repulsed at all points, and Sir Arthur Wellesley secured the victory, the enemy retreating with a loss of 10,000 men and 20 pieces of cannon. The British lost 800 killed and 4000 wounded or missing. Soult, Ney, and Mortier, being in the rear, obliged the British to retire after the battle.

TALBOTYPE. See Photography.

TALLADEGA, BATTLE AT, near the Coosa River, in Alabama, between more than 2000 Americans, under General Jackson, and 1000 Creek Indians, on the 9th of Nov., 1813. The Indians left 290 dead on the field, and it was supposed they had as many more wounded. The Americans lost 15 killed and 66 wounded.

TALLASEHATCHE, BATTLE AT, near the Coosa River, between the Creek Indians and 900 mounted men, under General Coffee, on the 3d of November, 1813. The Indians lost 200 killed and 84 prisoners. The Americans lost 5 killed and 41 wounded.

TALLY OFFICE in the Exchequer took its name from the French word tallier, to cut. A tally is a piece of wood written upon both sides, containing an acquittance for money received; which, being cloven asunder by an officer of the Exchequer, one part, called the stock, was delivered to the person who paid or lent money to the government, and the other part, called the counter-stock, or counter-foil, remained in the office, to be kept till called for, and joined with the stock. This manner of striking tallies is very ancient.—Beatson. The practice was ordered to be discontinued in 1782. On Oct. 16, 1834, the houses of Parliament were burnt down by too many of these tallies being used in heating the stoves in the House of Lords. See Exchequer.

TALMUDS, two books concerning the religion and morality of the Jews—the Talmud of Jerusalem and the Talmud of Babylon. The one composed by the Rabbi Juda Hakkadosh, about the close of the 2d century; the second contains commentaries, etc., by succeeding rabbis, collected by Ben Eliezer, about the 6th century; abridged by Maimonides in the 12th century.

TAMMANY SOCIETY. There was a great chief of the Delaware Indians in Pennsylvania named Tammany, who was buried not far from Doylestown in that state. He is represented as the possessor of many virtues, and politicians, at about the close of the Revolution, called him St. Tammany, and chose him as the patron saint of the new republic. Tammany Societies were formed and Tammany halls were erected by Republicans, and on the 1st of May, the instituted festival of the saint, meetings of the societies were held. "On that day," says Heckewelder, the Indian missionary, "numerous societies of his votaries walked together in procession through the streets of Philadelphia, their hats decorated with bucks' tails, and proceeded to a handsome rural place out of town which they called the wigwam, where, after a long talk or Indian speech had been delivered, and the calumet of peace and friendship had been duly smoked, they spent the day in festivity and mirth." The Tammany Society of New York is yet in existence. Its meetings are held regularly at Tammany Hall, Fourteenth Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues.

TANAGRA (Bœotia). Here the Spartans defeated the Athenians 457 B.C., but were defeated by them in 426, when Agis II. headed the Spartans, and Nicias the Athenians.

TANDY ARREST. James Napper Tandy proposed his plan of reform in 1791. In the French expedition against Ireland he acted as general of brigade, Aug., 1798. He failed, and fled to Hamburg, and was there delivered up to the English, Nov. 24, for which Bonaparte declared war upon Hamburg, Oct. 15, 1799. Tandy was liberated after the peace of Amiens in 1802.

TANGIER (Morocco, N.W. Africa). Besieged by Prince Ferdinand of Portugal, who was beaten and taken prisoner, 1437. It was conquered by Alfonso V. of Portugal in 1471, and given as a dowry to Princess Catharine on her marriage with Charles II. of England, 1662; but he did not think it worth keeping, and in 1653 caused the works to be blown up and the place abandoned. Tangiers afterward became a piratical station; but the discontinuance of piracy has greatly diminished its importance.

TANISTRY (in Ireland), the equal division of lands, after the decease of the owner, among his sons, legitimate. If one of the sons died, his son did not inherit, but a new division was made by the tanist or chief. Abolished 1604.—Davies.

TANNING leather with the bark of trees was early practiced. Tan-bark was introduced into Great Britain from Holland by William III. for raising orange-trees about 1639. It was discontinued until about 1719, when ananas were first brought into England. Great improvements have been made in tanning by means of chemical knowledge.

TANTALUM, a rare metal, discovered in an American mineral by Hatchett in 1801, and named by him Columbiun; and in a Swedish mineral by Ekeberg, who gave it its present name. Wollaston pointed out the identity of the two metals in 1809; and Berzelius prepared pure metallic tantalum in 1824. In 1846 Rose discovered that tantalum was really a mixture of three metals, which he named tantalum, niobium, and pelopium.—Gmelin.

TAPESTRY. An art of weaving borrowed from the Saracens, and hence its original workers in France were called Sarazinois. The invention of tapestry hangings belongs (the date is not mentioned) to the Netherlands.—Guicciardini. Manufactured in France under Henry IV. by artists invited from Flanders, 1606. The art was brought into England by William Sheldon; and the first manufactory of it was established at Mortlake by Sir Francis Crane, 17 James I., 1619.—Salmon. Under Louis XIV. the art of tapestry was much improved in France. See Gobelin Tapestry.

Very early instances of making tapestry are mentioned by the ancient poets, and also in Scripture; so that the Saracens' manufacture is a revival of the art. For the tapestry wrought by Matilda of England, see Bayeux Tapestry.

TAR. The chemist Becher first proposed to make tar from pit-coal—the Earl of Dundonald's patent, 1781. The mineral tar was discovered at Colebrookdale, Shropshire, 1779; and in Scotland, Oct., 1792. Tar-water was first recommended for its medicinal virtues by the good Dr. Berkeley, bishop of Cloyne, about 1744. From coal-tar brilliant dyes are now produced. See Aniline.

TARA, a hill in Meath, Ireland, where it is said a conference was held between the English and Irish in 1173. Near here, on May 26, 1798, the Royalist troops, 400 strong, defeated the insurgent Irish (4000 men), 500 killed. On Aug. 15, 1843, Daniel O'Connell held a monster meeting here (250,000 persons said to have been assembled).

TARANTISM. See Dancing.

TARBES (S. France, near the Pyrenees). The French, under Soult, were forced from their position at Tarbes, with considerable loss, by the British army commanded by Wellington, March 20, 1814. See Toulouse.

TARENTUM (now Taranto, S. Italy) was founded by the Greek Phalantus, B.C. 708. The people of Tarentum, assisted by Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, supported a war against the Romans, which had been undertaken B.C. 281, by the Romans, to avenge the insults the Tarentines had offered to their ships when near their harbors; it was terminated after ten years; 300,000 prisoners were taken, and Tarentum became subject to Rome. Tarentum has shared in all the revolutions of Southern Italy.

TARRAGONA (N.E. Spain), occupied as a naval station by the British before their capture of Gibraltar in 1704. It was stormed and sacked by the French under Suchet, Jan. 28, 1811, and the inhabitants put to the sword.

TARTAN, or HIGHLAND PLaid. This dress of the Scottish Highlanders is said to have been derived from the ancient Gauls, or Celts, the Galli non braccati.

TARTARIC ACID is said to have been the first discovery of the eminent chemist Scheele, who procured it in a separate state by boiling tar with lime, and in decomposing the tartrate of lime thus formed by means of sulphuric acid, about 1770. In 1859 Baron Liebig formed tartaric acid from other sources.

TARTARY (Asia). The Tartars, Mongols, or Moguls were known in antiquity as Scythians. During the decline of the Roman Empire, these tribes began to seek more fertile regions; and the first who reached the frontier of Italy were the Huns, the ancestors of the modern Mongols. The first acknowledged sovereignty of this vast country was the famous Genghis Khan. His empire, by the conquest of China, Persia, and all Central Asia (1206-27), became one of the most formidable ever established; but it was split into parts in a few reigns. Timur, or Tamerlane, again conquered Persia, broke the power of the Turks in Asia Minor (1370-1400), and founded the Mogul dynasty in India, which began with Baber in 1525, and formed the most splendid court in Asia till the close of the 18th century. See Golden Horde. The Calmuck Tartars, expelled from China, settled on the banks of the Volga in 1672, but returned in 1771, suffering much on the journey.

TASMANIA, the name now given to the British settlement in Van Diemen's Land (which see).

TAVERNS may be traced to the 13th century. "In the reign of King Edward the Third, only three taverns were allowed in London: one in Chepe, one in Walbrook, and the other in Lombard Street."—Spelman. The Boar's Head, in Eastcheap, existed in the reign of Henry IV., and was the rendezvous of Prince Henry and his dissolute companions. Shakspeare mentions it as the residence of Mrs. Quickly, and the scene of Falstaff's moriment.—Shakspeare, Henry IV. The White Hart, Bishopsgate, established in 1490, was rebuilt in 1829. Taverns were licensed in 1752.

* Taverns were restricted by an act of Edward VI., 1559, to 40 in London, 3 in York, 4 in Norwich, 3 in Westminster, 6 in Bristol, 4 in Lincoln, 4 in Hull, 3 in Shrewsbury, 4 in Exeter, 3 in Salisbury, 4 in Gloucester, 4 in Chester, 3 in Hereford, 3 in Worcester, 3 in Southampton, 4 in Canterbury, 3 in Ipswich, 3 in Winchester, 3 in Oxford, 4 in Cambridge, 3 in Colchester, 4 in Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

TAXES were levied by Solon, the first Athenian legislator, 540 B.C. The first class of citizens paid an Attic talent of silver, about £55 of our money. Darius, the son of Hystaspes, levied a land-tax by assessment, which was deemed so odious that his subjects styled him, by way of derision, Darius the Trader, 480 B.C.—D'Eon. Taxes in specie were first introduced into England by William I., 1067, and he raised them arbitrarily; yet subsidies in kind, as in wool, leather, and other products of the country, continued till the accession of Richard II., 1377.—Camden. See Revenue and Income Tax.

TCHERNAYA, a river in the Crimea. On Aug. 16, 1855, the lines of the allied army at this place were attacked by 50,000 Russians under Prince Gortschakoff without success, being repulsed with the loss of 3329 slain, 1658 wounded, and 600 prisoners. The brunt of the attack was borne by two French regiments under General D'Herbillon. The loss of the allies was about 1200; 200 of these were from the Sardinian contingent, which behaved with great gallantry under the command of General La Marmora. The Russian General Read, and the Sardinian General Montevecchio, were killed. The object of the attack was the relief of Sebastopol, then closely besieged by the English and French.

TEA was brought to Europe by the Dutch, 1610. It is mentioned as having been used in England on very rare occasions prior to 1667, and sold for £6 and even £10 the pound.

Samuel Pepys records his "first cup of tea,"

Sept. 25, 1660

A duty of 8d. was charged upon every gallon of tea made for sale (12 Ch. II., c. 13), 1660; the East India Company first import it.....1669

TE DEUM. A song of thanksgiving used in the Romish and English churches, beginning "Te Deum laudamus—We praise thee, O God," supposed to be the composition of Augustine and Ambrose, about 390.

TEETOTALER. Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, Lancashire, in addressing temperance meetings, acknowledged that he had been a hard drinker, and being an illiterate man, and in want of a word to express how much he then abstained from malt and spirits, exclaimed "I am now a Teetotaler;" about 1831. See Encratites, Temperance, and United Kingdom.

TELEGRAPHS. Polybius calls the different instruments used by the ancients for communicating information pyrrice, because the signals were always made by fire. In 1663, a plan was suggested by the Marquess of Worcester, and a modern telegraph was suggested by Dr. Hooke, 1684. M. Amontons is also said to have been the inventor of telegraphs about this period. M. Chappe then invented the telegraph first used by the French in 1793, and two were erected over the Admiralty Office, London, 1796. The Semaphore was erected there 1816. The naval signals by telegraph enabled 400 previously concerted sentences to be transmitted from ship to ship by varying the combinations of two revolving crosses. See Electric Telegraph, under Electricity.

TELESCOPES were noticed by Leonard Digges about 1571. Roger Bacon, about 1250, described telescopes and microscopes exactly, and yet neither were made till one Metius, at Alkmaar, and Jansen, of Middelburg, constructed them about 1590-1609. Galileo imitated their invention by its description, and made three in succession, one of which magnified a thousand times, 1630. With these he discovered Jupiter's moons and the phases of Venus. Telescopes were improved by Zucchi, Huyghens, Gregory, and Newton, and afterward by Martin, Hall, Dollond, and Herschel.

A telescope made in London for the Observatory of Madrid, which cost £11,000, in 1802; but the Herschel telescope, made 1789-1795, was superior; it had the great speculum 48 inches diameter, 3½ inches thick, weighed 2118 lbs., and magnified 6400 times. See Herschel.

The Earl of Rosse erected on his estate at Parsonstown, in Ireland, the largest telescope ever constructed, at a cost exceeding £20,000. This wonderful instrument is 7 feet in diameter, and 52 feet in length; the machinery is supported on massive walls, and notwithstanding its great weight and size, is moved with the utmost ease, and can be lowered to any angle, while it sweeps the horizon by means of wheels running on a graduated circle.....1828-1845

TELLURIUM, a rare metal, in its natural state containing small quantities of iron and gold, was discovered by Müller at Reichenstein in 1782.

TEMESWAR (Hungary), capital of the Banat, often besieged by the Turks. On Aug. 10, 1849, Haynau totally defeated the Hungarians besieging this town, and virtually ended the war.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES originated with Mr. Calhoun, who, while he was Secretary of War in America, in order to counteract the habitual use of ardent spirits among the people, prohibited them altogether in the United States army, 1818. The first public Temperance Society in America was projected in 1825, and formed Feb. 13, 1826. Temperance societies immediately afterward were formed in England and Scotland. In Ireland, the Rev. Dr. Edgar, of Belfast, published upon temperance in 1829-31; and Father Mathew, a Roman Catholic clergyman, affirmed that in 1839, 1840, and 1841, he had made more than a million of converts to temperance.* In England, the National Temperance Society was formed in 1842; the London Temperance League in 1851; and the United Kingdom Alliance for the legislative suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors, June 1, 1853. See Teetotaler.

* This success was probably owing to the general poverty, as the majority of the converts are stated to have relapsed on the return of prosperity. Father Mathew arrived in America in July, 1849, but was not so successful there. He died Dec. 8, 1866, aged 69.

TEMPLARS. The first military order of Knights Templars was founded in 1118, by Baldwin II., king of Jerusalem. The Templars were numerous in several countries, and came to England in 1185. Their wealth having excited the cupidity of the French kings, the order was suppressed by the Council of Vienne, and part of its revenues was bestowed upon other orders in 1312. Numbers of the order were burned alive and hanged in 1310, and it suffered great persecutions throughout Europe. The Grand-master Molay was burnt alive at Paris in 1314.

TEMPLE (London), the dwelling of the Knights Templars, at the suppression of the order, was purchased by the professors of the common law, and converted into inns, 1340. They are called the Inner and Middle Temple, in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, built in 1185, and called the Outer Temple, because it was situated without Temple Bar.—St. Mary's, or the Temple Church, situated in the Inner Temple, is an ancient Gothic stone building, erected by the Templars in 1240, and is remarkable for its circular vestibule, and for the tombs of the Crusaders, who were buried here. The church was recased with stone by Mr. Smirke in 1828.—The Temple Hall was built in 1574, and Temple Bar in 1672. The new Middle Temple library was opened by the Prince of Wales, Oct. 31, 1861.

TEMPLES originated in the sepulchres built for the dead.—Eusebius. The Egyptians were the first who erected temples to the gods.—Herodotus. The first erected in Greece is ascribed to Deucalion.—Apollonius.

The Temple of Jerusalem built by Solomon, 1012 B.C.; consecrated, 1004; pillaged by Sheshak, 971; repaired by Joash, 856; profaned by Abaz, 740; restored by Hezekiah, 726; pillaged and fired by Nebuchadnezzar, 588, 587; rebuilt, 536; pillaged by Antiochus, 170; rebuilt by Herod, 18; destroyed by Titus, A.D. 70.

The Temple of Apollo, at Delphi, first a cottage with boughs, built of stone by Trophonius, about 1200 B.C.; burnt by the Pisistratidae, 548; a new temple raised by the family of the Alcmaeonidae, about 513.

Temple of Diana at Ephesus, built seven times; planned by Ctesiphon, 544 B.C.; fired by Herostratus, to perpetuate his name, 356 B.C.; to rebuild it employed 220 years; destroyed by the Goths, A.D. 260.

The Temple of Piety was built by Acilius on the spot where once a woman had fed with her milk her aged father, whom the senate had imprisoned, and excluded from all aliments.—Val. Max.

Temple of Thesens, built 480 B.C., is at this day the most perfect ancient edifice in the world.

Most of the heathen temples were destroyed throughout the Roman Empire by Constantine the Great, 331. See separate articles.

The Temple at Paris, formerly an asylum for debtors, was made the site of a market in 1809, and rebuilt in 1864.

TENANT. See Rent. "Tenant-right" in Ireland has caused much discussion in that country.

TENASSERIM (N.E. India), ceded by Burmah to the British, Feb., 1826.

TENERIFFE (Canaries, N.W. coast of Africa). The celebrated Peak of Teneriffe is 15,396 feet above the level of the sea. It was ascended in 1856 by Professor C. Piazzi Smyth for astronomical observations. An earthquake in this island destroyed several towns and many thousands of people in 1704. In an unsuccessful attack made at Santa Cruz, Admiral (afterward Lord) Nelson lost his right arm, and 141 officers and men were killed, July 24, 1797. For the particulars of this heroic affair, see Santa Cruz.

TENNESSEE, a southern state of North America, was settled in 1765, and admitted into the Union June 1, 1796. An ordinance of secession from the Union was passed, it is asserted illegally, on May 6, 1861. On February 23, 1862, the Federal General Nelson entered Nashville, and in March, Andrew Johnson (the late President of the United States) was made military governor over a large part of Tennessee. In Sept., 1863, Rosecrans expelled the Confederate government.

TENTHS. See Tithes.

TENURES, the mode in which land is held. Military tenures were abolished in 1660. Lyttelton's book on Tenures is dated 1481.

TERBIUM, a metal sometimes found with yttrium (which see).

TERMS OF LAW AND VACATIONS. They were instituted in England from the Norman usage, the long vacation being suited to the time of the vintage in France, 14 William I., 1079.—Glanville, de Leg. Anglie. They were gradually formed.—Spelman. The terms were fixed by statute 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV., July 22, 1830: Hilary Term to begin Jan. 11 and end Jan. 31; Easter, April 15, to end May 8; Trinity, May 22, to end June 12; Michaelmas, Nov. 2, to end Nov. 25. This act was amended 1 Will. IV., Nov. 15, 1830.

TERRA DEL FUEGO. See Missions, note.

TERROR. See Reign of.

TEST ACT, directing all officers, civil and military, under government, to receive the sacrament according to the forms of the Church of England, and to take the oaths against transubstantiation, etc.; enacted March, 1673. The Test and Corporation Acts were repealed by statute in 1825.

TESTER. Testone. A silver coin struck in France by Louis XII., 1513; and also in Scotland in the time of Francis II., and of Mary queen of Scots, 1559. It was so called from the head of the king stamped upon it. In England the tester was of 12*d*. value in the reign of Henry VIII., and afterward of 6*d*. (still called a tester).

TETUAN (Morocco), was entered by the Spaniards Feb. 6, 1860, after gaining a decisive victory on Feb. 4. The general, O'Donnell, was made a grandee of the first class.

TEUTONES (hence Deutsche, German), a people of Germany, who, with the Cimbri, made incursions upon Gaul, and cut to pieces two Roman armies, 113 and 105 B.C. They were at last defeated by the Consul Marius at Aix, and a great number made prisoners, 102 B.C. See Cimbri, with whom authors commonly join the Teutones. The appellation came to be applied to the German nation in general.

TEUTONIC ORDER, military knights established in the Holy Land about 1191, through the humanity of the Germans (Teutones) to the sick and wounded of the Christian army in the Holy Land, under the celebrated Guy of Lusignan, when before Acre. The order was confirmed by a bull of Pope Celestine III. On their return to Germany they were invited to subdue and Christianize the country now called Prussia and its neighborhood, which they gradually accomplished. A large part of their possessions was incorporated into Poland in 1466, and into Brandenburg about 1521. In 1525, the grand master was made a prince of the empire. The order was dissolved, and its remaining possessions seized by Napoleon I. in 1809. See Prussia, etc.

TEWKESBURY (Gloucestershire), where Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians, May 4, 1471. Queen Margaret, the consort of Henry VI., and her son, were taken prisoners. The queen was conveyed to the Tower of London, where King Henry expired a few days after this fatal engagement, being, as is generally supposed, murdered by the Duke of Gloucester, afterward Richard III. The queen was ransomed in 1475 by the French king, Louis XI., for 50,000 crowns. This was the last battle between the houses of York and Lancaster. See Roses.

TEXAS (N. America). Separated from Mexico in 1836. Its independence was acknowledged in 1840. Its proposed annexation led to war between Mexico and the United States. It was admitted into the Union by the latter in 1846; seceded from it in 1861; submitted in 1865.

TEXEL (at the mouth of the Zuyder Zee, Holland). Its vicinity has been the scene of memorable naval engagements. An engagement of three days' continuance, between the English under Blake, Dean, and Monk, and the Dutch under Van Tromp and De Ruyter, in which the latter were vanquished, and Admiral Van Tromp was killed, 1653. Again, in the mouth of the Texel, when D'Estrees and Ruyter were signally defeated, Aug. 11, 1673. The Dutch fleet vanquished by Lord Duncan on Oct. 11, 1797. See Camperdown. The Dutch fleet of twelve ships of war, and thirteen Indiamen, surrendered to Admiral Mitchell, who, entering the Texel, possessed himself of them without firing a shot, Aug. 28, 1799.

THALLIUM, a metal, occurring in the sulphuric acid manufacture, discovered by Mr. William Crookes, by means of the spectrum analysis, in March, 1861.

THAMES (London). The richest river in the world. It has been erroneously said that its name is Isis till it arrives at Dorchester, when, being joined by the Thame or Tame, it assumes the name of Thames. What was the origin of this vulgar error can not now be traced; however, had perpetuated the error, and invested it with a kind of classical sanctity. It was called Thames or Tems before it came near the Thames.—Camden.

The river rose so high at Westminster that the lawyers were brought out of the hall in boats. . . . 1235
It rose to a great height. . . . 1736, 1747, 1762, 1791

THAMES TUNNEL.—Projected by Mr. I. K. Brunel, to form a communication between Rotherhithe and Wapping. The bill received the royal assent June 24, 1824. The shaft was begun in 1825;

the first brick was laid by Mr. Smith, March 2;

the excavation commenced April 1; and the first horizontal excavation. . . . in Dec., 1825

At a distance of 544 feet from the shaft, the first interruption took place. . . . May 18, 1827

The second interruption, by which six workmen perished. . . . Jan. 12, 1823

The tunnel was opened throughout for foot-passengers, March 25, 1843. The length of the tunnel is 1300 feet; its width is 35 feet; height, 20 feet; clear width of each archway, including foot-path, about 14 feet; thickness of earth between the crown of the tunnel and the bed of the river, about 15 feet.

In consequence of the great contamination of the Thames by the influx of the sewage of London, and the bad odors emanating from it in the summer of 1858, an act was passed empowering the Metropolitan Board of Works (which see) to undertake its purification by constructing new drainage. The works are still in progress. . . . 1866

THAMES EMBANKMENT.—Sir Christopher Wren recommended it in 1666. The Corporation embanked a mile in 1767. It was farther recommended by Sir Fred. Trench in 1824; by the Duke of Newcastle in 1844; and by John Martin, the painter, in 1856. In 1860, the Metropolitan Board of Works recommended that the north bank of the Thames should be embanked, whereby the bed of the river would be improved; a low-level sewer could be easily constructed beneath a broad roadway; docks to be constructed within the embankment wall; the expense to be defrayed by the city duties on coal, and by means provided by government. The principle of this recommendation was approved by Parliament, and a committee was appointed, which sat for the first time. . . . April 30, 1861

An act for "embanking the north side of the Thames, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars Bridge, and for making new streets in and near thereto," passed Aug. 7; the work begun in. . . . Nov., 1862

Mr. J. W. Bazalgette presented a report, with a plan for embanking the S. side of the Thames, Nov. 6, 1862; act for carrying it out passed. . . . July 23, 1863

THAMES, BATTLE OF, in Upper Canada. This was between 2500 Americans, under General Harrison, and 800 British regulars and 1200 Indians, under General Proctor. It occurred on the 5th of October, 1813. The Indians were led by the celebrated Tecumseh or Tecumthé. The Americans were victorious. The Americans lost in killed and wounded only 29; the British lost in killed and wounded, including Indians (Tecumseh was slain), 57; and 560 men made prisoners, with 5000 small-arms and 6 pieces of cannon.

THANE, a Saxon title of nobility, abolished in England at the Conquest, upon the introduction of the feudal system, and in Scotland by King Malcolm III., when the title of earl was adopted, 1067.

THANET, Kent, was the first permanent settlement of the Saxons, 428. The Danes held a part of it, 853-865, and ravaged it 950.

THEATINES. An order of religion, the first who assumed the title of regular clerks, founded by Carafa, bishop of Theate, in Naples (afterward Pope Paul IV.), 1524, to repress heresy. They first established themselves in France, according to the historian Hénauld, in Paris, 1644. The Theatines endeavored, but vainly, to revive among the clergy the poverty of the apostles.—Ashe.

THEATRES. That of Bacchus, at Athens, built by Philos, 420 B.C., was the first erected. Marcellus's theatre at Rome was built about 80 B.C. Theatres were afterward numerous, and were erected in most cities of Italy. There was a theatre at Pompeii, where most of the inhabitants of the town were assembled on the night of Aug. 24, A.D. 79, when an eruption of Vesuvius covered Pompeii. Scenes were introduced into theatres, painted by Balthazar Sienna, A.D. 1533. See Drama, Plays, etc.

THEATRES IN ENGLAND. The first royal license for a theatre in England was in 1574, to Master Burbage and four others, servants of the Earl of Leicester, to act plays at the Globe, Bankside. See Globe. But, long before that time, miracle plays were represented in the fields. The prices of admission in the reign of Queen Elizabeth were—gallery, 2d.; lords' rooms, 1s. The first play-bill was dated April 8, 1663, and issued from Drury Lane; it runs thus: "By his Majestie his company of Comedians at the New Theatre in Drury Lane, will be acted a comedy called the Humorous Lieutenant." After detailing the characters, it concludes thus: "The play will begin at three o'clock exactly." Lincoln's Inn Theatre was opened in 1695. The licensing act (10 Geo. II., c. 23, 1735) was passed in consequence of the performance of Fielding's Pasquin at the Haymarket, satirizing Walpole's administration. Marionettes or Puppets were produced at the Adelaide Gallery in 1852. See Covent Garden, Drury Lane, Opera House, Drama, etc. In Jan., 1860, several of the theatres were first opened on Sunday evenings for religious worship, and were filled.

THEATRES IN THE UNITED STATES. The first regular theatrical company seen in America came from England in 1752, landed at York, in Virginia, and, by permission of Governor Dinwiddie, opened a play-house at Williamsburg, the capital of the province. The first play performed in America by a regular company was at that rude theatre, on the 5th of September, 1752. The company next opened a theatre at Annapolis, in Maryland, the same year, and there the first regular theatre in America was erected. On the 17th of September, 1753, the same company opened a theatre in New York, where Sir Richard Steele's play of "The Conscious Lovers" was performed. Hallam, who was the manager, was solicited to open a theatre in Philadelphia. Thither he went in April, 1754, and began in a store-house with "The Fair Penitent." Such was the beginning of theatricals in the United States, a kind of amusement which has a strong hold upon the popular feeling, and is presented in nearly all of the large towns in the Union.

THEBES, or Luxor, in Egypt, called also Hecatompyles on account of its hundred gates, and Diospolis, as being sacred to Jupiter. In the time of its splendor it extended above thirty-three miles, and upon any emergency could send into the field, by each of its hundred gates, 20,000 fighting men and 200 chariots. Thebes was ruined by Cambyzes, king of Persia, 521 B.C., and few traces of it were seen in the age of Juvenal.—Plutarch. THEBES (the capital of the country successively called Aonia, Messapia, Ogygia, Hyantis, and Beotia) was called Cadmeis, from Cadmus, its founder, 1493 B.C. It became a republic about 1120 B.C., and flourished under Epaminondas, 378-362 B.C. It was taken by the Romans, 198 A.D. See Beotia and Greece.

THEFT. This offense was punished by heavy fines among the Jews. By death at Athens, by the laws of Draco. See Draco. The Anglo-Saxons nominally punished theft with death if above 12d. value; but the criminal could redeem his life by a ransom. In the 9th of Henry I. this power of redemption was taken away, 1108. The punishment of theft was very severe in England till mitigated by Peel's acts, 9 & 10 Geo. V., 1829. The laws respecting theft were consolidated in 1862.

THEISTS (Theos, God). A kind of deists about 1660. —Dean Martin.

THEOLOGY (from the Greek Theos, God), the science which treats of the nature and attributes of God, of his relations to man, and of the manner in which they may be discovered. It is generally divided into two heads. 1. Inspired (including the Holy Scriptures, their interpretation, etc.). 2. Natural; which Lord Bacon calls the first part of Philosophy.—Butler's Analogy of Religion (1736) and Paley's Natural Theology (1802) are eminent books on the latter subject.—The "Summa Totius Theologie" by Thomas Aquinas (born about 1224), a standard Roman Catholic work, was printed with commentaries, etc., in 1596.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS (lovers of God and man), a sect formed in France in 1796; was headed by one of the five directors, Lepaux, in 1797, and broke up in 1802.

THERMIDOR REVOLUTION. On the 9th Thermidor of the 2d year (July 27, 1794), the Convention deposed Robespierre, and on the next day he and twenty-two of his partisans were executed.

THERMO-ELECTRICITY. See under Electricity and Heat.

THERMOMETER. The invention of this instrument is ascribed to several scientific persons, all about the same time. To Galileo, before 1597.—Libri. Invented by Drebbel of Alcmæra, 1609.—Boerhaave. Invented by Paolo Sarpi, 1609.—Fulgentio. Invented by Sanctorio in 1610.—Borelli. Fahrenheit's thermometer was invented about 1726; Reaumur's and Celsius's (the latter now termed Centigrade) soon after. Fahrenheit's scale is usually employed in England, and Reaumur's and the Centigrade on the Continent. Freezing point: Fah. 32°; R. 0°; C. 0°. Boiling point: Fah. 212°; R. 80°; C. 100°. The mode of construction by substituting quicksilver for spirits was invented some years subsequently. Halley proposed it in 1697. Mr. L. M. Casella issued a minimum thermometer in Sept., 1861. It registers degrees of cold by means of mercury, hitherto deemed impossible.

THERMOPYLÆ, in Doris, N. Greece. Leonidas, at the head of 300 Spartans and 700 Thespians, at the defile of Thermopylæ, withstood the whole force of the Persians during three days, Aug. 7, 8, 9, 480 B.C., when Ephialtes, a Trachinian, perfidiously leading the enemy by a secret path up the mountains, brought them to the rear of the Greeks, who, thus placed between two assailants, perished gloriously on heaps of their slaughtered foes. One Greek only returned home, and he was received with reproaches for having fled. Here Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, was defeated by the Romans, 191 B.C.

THESSALONICA (now Salonica), a city in Macedonia. Here Paul preached, 53; and to the Church here he addressed two epistles in 54. In consequence of seditions, a frightful massacre of the inhabitants took place in 390, by order of the Emperor Theodosius. Thessalonica partook of the changes of the Eastern Empire. It was sold to the Venetians by the Emperor Andronicus in 1425; taken by the Turks in 1430; burnt July 11, 1856.

THESSALY (N. Greece), the seat of many of the adventures described by the poets. The first king of whom we have any certain knowledge was Hellen, son of Deucalion, from whom his subjects were called Hellenists, a name afterward extended to all Greeks. From Thessaly came the Achæans, the Ætolians, the Dorians, the Hellenists, etc. The two most remarkable events in the early history of this country are the deluge of Deucalion, 1548 B.C., and the expedition of the Argonauts, 1263 B.C. See them severally. Thessaly was conquered by the great Philip, 352 B.C., and partook of the fortunes of Macedonia. It is now part of the kingdom of Greece.

TETFORD (Norfolk), the Roman Sitomagus, was a bishopric from 1070 to 1091, when the see was removed to Norwich.

THIMBLES are said to have been found at Herculaneum.—The art of making them was brought to England by John Lofting, a mechanic, from Holland, who set up a workshop at Islington, near London, and practiced the manufacture in various metals with profit and success, about 1695.—Anderson.

THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES. See Articles.

THIRTY TYRANTS, a term applied to the governors of Athens in 404 B.C., who were expelled by Thrasybulus; and also to the aspirants to the imperial throne of Rome during the reigns of Gallienus and Aurelian, A.D. 259-274.

THIRTY YEARS' WAR, in Germany, between the Catholics and Protestants. It began with the latter in Bohemia in 1618, and ended with the peace of Westphalia in 1648. It is renowned for the victories of Walenstein and Gustavus Adolphus, of Sweden.

THISTLE,* ORDER OF THE, SCOTLAND, founded by

* Some Scottish historians make the origin of this order very ancient. The abbot Justinian says it was instituted by Achaclus I. of Scotland, 809, when that monarch made an alliance with Charlemagne, and then took for his device the thistle. It is stated that King Huns, the Pict, had a dream, in which St. Andrew made a midnight visit, and promised him a sure victory over his foes, the Northumbrians; and that the next day St. Andrew's cross appeared in the air, and the James V., 1540. It consisted originally of himself, as sovereign, and twelve knights, in imitation of Christ and his twelve apostles. In 1542 James died, and the order was discontinued about the time of the Reformation. The order was renewed by James VII. of Scotland and II. of England, by making eight knights, May 29, 1687; increased to twelve by Queen Anne in 1703; to sixteen by George IV. in 1827.

THE ORIGINAL KNIGHTS OF 1687.

George, duke of Gordon.
John, marquess of Athol.
James, earl of Arran, afterward Duke of Hamilton; killed in a duel, 1712.
Alexander, earl of Moray.
James, earl of Perth; attainted.
Kenneth, earl of Seaforth; attainted.
George, earl of Dumbarton.
John, earl of Melford; attainted.

THISTLEWOOD'S CONSPIRACY. See Cato-Street Conspiracy.

THOMITES (or TOMITES), a body of enthusiasts who assembled at Broughton, near Canterbury. A Cornish publican named Thom, or Tom (religiously insane), assumed the name of Sir W. Courtenay, knight of Malta and King of Jerusalem, and incited the rabble against the Poor Law Act. On May 31, 1838, a farmer of the neighborhood, whose servant had joined the crowd which attended Thom, sent a constable to fetch him back; but on his arrival on the ground he was shot dead by Thom. The military were then called out, and Lieut. Bennett proceeded to take the murderer into custody; but Thom advanced, and, firing a pistol, killed the lieutenant on the spot. One of the soldiers fired at Thom, and laid him dead by the side of Lieut. Bennett. The people then attacked the military, who were compelled to fire, and several persons were killed before the mob dispersed. Many considered Thom a saint.

THORACIC DUCT, discovered first in a horse by Eustachius, about 1563; in the human body, by Ol. Rudbeck, a Swedish anatomist. Thomas Bartholine, of Copenhagen, and Dr. Joliffe, of England, also discovered it about 1654. See Lacteals.

THORINUM, a very rare metal (a heavy gray powder), discovered by Berzelius in 1828.

THORN (on the Vistula, Poland) was founded by the Teutonic Knights in 1281. Many Protestants were slain here (after a religious riot) at the instigation of the Jesuits in 1724.

THRACE (now Roumelia, in Turkey) derived its name from Thrax, the son of Mars.—Aspin. Thraces, the people, were descendants of Tiras, son of Japhet, and hence their name. They were a warlike people, and therefore Mars was said to have been born and to have his residence among them.—Euripides. Thrace was conquered by Philip and Alexander, and annexed to the Macedonian Empire about 335 B.C.; and it so remained till the conquest of Macedonia by the Romans, 168 B.C. On the ruins of Byzantium, the capital of Thrace, Constantinople was built. The Turks under Mohammed II. took the country A.D. 1453.—Priestley.

THRASHING MACHINES. The flail was the only instrument formerly in use for thrashing corn. The Romans used a machine called the tribulum, a sledge loaded with stones or iron, drawn over the corn-sheaves by horses. The first machine attempted in modern times was invented by Michael Menzies, at Edinburgh, about 1732; Andrew Meikle invented a machine in 1776. Many improvements have been since made.

THRASYMENE (N. Italy). A most bloody engagement took place here between the Carthaginians under Hannibal and the Romans under Flaminius, 217 B.C. No less than 15,000 Romans were left dead on the field of battle, and 10,000 taken prisoners; or, according to Livy, 6000; or Polybius, 15,000. The loss of Hannibal was about 1500 men. About 10,000 Romans made their escape, all covered with wounds.—Livy; Polybius. On the same day an earthquake occurred which desolated several cities in Italy.

THREATENING LETTERS. Sending letters, whether anonymously written, or with a fictitious name, demanding money, or threatening to kill a person or fire his house, was made punishable as a felony, without benefit of clergy, in 1723, 1730. Persons extorting money by threatening to accuse others of such offenses as are subjected to death, or other infamous punishments, were to be adjudged imprisonment, whipping, or transportation, by 50 George II., 1756; and other acts, the latest 10 & 11 Vict., c. 66, 1847.

Northumbrians were defeated. On this story, it is said, Achaclus framed the order more than 700 years before James V. revived it.

THU MB-SCREW, an inhuman instrument, commonly used in the first stages of torture by the Spanish Inquisition. It was in use in England also. The Rev. Wm. Carstairs was the last who suffered by it before the Privy Council, to make him divulge secrets entrusted to him, which he firmly resisted. After the Revolution in 1688, the thumb-screw was presented to him by the council. King William expressed a desire to see it, and tried it on, bidding the doctor to turn the screw; but at the third turn he cried out, "Hold! hold! doctor; another turn would make me confess any thing."

THUNDERING LEGION. During a contest with the invading Marcomanni, the prayers of some Christians in a Roman legion are said to have been followed by a storm of thunder, lightning, and rain, which tended greatly to discomfit the enemy. Hence the legion received the name above, A.D. 174.

THURINGIA, an early Gothic kingdom in Central Germany, was overrun by Attila and the Huns, 451; the last king, Hermanfried, was defeated and slain by Thierry, king of the Franks, who annexed it to his dominions. It was made an independent duchy, 674; a landgraviate, 880; given to Otho of Saxony, 909, when the Landgrave Burchardt was slain; it was separated from Saxony, 1180, but reunited to it in 1548.

THURLES (S. Ireland). Here was held a synod of the Roman Catholic archbishops, bishops, inferior clergy, and religious orders, under the direction of Archbishop Cullen, the Roman Catholic primate, Aug. 22, 1850. It condemned the Queen's Colleges, and recommended the foundation of a Roman Catholic University, Sept. 10 following. The acts were forwarded to Rome for approval, of the pope, Pius IX.

THURLOT'S INVASION. Thurlot, an Irish commodore in the French service, by his courage and daring became a terror to all the merchant ships of this kingdom. He had the command of a small armament, and landed 1000 men at Carrickfergus in Ireland, and plundered the town. He reached the Isle of Man, and was overtaken by Captain Elliot, with three frigates, who engaged his little squadron, which was taken, and the commodore killed, Feb. 28, 1760. Thurlot's true name was O'Farrell; his grandfather had followed the fortunes of James II.; but his mother being of a family of some dignity in France, he assumed her name.—Burns.

THURSDAY, the fifth day of the week, derived from Thor, a deified hero worshiped by the northern nations, particularly by the Scandinavians and Celts. His authority was said to extend over the winds, seasons, thunder and lightning, etc. He is said to have been the most valiant of the sons of Odin. This day still retains his name in the Danish, Swedish, and Low-Dutch languages, as well as in the English. Thursday is in Latin dies Jovis, or Jupiter's day.

TIARA, the triple crown of the pope, indicative of his civil rank, as the keys are of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The ancient tiara was a high round cap. Pope Damasus II. first caused himself to be crowned with a tiara, 1048. John XX. encompassed the tiara with a crown, 1276. Boniface VIII. added a second, 1295; and Benedict XII. formed the tiara about 1334.

TICINUS, a river, N. Italy. Here Hannibal defeated the Romans, 217 B.C.

TICKETS OF LEAVE. See Transportation and Crime.

TICONDEROGA (N. America). The French fortress here was unsuccessfully besieged by Abercromby in July, 1758; taken July 26, 1759. The Americans took it in 1775, but retired from it in July, 1777. The British retired from it shortly after.

TIDES. Homer is the earliest profane author who speaks of the tides. Posidonius of Apamea accounted for the tides from the motion of the moon, about 79 B.C.; and Caesar speaks of them in his fourth book of the Gallic War. The theory of the tides was first satisfactorily explained by Kepler, 1598; but the honor of a complete explanation of them was reserved for Sir Isaac Newton, about 1683.

TIENTSIN. See China, 1858.

TIGRIS, a river forming the eastern boundary of Mesopotamia, celebrated for the cities founded on its banks—Nineveh, Seleucia, Ctesiphon, and Bagdad. It was explored by an English steamer in 1838.

TILBURY (Essex). The camp formed here in 1858 to resist the Spanish invasion was visited by Queen Elizabeth.

TILES were originally flat and square, and afterward parallelogramic, etc. First made in England about 1246. They were taxed in 1784. The number of tiles taxed in England in 1820 was 81,924,626; and in 1830, 97,315,264. The tax was discontinued as discouraging house-building and interfering with the comfort of the people, in 1833.

TILSIT (on the River Niemen), where a treaty was concluded between France and Russia. Napoleon restored to the Prussian monarch one half of his territories, and Russia recognized the Confederation of the Rhine and the elevation of Napoleon's three brothers, Joseph, Louis, and Jerome, to the thrones of Naples, Holland, and Westphalia. Signed July 7, 1807, and ratified July 19 following.

TILTS. See Tournaments.

TIMBER BENDING. Apparatus was invented for this purpose by Mr. T. Blanchard, of Boston, U. S., for which a medal was awarded at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. A company was formed for its application in England in 1856.

TIME. Our ideas in regard to time have been of late greatly extended. The distant planet Neptune, discovered by Le Verrier and Adams in 1846, requires above 900 of our years for a single revolution, and the coal measures in Wales, a thickness of strata of more than twelve miles, would require for its deposition hundreds of thousands of years; while other formations could only be estimated in millions of years.—Phillips. See Clock, Sun-dials, Watches, etc.

TIMES NEWSPAPER. On Jan. 13, 1785, Mr. John Walter published the first number of the Daily Universal Register, price 2½d., printed on the logographic system (invented by Henry Johnson, a compositor), in which types containing syllables and words were employed instead of single letters.

On Jan. 1, 1788, the paper was named the Times. In 1803, when Mr. Walter gave up the paper to his son, the circulation was about 1000; that of the Morning Post being 4500.

Dr. Stoddart (satirized as Dr. Slop by Moore the poet) became editor in 1812, but five years after retired and set up in opposition the New Times, an unprofitable speculation. Thomas Barnes became next editor. He died May 7, 1841. The succeeding editors were William F. A. Delane, who died in 1853, and John Thaddeus Delane (his son).

On Nov. 23, 1814, the Times was first printed by steam power (the invention of F. König), 1200 per hour, afterward increased to 2000 and 4000.

The powerful articles contributed by Edward Stirling gained the paper the name of the Thunderer.

On Jan. 19, 1829, the first double number appeared.

In July, 1834, an attack of Mr. O'Connell in the House of Commons on the correctness of the reports of the debates in the Times was signally defeated.

Shortly after began the convenient summary of the debates, written in the first instance by Mr. Horace Twiss.

In 1841 the Times was instrumental in detecting and exposing a scheme organized by a company to defraud by forgery all the influential bankers of Europe. This brought on the proprietors an action for libel (in the case Bogle v. Lawson). The jury found the charge to be true, giving a verdict of one farthing damages, but the judges refused costs. Subscriptions were set on foot in all parts of Europe to reimburse the proprietors for the immense outlay in defending the action. This they firmly declined; and the money was expended in establishing Times Scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge, and at Christ's Hospital, and other schools; marble tablets also, commemorating the event, were set up in the Royal Exchange and in other places. These were the greatest honors ever conceded to a newspaper.

In Oct., 1845, the Times express was for the first time conveyed to India overland, by the agency of Lieut. Waghorn.

Of the number of the Times containing the life of the Duke of Wellington for Nov. 19, 1852, 70,000 were sold—the ordinary number being then 36,000; the present circulation is stated to vary from 50,000 to 60,000 (1866).

In 1854, the proprietors sent Mr. W. H. Russell as their special correspondent to the seat of war in the Crimea; in 1857, to India; and in 1861, to the Southern States of North America.

Times Fund.—On the 12th of October, 1854, Sir Robert Peel originated by a letter in the Times a subscription for the sick and wounded in the Crimean War, and in less than a fortnight £15,000 were sent to the Times' office to be thus appropriated. Mr. Macdonald (the present manager) was sent out by the proprietors as special commissioner to administer the fund, from which large quantities of food and clothing were supplied to the sufferers, with inestimable advantage. See Scutari and Nightingale.

In Dec., 1858, the Times drew attention to the state of the houseless poor of London, and in a few days £8000 were subscribed for their relief.

In 1851, 13,000,000 copies were sold; in 1857, 16,100,000; in 1859, 16,900,000; in 1860, 16,670,000.

In 1860, 16,400 copies per hour were printed.

On June 21, 1861, the Times consisted of 24 pages, containing 4076 advertisements (about 1810 it contained 150 advertisements).

TIN. The Phenicians traded with England for this article for more than 1100 years before the Christian era. It is said that this trade first gave them commercial importance in the ancient world. Under the Saxons, the tin mines appear to have been neglected; but after the coming in of the Normans, they produced considerable revenues to the Earls of Cornwall, particularly to Richard, brother of Henry III. A charter and various immunities were granted by Edmund, Earl Richard's brother, who also framed the Stannary laws (which see), laying a duty on the tin, payable to the Earls of Cornwall. Edward III. confirmed the tinners in their privileges, and erected Cornwall into a dukedom, with which he invested his son, Edward the Black Prince, 1337. Since that time, the heirs-apparent to the crown of England, if eldest sons, have enjoyed it successively. Tin mines were discovered in Germany, which lessened the value of those in England, till then the only tin mines in Europe, 1240.—Anderson. Discovered in Barbary, 1640; in India, 1740; in New Spain, 1782. England exports at present, on an average, 1600 tons of unwrought tin, besides manufactured tin and tin plates of the value of about £400,000. In 1857, 9788 tons; in 1860, 10,462 tons; in 1864, 10,108 tons of metallic tin were procured from British mines. Of tin plates and tin and pewter ware, there was exported in value, in 1847, £484,184; in 1854, £1,075,531; in 1860, £1,500,512; in 1861, £907,590; 1864, £1,264,100.

TINCHEBRAY (N.W. France), where a battle was fought between Henry I. of England and Robert, duke of Normandy. England and Normandy were reunited under Henry on the decease of William Rufus, who had already possessed himself of Normandy, though he had no other right to that province than by a mortgage from his brother Robert, at his setting out for Palestine. Robert, on his return, recovered Normandy by an accommodation with Henry; but the two brothers having afterward quarreled, the former was defeated by the latter in the battle of Tinchebray, Sept. 28, 1106, and Normandy was annexed to the crown of England.—Hénault.

TIPPECANOE, BATTLE OF. In the spring of 1811, Tecumseh, a Shawnee chief, attempted to confederate the Western and Southern Indians in a war against the United States. The movement became so alarming that General Harrison, then governor of the Indiana Territory, marched toward Tippecanoe, the headquarters of the chief, near the present village of Lafayette, Indiana, with about 650 men. There, on the 7th of Nov., he fought over 600 Indians, under Tecumseh's brother, and defeated them. Harrison lost 62 killed and 126 wounded; the Indians lost 150 killed.

TITANIUM, a rare metal, discovered by Gregor in menakite, a Cornish mineral, in 1791, and in 1794 by Klaproth.

TITHES, or TENTHS, were commanded to be given to the tribe of Levi, 1490 B.C.—Lev. xxvii. 30. Abraham, returning from his victory over the kings (Gen. xiv.), gave tithes of the spoil to Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of the most high God (1913 B.C.). For the first 800 years of the Christian Church they were given purely as alms, and were voluntary.—Wicliffe. "I will not put the title of the clergy to tithes upon any divine right, though such a right certainly commenced, and I believe as certainly ceased, with the Jewish theocracy."—Blackstone. They were established in France by Charlemagne about 800.—Hénault. Tenths were confirmed in the Lateran councils, 1215.—Rainaldus.—The payment of tithes appears to have been claimed by Augustine, the first archbishop of Canterbury, and to have been allowed by Ethelbert, king of Kent, under the term "God's fee," about 600.

TITHES IN ENGLAND.

The first mention of them in any English written law is a constitutional decree made in a synod strongly enjoining tithes, 786.

Offa, king of Mercia, gave unto the Church the tithes of all his kingdom, to expiate the death of Ethelbert, king of the East Angles, whom he had caused to be basely murdered, 794.

Tithes were first granted to the English clergy in a general assembly held by Ethelwold, A.D. 844.—Henry.

In 1545, tithes were fixed at the rate of 2s. 9d. in the pound on rent; since then, many acts have been passed respecting them.

The Tithe Commutation Act, passed Aug. 13, 1836. It was amended in 1837, 1840, and 1846.

A rector is entitled to all the tithes; a vicar to a small part only, frequently to none.

TITHES IN IRELAND.

Several acts relating to tithes have been passed in 1832, 1838, 1839, 1840, and 1841, altering and improving the tithe system.

TITHING. The number or company of ten men, with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behavior of each of their society; of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman; but now he is nothing but a constable, formerly called the headborough.—Cowell.

TITLES, ROYAL. Henry IV. had the title of "Grace" and "My liege," 1399. Henry VI., "Excellent Grace," 1422. Edward IV., "Most High and Mighty Prince," 1461. Henry VII., "Highness," 1485; Henry VIII. the same title, and sometimes "Grace," 1509 et seq. But these two last were absorbed in the title of "Majesty," being that with which Francis I. of France addressed Henry at their memorable interview in 1520. See Field of the Cloth of Gold. Henry VIII. was the first and last king who was styled "Dread Sovereign." James I. coupled to "Majesty" the present "Sacred," or "Most Excellent Majesty." "Majesty" was the style of the Emperors of Germany; the first king to whom it was given was Louis XI. of France, about 1463.

TOBACCO, Nicotiana tabacum, received its name from Tabaco, a province of Yucatan, New Spain; some say from the island of Tobago, one of the Caribbees; others from Tobasco, in the Gulf of Florida. It is said to have been first observed at St. Domingo, 1492, and to have been used freely by the Spaniards in Yucatan in 1520. Tobacco was first brought to England in 1565 by Sir John Hawkins; but Sir Walter Raleigh and Sir Francis Drake are also mentioned as having first introduced it there, 1586. It was manufactured only for exportation for some years. Tobacco was a legal tender in the colony of Virginia for some time. In 1620, ninety young women, "pure and uncorrupt," were sent from England to Virginia as wives for the planters, for which they paid from 120 to 150 lbs. of tobacco apiece, equivalent from $90 to $122 each.—Stow's Chron. The Pied Bull inn, at Islington, is said to have been the first house in England where tobacco was smoked. In 1584 a proclamation was issued against it. The Star Chamber ordered the duties to be 6s. 10d. per pound, 1614. Its cultivation was prohibited in England by Charles II., 1684. Act laying a duty on the importation was passed 1684. The cultivation was allowed in Ireland, 1779. The tax was increased and put under the excise, 1789.—Anderson; Ashe. Various statutes have passed relative to tobacco. Act to revive the act prohibiting the culture of tobacco in Ireland, passed 2 Will. IV., Aug., 1831. Act directing that tobacco grown in Ireland be purchased in order to its being destroyed, March 24, 1832. The quantity consumed in England in 1791 was nine millions and a half of pounds, and in 1829 about fifteen millions of pounds. There were imported in 1850, 35,166,358 lbs., and 1,557,558 lbs. manufactured (cigars and snuff); in 1855, 36,820,546 lbs., and 8,946,766 lbs. manufactured; in 1860, 48,936,471 lbs., and 12,475,000 lbs. manufactured; and in 1864, 60,092,765 lbs., and 6,522,408 lbs. manufactured. The tobacco duties were modified in 1863.

TOBAGO (West Indies), discovered by Columbus in 1492; settled by the Dutch, 1642. Taken by the English, 1672; retaken, 1674. In 1748 it was declared a neutral island; but in 1763 it was ceded to the English. Tobago was taken by the French under De Grasse in 1781, and confirmed to them in 1783. Again taken by the English, April 14, 1793, but restored at the peace of Amiens, Oct. 6, 1802. The island was once more taken by the British under General Grinfield, July 1, 1803, and was confirmed to them by the peace of Paris in 1814. Population in 1861, 15,410.

TOISON D'OR. See Golden Fleece.

TOKENS, BANK, silver pieces issued by the Bank of England, of the value of 6s., Jan. 1, 1798. The Spanish dollar had a small profile of George III. stamped on the neck of the Spanish king. They were raised to the value of 5s. 6d., Nov. 14, 1811. Bank tokens were also current in Ireland, where those issued by the bank passed for 6s. and lesser sums until 1817. They were called in on the revision of the coinage.

TOLBIAC (now ZULPICH), near the Rhine, where Clovis totally defeated the Allemanni, 496.

TOLEDO (Central Spain), capital of the Visigothic kingdom, 554, subdued by the Saracens, 711. Toledo was taken by Alfonso VI. of Castile, 1084. The University was founded in 1499. Toledo sword-blades have been famed since the 15th century.

TOLENTINO (in the Papal States), where a treaty was made between the pope and the French, Feb. 19, 1797. Here Joachim Murat, having resumed arms against the Allies, was defeated by the Austrians, May 3, 1815.

TOLERATION ACT, passed in 1689* to relieve Protestant dissenters from the Church of England. Their liberties were, however, greatly endangered in the latter days of Queen Anne, who died on the day that the Schism Bill was to become a law, Aug. 1, 1714.

TOLLS were first paid by vessels passing the Stade on the Elbe, 1109. They were first demanded by the Danes of vessels passing the Sound, 1341. See Stade and Sound. Toll-bars in England originated in 1267, on the grant of a penny for every wagon that passed through a certain manor; and the first regular toll was collected a few years after for mending the road in London between St. Giles's and Temple Bar. Gathered for repairing the highways of Holborn Inn Lane and Martin's Lane (Aldersgate Street), 1346. Toll-gates or turnpikes were set up in 1663. In 1827, 27 turnpikes near London were removed by Parliament; 81 turnpikes and toll-bars ceased on the north of London on July 1, 1864; and 61 on the south side ceased on Oct. 31, 1865.

TONNAGE. See Tunnage.

TONOMETER, a delicate apparatus for tuning musical instruments, by marking the number of vibrations, was invented by H. Scheibler, of Crefeld, about 1834. It received little notice till M. Kœnig removed some of the difficulties opposed to its successful use, and exhibited it at the International Exhibition of 1862.

TONQUIN, South Asia, part of the kingdom of Anam. Here a French missionary bishop, Melchior, was murdered with great barbarity, July 27, 1858; the Abbé Neron was also murdered, Nov. 3, 1860. See Anam.

TONTINES, loans given for life annuities with benefit of survivorship, invented by Laurence Tonti, a Neapolitan. They were first set on foot at Paris to reconcile the people to Cardinal Mazarin's government, by amusing them with the hope of becoming suddenly rich, 1653.—Voltaire. Tonti died in the Bastille after seven years' imprisonment. A Mr. Jennings was an original subscriber for a £100 share in a tontine company, and being the last survivor of the shareholders, his share produced him £3000 per annum. He died, aged 103 years, June 19, 1798, worth £2,115,244.

TORBANEHILL MINERAL. Mr. Gillespie, of Torbanehill, granted a lease of all the coal in the estate to Messrs. Russell. In the course of working, the lessees extracted a combustible mineral of considerable value as a source of coal-gas, and realized a large profit in the sale of it as gas-coal. The lessor then denied that the mineral was coal, and disputed the right of the lessees to work it. At the trial in 1855 there was a great array of scientific men and practical gas engineers. The evidence was most conflicting. One side maintained the mineral to be coal, the other that it was bituminous schist. The judge set aside the scientific evidence, and the jury pronounced it to be coal. The authorities in Prussia have since pronounced it not to be coal.—Percey. Albert coal is found in Hillsborough County, New Brunswick. It resembles, chemically, geologically, and in its uses, the Torbanehill mineral. The same controversy as to whether it is a coal or not has been determined in courts, as that was, viz., that it is a coal.

TORGAU (N. Germany), the site of a battle between Frederick II. of Prussia and the Austrians, in which the former obtained a signal victory; the Austrian general, Count Daun, a renowned warrior, being wounded, Nov. 3, 1760. He had, in 1757, obtained a great victory over the Prussian king. Torgau was taken by the Allies in 1814.

TORIES, a term given to a political party about 1678. See Whig. Dr. Johnson defines a Tory as one who adheres to the ancient Constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the Church of England. The Tories long maintained the doctrines of "divine hereditary indefeasible right, lineal succession, passive obedience, prerogative," etc.—Bolingbroke. See Conservatives. For the chief Tory administrations, see Pitt, Perceval, Liverpool, Wellington, Peel, and Derby. Whig and Tory were the distinctive titles adopted for the Republicans and Loyalists respectively during the American Revolution.

TORONTO, the capital of Canada West, founded in 1794 as York; it received its present name in 1834.

TORPEDO SHELLS, a name given to explosives placed under ships, an invention ascribed to David Bushnell in 1777. Torpedo shells ignited by electricity were employed in the war in the United States, 1861-5. On Oct. 4, 1865, Messrs. McKay and Beardslee tried them at Chatham before the Duke of Somerset and others. An old vessel, the Terpsichore, was speedily sunk. The preliminary arrangements are considered rather complicated. Magneto-electricity was employed.

TORRES VEDRAS (a city of Portugal). Near here, Wellington, retreating from the French, took up a strong position, called the Lines of Torres Vedras, Oct. 10, 1810.

TORTURE was only permitted by the Romans in the examination of slaves. It was used early in the Roman Catholic Church against heretics, and was used in England so late as 1558, and in Scotland until 1690. The trial by torture was abolished in Portugal, 1776; in France, by Louis XVI., in 1789; and in Sweden, by Gustavus III., 1786. General Picton was convicted of applying the torture to Louisa Calderon, in Trinidad, at his trials, Feb. 21, 1806, and June 11, 1808.

TOULON (S. France), an important military and naval port. It was taken by Charles V. in 1536. In 1707 it was bombarded by the Allies both by land and sea, by which almost the whole town was reduced to a heap of ruins, and several ships burned; but the Allies were at last obliged to raise the siege. It surrendered Aug. 27, 1793, to the British admiral, Lord Hood, who took possession both of the town and shipping, in the name of Louis XVII., under a stipulation to assist in restoring the French Constitution of 1789. A conflict took place between the English and French forces, when the latter were repulsed, Nov. 15, 1793. Toulon was retaken by Bonaparte, Dec. 19, when great cruelties were exercised toward such of the inhabitants as were supposed to be favorable to the British.—A naval battle off this port was fought Feb. 10, 1744, between the English under Mathews and Lestock, against the fleets of France and Spain; in this engagement the brave Captain Cornwall fell. The victory was lost by a misunderstanding between the English admirals. Mathews was afterward dismissed for misconduct by the sentence of a court-martial.

TOULOUSE (S. France), founded about 615 B.C., was the capital of the Visigothic kings in A.D. 419, and was taken by Clovis in 507. A dreadful tribunal was established here to extirpate heretics, 1229. The Tyonbadoirs, or rhetoricians of Toulouse, had their origin about 350, and consisted of a fraternity of poets, whose art was extended throughout Europe, and gave rise to the Italian and French poetry. See Troubadours. The allied British and Spanish army entered this city on April 12, 1814, immediately after the Battle of Toulouse, fought between the British Peninsular army under Lord Wellington and the French, April 10, 1814. The French were led by Marshal Soult, whom the victorious British here forced to retreat, after twelve hours' fighting, from seven o'clock in the morning until seven at night, the British forcing the French intrenched position before Toulouse. At the battle, neither of the commanders knew that Napoleon had abdicated the throne of France.

TOULOUSE: the county was created out of the

* The toleration granted was somewhat limited. It exempted persons who took the new oath of allegiance and supremacy and made also a declaration against popery, from the penalties incurred by absconding themselves from church and holding unlawful conventicles; and it allowed the Quakers to substitute an affirmation for an oath, but did not relax the provisions of the Test Act (which see). The party spirit of the times checked the king in his liberal measures.

kingdom of Aquitaine by Charlemagne in 778. It enjoyed great prosperity till the dreadful war of the Albigenses (which see), when the Count Raymond VI. was expelled, and Simon de Montfort became count. At his death in 1218, Raymond VII. obtained his inheritance. His daughter Jane and her husband, Alphonse (brother of Louis IX. of France), dying without issue, the county of Toulouse was united to the French monarchy in 1271.

TOURNAMENTS, or Jousts, were martial sports of the ancient cavaliers. Tournament is derived from the French word tourner, "to turn round." Tournaments were frequent about 890; and were regulated by the Emperor Henry I. about 919. The Lateran Council published an article against their continuance in 1136. One was held in Smithfield so late as the 12th century, when the taste for them declined in England. Henry II. of France, in a tilt with the Count of Montgomeri, had his eye struck out, an accident which caused the king's death in a few days, June 29, 1559. Tournaments were then abolished in France.—A magnificent feast and tournament, under the auspices of Archibald, earl of Eglintoun, took place at Eglintoun Castle, Aug. 29, 1839, and the following week. Many of the visitors (among whom was the present Emperor of the French) assumed the characters of ancient knights, Lady Seymour being the "Queen of Beauty."

TOURNAY (S. Belgium) was very flourishing till it was ravaged by the barbarians in the 5th century. It has sustained many sieges. Taken by the Allies in 1709, and ceded to the house of Austria by the treaty of Utrecht; but the Dutch were allowed to place a garrison in it as one of the barrier towns. It was taken by the French under General Labourdonnaye, Nov. 11, 1792. Battle near Tournay, between the Austrians and British on one side, and the French on the other; the former victorious, May 8, 1793.

TOURNIQUET (from tourner, to turn), an instrument for stopping the flow of blood into a limb by tightening the bandage, employed in amputations, is said to have been invented by Morelli at the siege of Besançon, 1674. J. L. Petit, in France, invented the screw tourniquet in 1718.

TOURS, an ancient city, Central France, near which Charles Martel gained a great victory over the Saracens, Oct. 10, 732, and from which he acquired the name of Martel, signifying hammer. This victory saved Europe.

TOWERS. That of Babel, the first of which we read, built in the plains of Shinar (Gen. xi.), 2247 B.C. See Babel. The Tower of the Winds at Athens, built 550 B.C. The Tower of Pharos (see Pharos), 280 B.C. The round towers in Ireland were the only structures of stone found at the arrival of the English, 1169, except some buildings in the maritime towns founded by the Danes. These towers are tall hollow pillars, nearly cylindrical, but narrowing toward the top, pierced with lateral holes to admit the light, and covered with conical roofs. Fifty-six of them still remain, from 50 to 130 feet high. See Pisa.

TOWER OF LONDON. The tradition that Julius Cæsar founded a citadel here is very doubtful. A royal palace, consisting of no more than what is now called the White Tower, which appears to have been first marked out by William the Conqueror, 1076, was commenced in 1078, and completed by his son, William Rufus, who, in 1098, surrounded it with walls and a broad deep ditch. Several succeeding princes made additions to it, and King Edward III. built the church. In 1638 the White Tower was rebuilt; and since the restoration of King Charles II. it has been thoroughly repaired, and a great number of additional buildings made to it. Here are the Armory, Jewel-office, and various other divisions and buildings of peculiar interest; and here took place many executions of illustrious persons, and many murders (King Henry IV., 1471; King Edward V. and his brother, 1485; Sir Thomas Overbury, 1613). See England. The Armory and 280,000 stand of arms, etc., were destroyed by fire Oct. 30, 1841. The "New Buildings" in the Tower were completed in 1850.

TOWNLEY MARBLES, in the British Museum, were purchased in 1812.

TOWTON (Yorkshire), where a sanguinary battle was fought, March 29, 1461, between the houses of York (Edward IV.) and Lancaster (Henry VI.), to the latter of whom it was fatal, and on whose side more than 37,000 fell. Edward issued orders to give no quarter, and the most merciless slaughter ensued. Henry was made prisoner, and confined in the Tower; his queen, Margaret, fled to Flanders.

TOXOPHILITES (from toxon, a bow, and philos, a lover), a society established by Sir Aston Lever in 1781. In 1834 they took grounds in the inner circle of Regent's Park, and built the archery lodge. They possess a very curious piece of plate, given by Catharine, queen of Charles II., to be shot for by the Finsbury archers, of whom the Toxophilites are the representatives.

TRACTARIANISM, a term applied to certain opinions on Church matters propounded in the "Tracts for the Times," of which ninety numbers were published, 1833-41. The principal writers were the Revs. Dr. E. Pusey, J. H. Newman, J. Keble, J. Froude, and I. Williams—all of the University of Oxford. See Puseyism.

TRACTION ENGINES were used on common roads in London in 1860, but afterward restricted. In Ang., 1862, one of Bray's traction engines conveyed through the city a mass of iron which would have required 29 horses.

TRADE AND PLANTATIONS, BOARD OF. Cromwell seems to have given the first notions of a board of trade: in 1655 he appointed his son Richard, with many lords of his council, judges, and gentlemen, and about twenty merchants of London, York, Newcastle, Yarmouth, Dover, etc., to meet and consider by what means the trade and navigation of the republic might be best promoted.—Thomas's Notes of the Rolls. King Charles II., on his restoration, established a council of trade for keeping a control over the whole commerce of the nation, 1660; he afterward instituted a board of trade and plantations, which was remodeled by William III. This board was abolished in 1782, and a new council for the affairs of trade on its present plan was appointed Sept. 2, 1786.

TRAFALGAR (Cape, S. Spain), off which a great naval victory was gained by the British, under Nelson, against the combined fleets of France and Spain, commanded by Admiral Villeneuve and two Spanish admirals, Oct. 21, 1805. The enemy's force was eighteen French and fifteen Spanish vessels, all of the line; that of the British, twenty-seven ships. After a protracted fight, Villeneuve and the other admirals were taken, and nineteen of their ships captured, sunk, or destroyed. Nelson was killed, and Admiral Collingwood succeeded to the command. Nelson's ship was the Victory; and his last signal was, "England expects every man to do his duty." See Nelson.

TRAGEDY. See Drama.

TRAJAN'S PILLAR (in Rome), erected 114, by his directions, to commemorate his victories, and executed by Apollodorus, still exists. It was built in the square called the Forum Romanum; it is 140 feet high, of the Tuscan order.

TRAM-ROADS, an abbreviation of Outram-roads, derive the name from Mr. Benjamin Outram, who in 1800 made improvements in the system of railways for common vehicles, then in use in the north of England. The iron tram-road from Croydon to Wandsworth was completed on July 24, 1801. Mr. Outram was father of the late Sir James Outram, the Indian general.—Chambers.

TRANQUEBAR (East Indies), the Danish settlement here, founded in 1618, was purchased by the English in 1845.

TRANSFIGURATION. The change of Christ's appearance on Mount Tabor, in the presence of Peter, James, and John, A.D. 32 (Matt. xvii.). The feast of the Transfiguration, kept on Aug. 6, was instituted by Pope Calixtus II. in 1455.

TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD. See Blood.

TRANSIT. See Venus.

TRANSLATION TO HEAVEN. The translation of Enoch to heaven for his faith at the age of 365 years, took place 3017 B.C. The prophet Elijah was translated to heaven in a chariot of fire, 896 B.C.—The possibility of translation to the abode of eternal life has been maintained by some extravagant enthusiasts. The Irish House of Commons expelled Mr. Asgill from his seat for his book asserting the possibility of translation to the other world without death, 1703.

TRANSPORTATION. See Banishment. Judges were given the power of sentencing offenders to transportation "into any of his majesty's dominions in North America" by 18 Charles II., c. 3 (1666), and by 4 Geo. I., c. 11 (1718). Transportation ceased in 1775, but was revived in 1784. The reception of convicts has been successfully refused by the Cape of Good Hope (in 1849), and by the Australian colonies (1864). Transportation, even to West Australia, where labor is wanted, is to cease in a few years, through the fierce opposition of the eastern colonies. In consequence of the recent difficulty experienced in transporting felons, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 99, was passed to provide other punishment, namely, penal servitude, empowering her majesty to grant pardon to offenders under certain conditions, and licenses to others to be at large; such licenses being liable to be revoked if necessary; and many have been. These licenses are termed "tickets of leave." The system was much assailed in Oct. and Nov., 1862, on account of many violent crimes being traced to ticket-of-leavers. See Crime.

John Eyre, a man of fortune, was sentenced to transportation for stealing a few quires of paper (Phillips)..... Nov. 1, 1771
The Rev. Dr. O'Halloran, tutor to the Earl of Chesterfield, was transported for forging a frank (10d. postage)..... Sept. 9, 1818
The first transportation of felons to Botany Bay was in May, 1787, where Governor Phillip arrived with about 500 on Jan. 20, 1788; convicts were afterward sent to Van Diemen's Land, Norfolk Island, etc.

Returning from transportation was punishable with death until 5 William IV., c. 67, Aug., 1834, when an act was passed making the offense punishable by transportation for life.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the doctrine that the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into the very flesh and blood of Christ by the consecration was broached in the days of Gregory III. (731), and accepted by Amalarius and Radburtus (about 840), but rejected by Rabanus Maurus, Johannes Scotus Erigena, Berengarius, and others. In the Lateran Council held at Rome by Innocent III., the word "transubstantiation" was used to express this doctrine, which was decreed to be incontrovertible, and all who opposed it were condemned as heretics. This was confirmed by the Council of Trent, Jan. 18, 1562. John Huss, Jerome of Prague, and other martyrs of the Reformation, suffered for denying this dogma, which is renounced by the Church of England (28th Article), and by all Protestant dissenters.

TRANSYLVANIA, an Austrian province, was part of the ancient Dacia (which see). In 1526, John Zapoly rendered himself independent of the Emperor Ferdinand I. by the aid of the Turks. His successors ruled with much difficulty till 1699, when the Emperor Leopold I. finally incorporated Transylvania into the Austrian dominions. The Transylvanian deputies did not take their seats in the Austrian Parliament till Oct. 20, 1863.

TRAPPISTS. The first abbey of La Trappe, in Normandy, was founded in 1140 by Retrou, count de Perche. The present order of Trappists owes its origin to the learned Bonthillier de la Rancé (editor of Anacreon when aged 14), who, from some cause not certainly known, renounced the world, and sold all his property, giving the proceeds to the abbey of La Trappe, to which he retired in 1662, to live there in great austerity. After several efforts he succeeded in reforming the monks, and in establishing a new rule, which commands silence, prayer, reading, and manual labor, and which forbids study, wine, fish, etc. Rancé was born in 1620, and died in 1700.*

TRAVELING IN ENGLAND. In 1707, it took in summer one day, in winter nearly two days, to travel from London to Oxford (46 miles). In 1817, the journey was accomplished in six or seven hours. By the Great Western Railway express (63 miles) it is done in 1½ hour. In 1928, a gentleman traveled from Newcastle to London (273 miles) inside the best coach in 35 hours, at an expense of £6 15s. 3d., or 6d. per mile (including dinner, etc.). In 1857, the charge of the Great Northern Railway (275½ miles) first-class express (6 hours) was 50s. 9d.

TREAD-MILL, an invention of the Chinese to raise water for the irrigation of the fields. The complicated tread-mill introduced into the prisons of Great Britain is the invention of Mr. (afterward Sir William) Cubitt, of Ipswich. It was erected at Brixton jail, 1817, and soon afterward in other large prisons.

TREASON. See High Treason. PETTY TREASON (a term abolished in 1828) was a wife's murder of her husband; a servant's murder of his master; and an ecclesiastical person's murder of his prelate or other superior—so declared by statute, 1352.

TREASON-FELONY. By the Crown and Government Security Act, 11 Vic., c. 12 (1848), certain treasons heretofore punishable with death were mitigated to felonies, and subjected to transportation or imprisonment. The Fenians in Ireland were tried under this act. See Trials, 1865.

TREASURER OF ENGLAND, LORD HIGH, the third great officer of the crown, a lord by virtue of his office, having the custody of the king's treasure, governing the upper court of Exchequer, and formerly sitting judicially among the barons. The first lord high treasurer in England was Odo, earl of Kent, in the reign of William I. This great trust is now confided to a commission, and is vested in five persons, called Lords Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Treasurer, and of these the chancellor of the Exchequer is usually one, the first lord being usually the premier. See Administrations for a succession of these officers. The first of this rank in IRELAND was John de St. John, Henry III., 1217; the last, William, duke of Devonshire, 1766; vice-treasurers were appointed till 1789; then commissioners till 1816, when the revenues of Great Britain and Ireland were united. The first lord high treasurer of SCOTLAND was Sir Walter Ogilvie, appointed by James I. in 1420; the last, in 1641, John, earl of Traquair, when commissioners were appointed.

TREASURER OF THE CHAMBER, formerly an officer of great consideration, and always a member of the privy council. He discharged the bills of all the king's tradesmen, and had his office in Cleveland Row, in the vicinity of the royal palace. His duties were transferred and the office suppressed at the same time with the offices of master of the great wardrobe and cofferer of the household, in 1782.—Beaton.

TREATIES. The first formal and written treaty made in England with any foreign nation was entered into between Henry III. and the Dauphin of France (then in England and leagued with the barons), Sept. 11, 1217. The first commercial treaty was with the Flemings, 1 Edw., 1272; the second with Portugal and Spain, 1303.—Anderson. The chief treaties of the principal civilized nations of Europe will be found described in their respective places; the following forms an index. See Conventions, Coalitions, Leagues, etc.

* A number of these monks, driven from France in the revolution of 1793, were received by Mr. Weld, of Lulworth, Dorsetshire, who gave them some land to cultivate and a habitation, where they remained till 1815. This order was charged with rebellion and conspiracy in France, and sixty-four English and Irish Trappists were shipped by the French government at Plymouth, Nov. 19, and were landed from the Hebe, French frigate, at Cork, Nov. 30, 1831. They have established themselves at Mount Melliker, county of Waterford, but do not maintain there the extreme rigor of their order.

TREBIA, now Trebbia, a river in N. Italy, where Hannibal defeated the Roman consul Sempronius, B.C. 218; and Suwarrow defeated the French Marshal Macdonald and compelled him to retreat, June 17-19, 1799.

TREBIZOND, a port of Asia Minor in the Black Sea, was colonized by the Greeks, and became subject to the kings of Pontus. It enjoyed self-government under the Roman empire, and when the Latins took Constantinople in 1204, it became the seat of an empire which endured till 1461, when it was conquered by the Turks under Mohammed I.

TRECENTO. See Italy, note.

TRENT (the ancient Tridentum), in the Tyrol, belongs to Austria. The council held here is reckoned in the Roman Catholic Church as the 18th or last general council. Its decisions are implicitly received as the standard of faith, morals, and discipline in that Church. It first sat Dec. 13, 1545, and continued (with interruptions) under Pope Paul III., Julius III., and Pius IV., to Dec. 4, 1563,* its last sitting (the 25th). A jubilee in relation to this council was celebrated in June, 1863.

TRENTON, BATTLE OF. Washington and his army had been driven from the Hudson to the Delaware and beyond before Cornwallis and a pursuing army. At Trenton a Hessian force 1500 strong, under Colonel Rall, and a troop of 500 light-horsemen, were stationed. Count Donop, another German commander, was a few miles below with a considerable force. On the evening of Christmas, 1776, Washington marched back to the Delaware, a few miles above Trenton, with 2400 men and artillery, and before sunrise the next morning had crossed and was on his way toward Trenton. The enemy were surprised. A severe engagement ensued. The British light-horse fled; forty or fifty Hessians were killed or fatally wounded (Rall among the latter), and a thousand made prisoners. This was an inspiring victory at a dark moment.

TRÈVES, the Roman Treviri, in Rhenish Prussia, was a prosperous city of the Gauls 12 B.C. The Emperor Gallienus held his court here A.D. 255. Trèves was made an electorate in the 14th century, and became subject to the archbishop in 1585. The archbishopric is said to have been founded before the 7th century, and to be the oldest in Germany. After various changes, Trèves was acquired by Prussia in 1815. In 1844 much excitement was occasioned by miracles said to have been wrought by a "Holy Coat."

TRIALS. Regulations for conducting trials were made by Lothaire and Edric, kings of Kent, about 673 to 680. Alfred the Great is said to have begun trial by jury; but there is good evidence of such trials long before his time. In a cause tried at Hawarden, nearly a hundred years before the reign of Alfred, we have a list of the twelve jurors; confirmed, too, by the fact that the descendants of one of them, of the name of Corbyn of the Gate, still preserve their name and residence at a spot in the parish yet called the Gate.—Phillips.

* In 1848 Mr. Barber returned to England with a free pardon, and an acknowledgment of his innocence by his prosecutors: he was readmitted to practice as an attorney; and on the 3d of August, 1859, in conformity with the recommendation of a select committee of the House of Commons, the sum of £5000 was voted him "as a national acknowledgment of the wrong he had suffered from an erroneous prosecution."

† This long-contested case created much sensation at the time. The bishop had refused to institute the Rev. Mr. Gorham in the living of Brampton-Speke, in Devonshire, to which he had been presented. The cause of the bishop's refusal was alleged want of orthodoxy in the plaintiff, who denied that spiritual regeneration was conferred by baptism; the court held that the charge against the plaintiff of holding false doctrine was proved, and that the bishop was justified in his refusal. Mr. Gorham appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which pronounced its opinion (March 8, 1850) that "the doctrine held by Mr. Gorham was not contrary or repugnant to the declared doctrine of the Church of England, and that Mr. Gorham ought not, by reason of the doctrine held by him, to have been refused admission to the vicarage of Brampton-Speke." This decision led to subsequent proceedings in the three courts of law, successively, for a rule to show cause why a prohibition should not issue directed to the judge of the Arches Court, and to the Archbishop of Canterbury, against giving effect to the judgment of her majesty in council. The rule was refused in each court, and in the end Mr. Gorham was instituted into the vicarage in question, Aug. 7, 1850.

Patience Swynfen v. F. H. Swynfen § a will case; the will affirmed.....July 27, “

* Decided again by privy council, partly for both parties; each to pay his own costs; March 21, 1857.
 † He was executed at Stafford on June 14, in the presence of 50,000 persons. If he had been acquitted he would have been tried for the murder of his wife and brother. The trial in every respect was the most remarkable one for many years.

‡ He was acquitted on a charge of murdering two children in May 1844, same year. His wife confessed the murder, but appeared to be insane.

§ The plaintiff was Patience Swynfen, widow of Henry John Swynfen, son of the testator, Samuel Swynfen. Her husband died June 15, 1854, and his father on July 16 following, having made a will nineteen days before his death, devising the Swynfen estate (worth above £60,000) to his son's wife, but leaving a large amount of personal estate undisposed of. The defendant, F. H. Swynfen, son of the testator's eldest half-brother, claimed the estate as heir-at-law on the ground of the testator's insanity. The issue was brought to trial in March, 1856, but proceedings were stayed by Mrs. Swynfen's counsel, Sir F. R. Thesiger, entering into an agreement with the opposite counsel, Sir Alexander Cockburn, without her consent, and in defiance of her instructions. After various proceedings, the Court of Chancery ordered a new trial. She gained her cause, mainly through the energy of her counsel, Mr. Charles R. Kennedy, to whom she had promised to pay £250,000 for his extraordinary services. Mrs. Swynfen, however, married a Mr. Brown and repudiated Mr. Kennedy's claim. The latter, in an action against her, obtained a verdict in his favor on March 29, 1862, which was, on appeal, finally reversed in Feb., 1864. Mrs. Swynfen was nonsuited in an action brought against her counsel (afterward Lord Chelmsford and Lord Chancellor), in July, 1859, and June, 1860.

* He was reprieved on the ground of insufficient evidence, but was tried and found guilty of bigamy, Nov. 16, 1859. On Nov. 11, 1862, he proved Miss Bankes's will and obtained her property.

TRIBUNES OF THE PEOPLE (Tribuni Plebis), magistrates of Rome, first chosen from among the commons to represent the people, 493 B.C., at the time the people, after a quarrel with the senators, had retired to Mons Sacer. The first two were C. Licinius and L. Albius; but their number was soon after raised to five, and 37 years after to ten, which number remained fixed. Their office was annual, and as the first had been created on the 4th of the ides of December, that day was chosen for the election. In A.D. 1347, Nicolo di Rienzi assumed absolute power in Rome as tribune of the people, and reformed many abuses; but, committing many extravagances, he lost his popularity and was compelled to abdicate. He returned to Rome and was assassinated, Sept. 8, 1354.

TRICOTEUSES (knitters), a name given to a number of French Republican females, who zealously attended executions in 1792, knitting at intervals.

TRIENNIAL PARLIAMENTS. On Feb. 15, 1641, an act was passed providing for the meeting of a Parliament at least once in three years. It was repealed in 1664. Another triennial bill, passed in 1694, was repealed by the Septennial Act, 1716. See Parliaments and Septennial Parliaments.

TRIESTE, an Austrian port on the Adriatic, declared a free port in 1750. It was held by the French in 1717, 1797, and 1805. Since the establishment of the overland mail to India, it has risen to great commercial importance.

TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY. See Ordinance.

TRIMMER; a term applied to Charles Montague, earl of Halifax, and others who held similar political opinions, midway between those of the extreme Whigs and Tories, about the latter part of the 17th century. He assumed the title as an honor, asserting that it could be rightly given to the British Constitution and Church. Macaulay says that Halifax was a Trimmer on principle, and not a renegade. He died in 1715.

TRINCOMALEE. Reckoned the finest harbor in the East Indies. Trincomalee was taken from the Dutch by the English in 1782; it was retaken by the French the same year, and was restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1783. It surrendered to the British, under Colonel Stewart, Aug. 26, 1795, and was confirmed to England by the peace of Amiens in 1802. See Ceylon. Of a series of actions off Trincomalee between Sir Edward Hughes and the French Admiral Suffrein, one was fought Feb. 18, 1782, the enemy having eleven ships to nine; on April 12 following, they had eighteen ships to eleven; and on July 6, same year, they had fifteen ships to twelve. In all these conflicts the French were defeated.

TRINIDAD, an island in the West Indies, was discovered by Columbus in 1498, and was taken from the Spaniards by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1595; but the French took it from the English in 1676. Taken by the British, with four ships of the line, and a military force under command of Sir Ralph Abercromby, to whom the island capitulated, Feb. 21, 1797; they captured two, and burnt three Spanish ships of war in the harbor. This possession was confirmed to England by the peace of Amiens in 1802. The insurrection of the negroes occurred Jan. 4, 1832. Population in 1861, 84,438.

TRINITY AND TRINITARIANS. The doctrine of the Trinity is received by nearly all Christians. Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, who flourished in the 2d century, was the first who used the term Trinity to express the three sacred persons in the Godhead. His Defense of Christianity was edited by Gesner, at Zurich, in 1546.—Watkins. An order of the Trinity was founded in 1198 by John de Matha and Felix de Valois. The Trinity Fraternity, originally of fifteen persons, was instituted at Rome by St. Philip Neri in 1548. The act to exempt from penalties persons denying the doctrine of the Trinity (such as Unitarians and Swedenborgians) passed in 1813.

TRINITY COLLEGES. See Cambridge and Oxford. Trinity College, Dublin, called the University; grant of the Augustine monastery of All Saints within the suburbs for erecting this college, conferred by Queen Elizabeth, 1591. First stone laid by Thomas Smith, mayor of Dublin, Jan. 1, 1593. New charter, 1637. Made a barrack for soldiers, 1689.—Burns. The principal, or west front, erected 1759. Library erected, 1732.

TRINITY HOUSE, LONDON, founded by Sir Thomas

Spart, 1512, as an "association for piloting ships," was incorporated in 1514, and reincorporated in 1647 and 1685. The present Trinity House was erected in 1795. Trinity Houses were founded at Deptford, at Hull, and at Newcastle: these three societies were instituted and incorporated by Henry VIII., the first in 1512, the other two in 1537. By their charter they have the power of examining, licensing, and regulating pilots, and of erecting beacons and light-houses, and of placing buoys in the channels and rivers; and their powers and privileges have been greatly augmented by succeeding kings. Recent masters: the Prince Consort, died Dec. 14, 1861; Lord Palmerston, appointed June 16, 1862, died Oct. 18, 1865; succeeded by the Prince of Wales.

TRINITY SUNDAY. The festival of the Holy Trinity was instituted by Pope Gregory IV. in 828, on his ascending the papal chair, and is observed by the Latin and Protestant Churches on the Sunday next following Pentecost or Whitsuntide, of which, originally, it was merely an octave. The observance of the festival was first enjoined in the Council of Arles, 1260. It was appointed to be held on the present day by Pope John XX. in 1334. Trinity Sunday, in 1866, May 27; in 1867, June 16; in 1868, June 7.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE was ratified between England and the States-General against France, for the protection of the Spanish Netherlands; Sweden afterward joining the league, it was known as the Triple Alliance, Jan. 28, 1668. Another Triple Alliance was that between England, Holland, and France against Spain, 1717.

TRIPOLITZA, Greece, was stormed by the Greeks, who committed dreadful cruelties, Oct. 5, 1821; retaken by the Egyptians, 1825; given up to the Greeks, 1828.

TIREMES, galleys with three banks of oars, are said to have been invented by the Corinthians, 784 B.C.

TRIUMPHS were granted by the Roman senate to generals of armies after they had won great victories. They were received into the city with great magnificence and public acclamations. There were the great, called the Triumph; and the less, the Ovation. See Ovation.

TRIUMVIRATES, ROMAN. The first, 60 B.C., consisted of Julius Caesar, Pompey, and Crassus, who formed a coalition to rule the state. Their union lasted ten years, and the civil war ensued. The second triumvirate, 43 B.C., was formed by Octavius Cæsar, Mark Antony, and Lepidus, through whom the Romans totally lost their liberty. Octavius disagreed with his colleagues; Lepidus was expelled in 36; Antony was subdued in 31, and Octavius made himself absolute in Rome. This triumvirate continued for about twelve years. See Rome. On March 29, 1849, a triumvirate was appointed at Rome, consisting of Joseph Mazzini, Armellini, and Saffi, which resigned on July 1, 1849, when the city was taken by the French.

TROPPEAU, CONGRESS OF, in Austrian Silesia. The emperors Francis of Austria and Alexander of Russia met at Troppau, Oct. 20, 1820. The conference between them and the King of Prussia, against Naples, took place Nov. 10; and the Congress was transferred to Laybach, as nearer to Italy, Dec. 17, 1820. See Laybach.

TROUBADOURS AND TROUVÈRES (from troubar, trouver, to find or invent), the poets of the Middle Ages (from the 11th to the 15th century). The former flourished in the south of France and north of Spain, and used the Langue d'oc (that is, oc for oui, yes; the latter flourished in the north of France, and used the Langue d'oïl (that is, oil for oui). The Troubadours produced romances, yet excelled chiefly in lyric poetry; the Trouvères excelled in romances, several of which are extant; as, the Brut d'Angleterre, and the Rou, by Wace; the romance of the "Rose," by Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meung. The Troubadours were usually accompanied by Jongleurs, who sang their masters' verses, with the accompaniment of the guitar. Histories of these French poets, and specimens of their works, have been published in France. These poets, although frequently very licentious, undoubtedly tended to promote civilization during those warlike times.

TROY (Asia Minor). Its obscure and traditional history is immortalized by Homer.

 [Some time after the destruction of Troy, a new city was built with the same name, about thirty stadia distant from the old site. It was favored by Alexander the Great in his Asiatic expedition, but never rose to much importance, and in the age of Strabo was nearly in ruins.—Priestley.]

TROY WEIGHT. The Romans left their ounce, now our avoirdupois ounce, in Britain. The present ounce of this weight was brought from Grand Cairo into Europe about the time of the Crusades, 1095. It was first adopted at Troyes, a city of France, whence the name; and is used to weigh gold, silver, and precious stones. The Troy weight, Scots, was established by James VI. (our James I.) in 1618. See Standard.

TROYES, Central France, where a treaty was concluded between England, France, and Burgundy, whereby it was stipulated that Henry V. should marry Catharine, daughter of Charles VI., be appointed regent of France, and after the death of Charles should inherit the crown, May 21, 1420. Troyes was taken by the allied armies, Feb. 7; retaken by Napoleon, Feb. 23; and again taken by the Allies, March 4, 1814.

TRUCE OF GOD (Treuga Dei), a term given to a cessation of the private feuds and conflicts so general during the Middle Ages all over Europe. The clergy strenuously exerted their influence for the purpose. A synod at Roussillon, 1027, decreed that none should attack his enemy between Saturday evening (at none) and Monday morning (at the hour of prime). Similar regulations were adopted in England, 1042 (sometimes Friday and Wednesday being chosen for the time). The Truce of God was confirmed by many councils of the Church, especially the Lateran Council, in 1179.

TRUMPET. Some of the Greek historians ascribe the invention of the trumpet to the Tyrrhenians, and others to the Egyptians. It was in use in the time of Homer, but not at the time of the Trojan War. First torches, then shells of fish sounded like trumpets, were the signals in primitive wars.—Potter. The speaking-trumpet is said to have been used by Alexander the Great in 335 B.C. Trumpets were first sounded before the king in the time of Offa, king of Mercia, A.D. 790. Speaking-trumpets were improved by Kircher in 1652, by Salland, 1654, and philosophically explained by Moreland, 1671.

TRUMPET-FLOWER. Bignonia radicans, was brought to England from North America about 1640. The Trumpet Honeysuckle, Lonicera sempervirens, came from North America in 1656. The Bignonia capensis was brought to England from the Cape in 1823. The Large-flowered Trumpet-flower, or Bignonia grandiflora, was brought from China in 1800.

TRUSS. A transverse spring truss for ruptures was patented by Robert Brand in 1771, and by many other persons since. The National Truss Society, to assist indigent persons, was established in 1786, and many similar societies since.

TUBULAR BRIDGES. The Britannia Tubular Suspension Bridge, then the most wonderful enterprise in engineering in the world, was constructed about a mile southward of the Menai Strait Suspension Bridge.* At this spot is a rock called the Britannia Rock, near the centre of the Menai Strait, the surface of which is about ten feet above low-water level, on which is built a tower two hundred feet above high water (commenced building, May, 1846), and on which rest two lines of tubes or hollow girders strong enough to bear their weight and laden trains in addition, the ends resting on the abutments on each shore; each tube being more than a quarter of a mile in length. The height of the tube within is thirty feet at the Britannia tower, diminishing to twenty-three feet at the abutments. The lifting of these tubes to their places was regarded as the most gigantic operation ever successfully performed, June 27, 1849. The first locomotive passed through, March, 1850. The Conway Tubular Bridge (1846-48) is a miniature copy of the Britannia, and therefore requires no description. The principal engineers were Mr. Robert Stephenson and Mr. Fairbairn. At Chepstow is a railway tubular bridge, erected in 1852. A bridge or viaduct on the tubular principle (called the Albert Viaduct) over the River Tamar, at Plymouth, was opened by the prince consort May 2, 1859. The most stupendous tubular bridge in the world is that over the St. Lawrence, Canada. See Victoria Bridge.

TUDELA ON THE EBRO (N. Spain). Near here Marshal Lannes totally defeated the Spaniards, Nov. 23, 1809.

TUESDAY, in Latin Dies Martis, the day of Mars, the third day of the week, so called from Tuisto Tiu, or Tuesco, a Saxon deity, worshipped on this day. Tuisto is mentioned by Tacitus. See Week Days.

TUILERIES (Paris), the imperial palace of France, commenced by Catharine de Medicis, after the plans of Philibert de l'Orme, 1564; continued by Henry IV.; and finished by Louis XIV. This palace was stormed by the mob, Aug. 10, 1792, and ransacked in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848.

TULIPS came to England from Vienna, 1578. It is recorded in the register of Alkmaar, in Holland, that in 1639, 120 tulips, with the offsets, sold for 90,000 florins; and that one, called the Viceroy, sold for 4203 guilders! The States stopped this ruinous traffic. The tulip-tree, Liriodendron tulipifera, was brought to England from America about 1663.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS (Kent). The springs were discovered, it is stated, by Dudley, lord North, who, in the last stage of consumption, was restored to health by the use of its waters, 1606. The wells were visited by the queens of Charles I. and II. The place soon became fashionable.

TUNGSTEN (also called wolfram and scheellum), a hard, whitish brittle metal. From tungstate of lead, Scheele in 1781 obtained tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Luyart in 1786 obtained the metal. In 1859 it was employed in making a new kind of steel.

TUNIS AND TRIPOLI (N. Africa). The former stands near where Carthage was built. The territories of both formed part of the Carthaginian state, and were entirely destroyed by the Romans after the third Punic War, 148 B.C. Tunis was besieged by Louis IX. of France, 1270. It remained under African kings till taken by Barbarossa for Solymán the Magnificent. Barbarossa was expelled by Charles V.; but the country was recovered by the Turks under Selim II. Taken with great slaughter by the Emperor Charles V., when 10,000 Christian slaves were set at liberty, 1535. The Bey of Tunis was first appointed in 1570. Tunis was reduced by Admiral Blake on the bey refusing to deliver up the British captives, 1655. In July, 1856, the bey agreed to make certain constitutional reforms. The bey died Sept. 22, 1859; and his successor, Sidi Sadok, took the oath of fidelity to the Constitution. An insurrection broke out April 18, 1864, and the European powers sent ships of war to protect their subjects in May.

TUNNAGE AND POUNDAGE were ancient duties levied on every tun of wine and pound of other goods imported or exported, and were the origin of our "customs." They commenced in England about 21 Edw. III., 1346. They were granted to the kings of England for life, beginning with Edward IV. At the beginning of his reign Charles I. gave great offense by levying them on his own authority. They ceased in 1659.

TUNNELS. The earliest tunnel for internal navigation was executed by M. Rignot, in the reign of Louis XIV., at Beziers, in France. The first in En-which lies in the route of Telford's road. Accordingly, the Chester and Holyhead Railway was constructed; and in its course, both the Conway and the Menai had to be crossed, and hence were formed the present tubular bridges.

* The Britannia tubular bridge was intended to supply the place of —we may also say supersede— one of the finest bridges in the kingdom; and the railway, of which the tubular bridge forms a part, is in like manner a substitute for one of the finest mail-coach roads ever constructed. The road from London to Holyhead has been long regarded as the highway from the British metropolis to Dublin; and the late Mr. Telford was applied to by the government to perfect this route by the London and Holyhead mail-coach road, which he did by erecting a beautiful suspension bridge over the River Conway and over the Menai Strait; commenced in July, 1818, and finished in July, 1825. As Chester became a centre of railway communication a few years since, it was considered that a through route to Holyhead would be more conveniently established from that point than from Shrewsbury, gland was by Mr. Brindley, on the Duke of Bridgewater's navigation, near Manchester, about 1760. Project of the Gravesend Tunnel, 1800—the report upon it, 1801. The Thames Tunnel was projected by Mr. Brunel in 1823, and opened for foot passengers March 25, 1843. See Thames Tunnel. In 1857, M. Thomé de Gamond proposed the making a submarine tunnel from France to England! Innumerable tunnels have been made for railways. The railway tunnel at Liverpool was completed in the middle of 1829, lit up with gas, and exhibited once a week. On the London and Birmingham railway there are eight tunnels (the Primrose Hill, Watford, Kilsby, etc.), their total length being 7336 yards.—Smiles. It was computed by Mr. Fowler that there were 50 miles of tunnels in the United Kingdom in 1865, which cost about £6,500,000, at the average of £45 a yard.

TURIN, an ancient Roman city in Piedmont, capital of the Sardinian States, and of the kingdom of Italy till 1864, when it was superseded by Florence. Its importance dates from the permanent union of Savoy and Piedmont in 1416. The French besieged this city in 1706; but Prince Eugène defeated their army, and compelled them to raise the siege. In 1798, the French Republican army took possession of Turin, seized all the strong places and arsenals of Piedmont, and obliged the king and his family to remove to the island of Sardinia. In 1799, the French were driven out by the Austrians and Russians, but shortly afterward the city and all Piedmont surrendered to the French. In 1814 it was delivered up to the Allies, who restored it to the King of Sardinia. See Italy, 1864.

TURKESTAN, Independent Tartary. The original country of the Turks, in Central Asia, was reached by Alexander, 331 B.C. The Russians are gradually encroaching on this country; and on Feb. 14, 1865, a new province, named Turkestan, was created by decree.

TURKEY. The Turks were originally a tribe of Tartars; but by incorporation with the peoples they have conquered, they must be regarded as a mixed race. About 760 they obtained possession of a part of Armenia, called from them Turcomania. They afterward gradually extended their power; but in the 13th century, being harassed in their new possessions by other Tartar tribes, they returned to Asia Minor. Their dominions, divided for some time into petty states, were united under Othman, who assumed the title of Sultan, and established his empire at Prusa, in Bithynia, in 1298. The Turkish Empire comprehends the almost independent principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, Servia, and Montenegro, and the hereditary vicereignty of Egypt. The population of the empire in 1860 was estimated at 37,430,000.

 died imprisoned.
 1402. Solyman I., son of Bajazet; dethroned by his brother and successor,
 1410. Musa-Chelebi; strangled.
 1413. Mohammed I., also son of Bajazet.
 1421. Amurath II., succeeded by his son, 1451. Mohammed II., by whom Constantinople was taken in 1453.
 1481. Bajazet II., deposed by his son,
 1512. Selim I., who succeeded him.
 1520. Solyman II. the Magnificent, son of preceding.
 1566. Selim II., son of the last.
 1574. Amurath III., his son; on his accession he caused his five brothers to be murdered, and their mother, in grief, stabbed herself.
 1595. Mohammed III., son of Amurath; commenced his reign by strangling all his brothers, and drowning all his father's wives.

1603. Ahmed or Achmet, his son; succeeded by his brother.
 1617. Mustapha I.; deposed by the Janissaries, and imprisoned; succeeded by his nephew.
 1618. Osman II.; strangled by the Janissaries, and his uncle restored.

 1861. Abdul-Aziz, June 25 (born Feb. 9, 1830), the PRESENT Sultan of Turkey.

TURKEY TRADE, most lucrative at the time and long afterward, commenced in the year 1550. The Turkey or Levant Company of London was instituted by charter of Elizabeth in 1579.

TURKEYS AND GUINEA-FOWLS. First brought to England in 1523, and to France in 1570. Turkeys are natives of America, and were consequently unknown to the ancients. Mr. Pennant has established this fact by various particulars in the history of these birds, evincing that they are natives neither of Europe, Asia, nor Africa, a circumstance since placed beyond controversy by the researches of Mr. Beckmann.

TURKOMANS. See White Sheep.

TURNER'S LEGACIES. Joseph M. W. Turner, one of the greatest of landscape painters, was born in April, 1775, and died Dec. 19, 1851. He bequeathed to the nation all the pictures and drawings collected by him and deposited at his residence, 47 Queen Anne Street, London, on condition that a suitable gallery be erected for them within ten years; and directed his funded property to be expended in founding an asylum at Twickenham for decayed artists. The will was disputed by his relatives, but a compromise was made. The oil paintings (100 in number) and the drawings (1400) were obtained by the nation, and the engravings and some other property were transferred to the next of kin. The drawings were cleaned and mounted under the careful superintendence of Mr. Ruskin, and the pictures were sent to Marlborough House for exhibition. In 1861 the pictures were removed from the South Kensington Museum to the National Gallery.

TURNING. See Lathe. In our dock-yards, blocks and other materials for our ships of war are now produced by an almost instantaneous process, from rough pieces of oak, by the machinery of Mr. (afterward Sir Mark Isambard) Brunel (who died in 1849).

TURNPIKES. See Tolls.

TURPENTINE-TREE, Pistachia Terebinthus, came from Barbary before 1656. Spirits of turpentine was first applied with success to the rot in sheep—one third of the spirit diluted with two thirds of water—1772.—Annual Register.

TUSCAN ORDER OF ARCHITECTURE, a debased Doric, invented in Tuscany, and used in the erection of coarse and rude buildings, in which strength is principally intended, without regard to ornament or beauty.—Wotton.

TUSCANY, formerly a grand-duchy in Central Italy, the northern part of the ancient Etruria (which see). It formed part of the Lombard kingdom; at the conquest of which by Charlemagne, it was made a marquisate for Boniface about 512 or 528. His descendant, the great Countess Matilda, bequeathed the southern part of her domains to the pope. In the northern part (then called Tuscya), the cities, Florence, Pisa, Siena, Lucca, etc., gradually became flourishing republics. Florence became the chief under the government of the Medici family (see Florence). The duchy in that family began in 1531, and the grand-duchy in 1569. After the extinction of the Medicis in 1737, Tuscany was given by the treaty of Vienna (1738) to Francis, duke of Lorraine (husband of Maria Theresa of Austria in 1736), who had ceded his hereditary states to France. Population in 1860, 1,826,830.

* Much interest and sympathy were excited in England and other Protestant countries of Europe by the imprisonment at Florence of the Madiai (husband and wife), who had embraced the English Reformed religion, and read the Bible in due conformity with the teaching of their new faith. For this "crime" they were separately incarcerated in loathsome dungeons, and subjected to all the rigors of the Romish ecclesiastical law, May, 1852. A Protestant deputation from England, headed by the Earls of Shaftesbury and Roden, proceeded to Florence in October, 1852, with the view to their release from confinement; but the grand-duke refused to receive them. The Madiai were set at liberty by the interposition of the British government in March, 1853. An annuity of £100 was provided for them by subscription.

and full of sloughs, with here and there a ragged house, the lurking-place of cut-throats."

TYLER'S INSURRECTION arose in opposition to the poll-tax levied in 1379. One of the collectors acting with indecent rudeness to Wat Tyler's daughter, the father struck him dead. His neighbors took arms to defend him, and in a short time almost the whole of the population of the southern and eastern counties were in a state of insurrection, extorting freedom from their lords, and plundering. On June 12, 1381, they gathered upon Blackheath to the number of 100,000 men. The king, Richard II., invited Tyler to a parley, which took place on the 15th at Smithfield, where the latter addressed the king in a somewhat menacing manner, now and again lifting up his sword. On this the mayor, Watworth, stunned Tyler with a blow of his mace, and one of the king's knights dispatched him. Richard temporized with the multitude by promising a charter, and thus led them out of the city, when Sir R. Knollys and a band of knights attacked and dispersed them with much slaughter. The insurrection in Norfolk and Suffolk was subdued by the Bishop of Norwich, and 1500 of the rebels were executed.

TYPE-COMPOSING MACHINE. The best known and most perfect type-composing and distributing machine is that invented by Timothy Alden, of Yarmouth, Mass. Born 1819, died 1888. It was first patented in 1856. This machine was imperfect, and was afterward much improved by Henry W. Alden, cousin of the inventor. He was assisted in this work by William Mackay. The machine, thus improved, was worked in the Tribune office during the years 1845-6. The necessity of a "distributor" that would not require the type to be classified had been long felt, and during the trial at the Tribune office, John T. Slinger, a practical scientific machinist, discovered a method by which it could be effected. He also remedied several minor defects, which rendered the machine practical and useful.

TYRANT. In early Greek history, the term was applied to any man who governed with irresponsible power. Solon objected to the term, and chose the name archon (ruler), 594 B.C. The earliest tyrants were those at Sicily, beginning with Clisthenes, in the 7th century B.C. Tyranny declined in Greece about 490 B.C., and revived after the close of the Peloponnesian War, 404 B.C. See Thirty Tyrants.

TYRE (Phœnicia). This great city was first built by Agenor. Another city was built 1257 (about 2267, Hales) B.C. It was besieged by the Assyrians, 719 B.C., and they retired from before it, after a siege of upward of five years, 713 B.C. Taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 572 B.C., and the city demolished, when the Tyrians removed to an opposite island, and built a new and magnificent city. It was taken by Alexander with much difficulty, after a siege of seven months, Aug. 20, 332 B.C. He joined the island to the continent by a mole.—Strabo. It was taken by the allied fleet in 1841 A.D.

TYRE, ERA OF, began on Oct. 19, 125 B.C., with the month of Hyperbeteus. The months were the same as those used in the Grecian era, and the year is similar to the Julian year. To reduce this era to ours, subtract 124; and if the given year be less than 125, deduct it from 125, and the remainder will be the year before Christ.

TYROL, the eastern part of ancient Rætia, now a province of the Austrian Empire, was ceded to the house of Hapsburg in 1359 by Margaret, the heiress of the last Count Tyrol. The province became an appanage of the younger (or Tyrol) branch of the imperial house, which came to the throne in the person of Maximilian II. in 1618. The French conquered the Tyrol in 1805, and united it to Bavaria; but in 1809 an insurrection broke out, headed by Andrew Hofer, an innkeeper, who drove the Bavarians out of the Tyrol, thoroughly defeated some French detachments, but laid down his arms at the treaty of Vienna. He was subsequently accused of corresponding with the Austrians, captured and sent to Mantua, and there shot by order of the French government (to its great disgrace), Feb. 20, 1810. The Austrian emperor ennobled his family in 1819, and erected his statue in Innsbruck in 1834. The Tyrolean riflemen were very effective in the Italian War in 1859.

U.

UBIQUITARIANS, a small German sect, originated by Brentius about 1560, who asserted that the body of Christ was present every where (ubique).

UKRAINE (a frontier), a vast fertile plain in Russia, ceded to the Cossacks by Poland in 1672, and obtained by Russia in 1682. The country was divided, Poland having the west side of the Dnieper, and Russia the east. The whole country was assigned to Russia by the treaty of partition in 1795.

ULM, in Wurtemberg, S. Germany, where a PEACE was signed, July 3, 1620, by which Frederick V. lost Bohemia (having been driven from it previously). Ulm was taken by the French in 1796. After a battle between the French and Austrians, in which the latter, under General Mack, were defeated with dreadful loss by Marshal Ney, Ulm surrendered with 25,000 men, the flower of the Austrian army, Oct. 17-20, 1805.

ULPHILAS'S BIBLE. See Bible.

UMBRELLA, described in early dictionaries as "a portable pent-house to carry in a person's hand to screen him from violent rain or heat." Umbrellas are very ancient, as they appear in the carvings at Persepolis. Niebuhr, who visited the southern part of Arabia, informs us that he saw a great prince of that country returning from a mosque, preceded by some hundreds of soldiers, and that he and each of the princes of his numerous family caused a large umbrella to be carried by his side. The old chinaware in our pantries and cupboards shows the Chinese shaded by an umbrella. It is said that the first person who used an umbrella in the streets of London was the benevolent Jonas Hanway, who died in 1786.*

* For a long while it was not usual for men to carry them without being branded as effeminate. At first, a single umbrella seems to have been kept at a coffee-house for extraordinary occasions—lent as a coach or chair in a heavy shower, but not commonly carried by the walkers. The Female-Tattle advertises: "The young gentleman belonging to the Custom-house who, in fear of rain, borrowed the umbrella from Willis's Coffee-house, shall the next time be welcome to the maid's pater-noster." As late as 1778, one John Macdonald, a footman, who wrote his own life, informs us that he had "a fine silk umbrella, which he UNIFORMITY, ACT OF (2 & 3 Edward VI.), Jan. 15, 1549, ordained that the order of divine worship, drawn up by Crammer and others, "with the aid of the Holy Ghost," should be the only one used after May 20. The penalties for refusing to use it were fine and imprisonment. This act was re-enacted by Elizabeth in 1559. The statute known as the Act of Uniformity, 14 Charles II., c. 4, was passed in 1662. It enjoined uniformity in matters of religion, and obliged all clergy to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles, and use the same form of worship, and same book of Common Prayer. Its enforcement on August 24, 1662, termed Black Bartholomew's day, caused upward of 2000 ministers to quit the Church of England, and laid the foundation of the dissenting interest. The day was commemorated by Dissenters in 1862.

UNIFORMS. Military uniforms were first used in France, "in a regular manner," by Louis XIV., 1668. In England the uniform was soon afterward adopted in the military service, but with little analogy to the modern dress.—Ashe. See under Navy.

UNION OF CALMAR, 1597; of Utrecht, 1579.

UNION OF the crowns and kingdoms of England and Scotland by the accession of James VI. of Scotland as James I. of England, March 24, 1603. The legislative union of the two kingdoms was attempted, but failed in 1604 and 1670; in the reign of Anne, commissioners were appointed, the articles discussed, and, brought from Spain; but he could not with any comfort to himself use it, the people calling out: "Frenchman, why don't you get a coach?" The hackney-coachmen and chairmen, with true esprit de corps, were clamorous against their portentous rival. The footman, in 1778, gives us some farther information: "At this time there were no umbrellas worn in London, except in noblemen's and gentlemen's houses, where there was a large one hung in the hall to hold over a lady if it rained, between the door and her carriage." This man's sister was compelled to quit his arm one day from the abuse he drew down upon himself and his umbrella. But he adds that "he persisted for three months, till they took no farther notice of this novelty. Foreigners began to use theirs, and then the English. Now it is become a great trade in London."—New Monthly Magazine.

notwithstanding a great opposition made by the Tories, every article in the union was approved by a great majority, first in the House of Commons, and afterwards by the Peers, July 22, 1706; was ratified by the Scottish Parliament Jan. 16, 1707, and became a law May 1, same year.

UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, proposed in the Irish Parliament Jan. 22, 1709. Rejected by the Commons of Ireland Jan. 24, the votes being 105 for to 106 against the union. The English House of Commons on the same question divided, 140, 141, and 149 for the union; against it, 15, 25, and 23 respectively. Lord Castlereagh detailed his plan of the union in the Irish House of Lords, founded on the resolutions of the British Parliament thereon, Feb. 5, 1800. Votes of the Commons agreeing to it, 161 against 115, Feb. 17; and again, 152 against 108, Feb. 21. The houses of Lords and Commons wait on the lord lieutenant with the Articles of Union, March 27. The act passed in the British Parliament July 2, 1800. The imperial united standard was first displayed at the Tower of London, and upon Bedford Tower, Dublin Castle, in consequence of the act of legislative union becoming an operative law, Jan. 1, 1801. For attempts to dissolve the union, see Repeal.

UNION JACK. The original flag of England was the banner of St. George, i. e., white with a red cross, which, April 12, 1606 (three years after James I. ascended the throne), was incorporated with the banner of Scotland, i. e., blue with a white diagonal cross. This combination obtained the name of "Union Jack," in allusion to the union with Scotland, and the word Jack may be considered a corruption of the word "Jacques," or James. This arrangement continued until the union with Ireland, Jan. 1, 1801, when the banner of St. Patrick, i. e., white, with a diagonal red cross, was thus amalgamated with it, and forms the present Union flag.

UNION CHARGEABILITY ACT, providing for the better distribution of the charge for relieving the poor in unions, was passed in June, 1865. One object of the act is the improvement of the dwellings of agricultural laborers.

UNION REPEAL ASSOCIATION, IRELAND. See Repeal of the Union.

UNIT, a gold coin, value 20s., issued by James I. in 1604.

UNITARIANS,* began with Servetus, a learned man, who printed a tract in disparagement of the doctrine of the Trinity. In 1553, proceeding to Naples through Geneva, Calvin induced the magistrates to arrest him on a charge of blasphemy and heresy. Servetus, refusing to retract his opinions, was condemned to the flames, which sentence was carried into execution, May 27, 1553. Servetus is numbered among those anatomists who made the nearest approach to the doctrine of the circulation of the blood before Harvey established that doctrine. The Unitarians were numerous in Transylvania in the 17th century; they came to England about 1700, and many of the original English Presbyterian Churches became Unitarians about 1730. They were not included in the Toleration Act till 1813. There were 229 congregations in England in 1851. The Unitarian Marriage Bill was passed June, 1827. In Dec., 1833, by a decision of the vice-chancellors, the Unitarians (as such) lost the possession of Lady Hewley's charity; the decision was affirmed on appeal in 1842.

UNITED IRISHMEN, a political society which met secretly, was formed in 1795 to counteract the effect of the Orange clubs.

UNITED KINGDOM. England and Wales were united in 1283; Scotland to both in 1707; and the British realm was named the United Kingdom on the union with Ireland, January 1, 1801. See Union. The UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE, for the total suppression of liquor traffic, was founded June 1, 1853.

UNITED PROVINCES (Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Groningen, Overijssel, and Guelderland), the deputies of which met at Utrecht, Jan. 23, 1579, and signed a treaty for their mutual defense. See Holland.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA were so styled by the Congress of the revolted British provinces, Sept. 9, 1776. Their flag was declared to be thirteen stripes,

* Their tenets are different, but somewhat similar to those of the Arians and Socinians, whic see. The Unitarians believe in and worship one only self-existent God, in opposition to those who worship the Trinity in unity. They consider Christ to have been a mere man, and do not admit the need of an atonement, or the complete inspiration of the Scriptures.

alternately red and white, and thirteen stars in a blue field, corresponding with the then number of states of the Union,* June 20, 1777. The government of the United States is a pure democracy. Each of the states has a separate and independent Legislature for the administration of its local affairs, but all are ruled in matters of imperial policy by two houses of Legislature, the Senate and the House of Representatives, to which delegates are sent from the different members of the Confederacy. The President of the United States is elected every fourth year by the free voice of the people. The election of Abraham Lincoln as President on Nov. 4, 1860, was followed by the secession of eleven slaveholding states, and led to the great Civil War, 1861-5. See Confederates.

Army.—That which achieved independence was disbanded at the end of the war. In 1789, a War Department was established, and in 1790 the army consisted of 1216 men. In 1808 the militia was newly equipped. When war with Great Britain was declared on June 18, 1812, 35,000 men were voted; and this army was disbanded at the peace in 1815. Armies were voted for the years in 1833 and 1835, afterward disbanded.

In 1855, Army, 11,658. Militia, 1,873,558. Fleet, 72 vessels (2290 guns).

In 1860, the United States Militia were 3,070,987. The fleet consisted of 92 vessels (of all kinds); in Oct., 1862, of 256 vessels of war. Federal Army, July 29, 1861, estimated at 660,371. In Dec., 1862, nearly 1,000,000 men. In April, 1865, about 1,500,000, at the end of the war, when the reduction began at once. In 1869 it was reduced to about 50,000.

* André (born 1751) was an adjutant general in the British army, and was taken in disguise on his return from a secret expedition to the traitorous American General Arnold, Sept. 23, 1780. He was sentenced to execution as a spy by a court of General Washington's officers at Tappan, New York, and suffered death Oct. 2 following. His remains were removed to England in a sarcophagus, Aug. 10, 1821, and interred in Westminster Abbey. Impartial judges justify the severity of this punishment.

* This expedition, notwithstanding, under a Spanish adventurer named Lopez, landed 600 men at Cuba. After a short but obstinate struggle, they took the town of Cardenas, and shortly afterward had a land engagement with some Spanish soldiers, in which many of them were killed or taken prisoners; the others then embarked with Lopez in the Crescent steamer, and thus escaped from a Spanish war steamer, the Pizarro, May, 1850. The second expedition of Lopez, in Aug., 1851, was, however, fatal to him and his followers, as above related.

* John Brown, called Captain Brown and old Brown, was a prominent leader in the violent conflicts in Kansas during the agitation respecting the question of its becoming a slave state. He was a monomaniac on the slavery question, and contended that all means for annihilating slavery were justifiable. He gathered together a band of desperate characters, who so much annoyed Missouri and other slave states that a reward was offered for his head. He had arranged for the successful issue of the insurrection above mentioned, so far as to devise a provisional government and a new Constitution. On Oct. 16, he and his band, aided by a mob, seized the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, a town on the borders of Virginia and Maryland, stopped the railway trains, and cut the telegraph wires; a conflict with the military ensued, when many of the insurgents were killed. Brown was captured, tried, and executed on Dec. 2; and several of his companions were executed in March, 1860. These events caused a temporary panic in the Southern States, and much excitement in Boston and other Northern towns.

* She was sailing from Calcutta to New Brunswick, and while attempting to inquire whether a blockade existed, was captured off Charleston Bar by a Federal ship of war. Her captain, William Wilson, and his cook and steward, were permitted to remain on board on her voyage to Philadelphia. On March 1, 1862, Wilson, with his two associates, succeeded, by stratagem and courage, in recovering the command of the vessel, overcoming two United States officers and 13 sailors, and brought her into Liverpool. The owners of the ship gave him 2000 guineas, and the Liverpool merchants presented him with a magnificent testimonial of their admiration of his gallantry. The British government refused to restore the vessel when claimed by the Americans.

UNIVERSALISTS, who believe in the final salvation of all men, have existed in various countries and ages. Dr. Tillotson appears from some of his sermons to have adopted the opinion of this universal salvation.—Johnson. Certain it is, about 1691, he entertained a design for forming a new book of homilies; and a sermon which he preached before the queen (Mary) against the absolute eternity of hell torments involved this doctrine. Universalists are numerous in America.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE, one of the six points of the charter (see Chartists), was adopted by the French in the election of their president in 1851, and of their emperor in 1852, and by the Italian States in voting for annexation to Sardinia in 1860. There is an earnest attempt being made (1869) in many parts of the United States to introduce universal suffrage, that is, both men and women, without distinction of race or color. At the present time the negro is allowed to vote with the white man.

UNIVERSITIES. The most ancient in Europe are those of Oxford, Cambridge, Paris, Salamanca, and Bologna. In old Aberdeen was a monastery, in which youths were instructed in theology, the canon law, and the school philosophy, at least 200 years before the University and King's College were founded. UNIVERSITY BOAT-RACE. The contest between the universities of Oxford and Cambridge on the River Thames began in 1829, and has been annual since 1856. In 1864, after 20 contests, the opposing parties were equal; but on April 8, 1865, Oxford won for the fifth time in succession.

UNIVERSITY ELECTIONS. See Dodson's Act.

UNKNOWN TONGUES. See Irvingites, note.

URANIUM, a brittle gray metal, discovered by Klaproth in 1789, in the mineral pitch-blende. It has lately been employed in the manufacture of glass for certain philosophical purposes.

URANUS, a planet with six satellites, was discovered by William Herschel, March 13, 1781, first called Georgium Sidus, after George III.; next Herschel; and finally Uranus. It is about twice as distant from the sun as the planet Saturn. The anniversary of its first revolution (in 84 years 7 days) since its discovery was celebrated on March 20, 1865. Its perturbations led to the discovery of Neptune in 1846.

URICONIUM. See Wroetzer.

URIM AND THUMMIM, LIGHT AND PERFECTION (Exodus xxviii., 30). It is conjectured that these words are in some way connected with the breastplate worn by the high-priest when he entered into the holy place with the view of obtaining an answer from God (1420 B.C.).

URSULINE NUNS (so called from St. Ursula), founded originally by St. Angela, of Brescia, in 1537. Several communities existed in England, and some still exist in Ireland.

URUGUAY, a republic in South America, declared its independence Aug. 25, 1825, recognized Oct. 4, 1828. The president of the executive, G. A. Pereyra, elected in 1856, was succeeded in 1860 by B. P. Berro. A civil war broke out in consequence of the invasion of the ex-president, General Flores, June 26, 1863. On March 1, 1864, the Vice-president Aguirre became president, who refused (in June) to modify his ministry according to the desire of General Flores, who marched toward the capital in June. In Feb., 1865, Flores became provisional president. Population in 1865 about 350,000.

USHANT, an island near Brest, N.W. France, near which two naval battles were fought between the British and French fleets.

(1.) On July 27, 1778, after an indecisive action of three hours, the latter, under cover of the night, withdrew into the harbor of Brest. Admiral Keppel commanded the English fleet, the Count d'Orville the French. The failure of a complete victory was attributed to Admiral Sir Hugh Palliser's noncompliance with the admiral's signals. Palliser preferred articles of accusation against his commander, who was tried and acquitted, and the charge against him declared to be "malicious and ill founded."

(2.) Lord Howe signally defeated the French fleet, taking six ships of the line, and sinking one of large force, and several others, June 1, 1794. While the two fleets were engaged in this action, a large fleet of merchantmen, on the safety of which the French nation depended for its means of prosecuting the war, got safely into Brest harbor, which gave occasion to the enemy to claim the laurels of the day, notwithstanding their loss in ships, and in killed and wounded, which was very great.

USURY was forbidden by Parliament, 1341. Until the 15th century, no Christians were allowed to receive interest on money, and Jews were the only usurers, and therefore often banished and persecuted (see Jews). By the 37th of Henry VIII. the rate of interest was fixed at 10 per cent., 1545. This statute was repealed by Edward VI., but re-enacted 13th Eliz., 1570. See Interest for later legislation.

UTAH, a western territory of the United States, was organized Sept. 9, 1850. The capital, Great Salt Lake City, is the chief seat of the Mormonites (which see).

UTRECHT (the Roman Trajectum ad Rhenum) was the seat of an independent bishopric; founded about 695. The last prelate, Henry of Bavaria, weary of his turbulent subjects, sold his temporal government to the Emperor Charles V. in 1528. The union of the Seven United Provinces began here (see United Provinces), 1579. The celebrated treaty of Utrecht, which terminated the wars of Queen Anne, was signed by the ministers of Great Britain and France, and all the other allies, except the ministers of the Empire, April 11, 1713. This treaty secured the Protestant suc-

sion in England, the separation of the French and Spanish crowns, the destruction of Dunkirk, the enlargement of the British colonies and plantations in America, and a full satisfaction for the claims of the Allies. Utrecht surrendered to the Prussians, May 9, 1757; was possessed by the French, Jan. 18, 1795, and restored at the peace.

V.

VACCINATION (from Variola Vaccina, the cow-pox, discovered by Dr. Edward Jenner. He was born in 1749, and educated for the medical profession, partially under John Hunter. Having heard that milkmaids who have had the cow-pox never take the small-pox, he, about 1780, conceived the idea of vaccination, which was then ridiculed by eminent physiologists. He made the first experiment by transferring to a healthy child, in May 14, 1796, the pus from the pustule of a milkmaid who had caught the cow-pox from the cows. He announced his success in a memoir published 1798, and vaccination became general in 1799, having been introduced Jan. 21 in that year. Dr. Jenner received £10,000 from Parliament for the discovery, June 2, 1802, and £20,000 in 1807. The first national institution for the promotion of vaccination, called the Royal Jennerian Institution, was founded Jan. 19, 1803. The Emperor Napoleon valued this service of Dr. Jenner to mankind so highly that he liberated Dr. Wickham, when a prisoner of war, at Jenner's request, and subsequently whole families of English, making it a point to refuse him nothing that he asked. Vaccination, although much opposed on moral and religious grounds, was practiced throughout all Europe previously to 1816. Dr. Jenner died in 1823.* The Vaccination Act, 3 & 4 Vict., passed July 23, 1840. Vaccination was made compulsory in England in 1853, and in Ireland and Scotland in 1863. See Small-pox and Inoculation. An important blue-book, entitled "Papers on the History and Practice of Vaccination," edited by Mr. John Simon, was published by the Board of Health in 1857.

VADIMONIAN LAKE; here the Romans totally defeated the Etruscans, 283 B.C.

VAGRANTS IN ENGLAND. By law, after being whipped, a vagrant was to take an oath to return to the place where he was born, or had last dwelt for three years, 1530. A vagrant a second time convicted, to lose the upper part of the gristle of his right ear, 1535; and a third time convicted, death. A vagabond to be marked with a V, and be a slave for two years, 1327. Vagrants were punished by whipping, jailing, boring the ears, and death for a second offense, 1572. The milder statutes were those of 17 Geo. II.; 32, 35, and 59 Geo. III. The present Vagrant Act was passed in 1824.

VALENCAY, a chateau near Chateauroux, Central France, where Napoleon I. imprisoned Ferdinand of Spain from 1806 to 1813. His kingdom was restored to Ferdinand by a treaty signed Dec. 8, 1813.

VALENCIA (E. Spain), the Valentia Edetanorum of the Romans. Its university was founded, it is said, in the 13th century, and was revived in the 15th. Valencia was taken by the Earl of Peterborough in 1705, but submitted to the Bourbons after the unfortunate battle of Almanza in 1707.—It resisted the attempts made on it by Marshal Moncey, but was taken from the Spaniards with a garrison of more than 16,000 men, and immense stores, by the French under Suchet, Jan. 9, 1812.

VALENCIENNES (N. France). This city (founded about 399 B.C.) was besieged from May 23 to July 26, 1793, when the French garrison surrendered to the Allies under the Duke of York. It was retaken, together with Condé, by the French, Aug. 27-30, 1794; on capitulation, the garrison and 1100 emigrants were made prisoners, with immense stores.

VALENTINE'S DAY (Feb. 14). Valentine is said to have been a bishop, who suffered martyrdom under Claudius II. at Rome; others say under Aurelian, in 271. 618,000 letters passed through the post-office on Feb. 14, 1856. The origin of the ancient custom of "choosing a valentine" has been much controverted. See Post.

VALENTINIANS, followers of Valentine, a priest, who, on being disappointed of a bishopric, forsook the Christian faith, declaring there were thirty gods and goddesses, fifteen of each sex, which he called Æones, or Ages. He taught in the 2d century, and published a gospel and psalms: his followers added other errors.

VALMY (N.E. France). Here the French, commanded by Kellerman, defeated the Prussians, commanded by the Duke of Brunswick, Sept. 20, 1792. The victory was of immense moral advantage to the Republicans.

VALOIS, HOUSE OF. See France, 1328.

VALTELINE (Switzerland), now part of Austrian Italy. Here took place a general massacre of the Protestants by the Roman Catholics, who revolted against the government, July 20, 1620. It began at Tirano, extended to all the district, and lasted three days.

VANADIUM (from Vanadis, the Scandinavian Venus), a metal discovered by Sefström in 1830, combined with iron ore. A similar metal, discovered in lead ore by Del Rio in 1801, and named Erythronium, was proved by Wöhler to be Vanadium.

VANCOUVER'S ISLAND, North Pacific Ocean, near the main land. Settlements were made here by the English in 1781, which were seized by the Spaniards in 1789, but restored. By a treaty between the British government and that of the United States in 1846, this island was secured to the former. It has become of much greater importance since the discovery of gold in the neighboring main land in 1858, and the consequent establishment of the colony of British Columbia (which see). Victoria, the capital, was founded in 1857.

VANCOUVER'S VOYAGE. Capt. Vancouver served as a midshipman under Capt. Cook, and was appointed to command during a voyage of discovery, to ascertain the existence of any navigable communication between the North Pacific and North Atlantic Oceans. He sailed in 1790, and returned Sept. 24, 1795. He compiled an account of this voyage of survey of the northwest coast of America, and died in 1798.

VANDALS, a Germanic race, attacked the Roman Empire in the 3d century, and began their ravages in Germany and Gaul, 406-414; their kingdom in Spain was founded in 411; under Genseric they invaded and conquered the Roman territories in Africa, and took Carthage, Oct. 24, 439. They were subdued by Belisarius in 534. They were driven out by the Saracen Moors.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND was discovered by Tasman in 1633; hence formerly called TASMANIA. It was visited by Burneaux in 1773; by Captain Cook in 1777; and was deemed the south extremity of New Holland (now Australia) until 1799, when Flinders explored Bass's Straits, and proved Van Diemen's Land to be an island. A British settlement was established on the southeast part, within the mouth of the Derwent, in 1804, and named Hobart Town, or Hobarton, now the seat of government. This island was made a convict colony of Great Britain, whither many remarkable transports have been sent. Governor, Col. Thomas Gore Browne (1862). Population in 1857, 81,492; in 1859, 84,080.

VARENNES, a town in N.E. France, is celebrated

* Dr. Jenner died suddenly in 1823. A statue, subscribed for by all nations, was erected to his memory in Trafalgar Square, April 30, 1858, in the presence of the prime consort. It was removed to Kensington in 1862. Another statue was erected by the French at Boulogne, and inaugurated Sept. 11, 1865.

by the arrest of Louis XVI., his queen, sister, and two children. They fled from the Tuileries on June 21, and were taken here on the 22d, 1791, and conducted back to Paris, mainly through Drouet, the postmaster at an intermediate town, who recognized the king.

VARNA, a fortified town and sea-port in Bulgaria, European Turkey. A great battle was fought near this place, Nov. 10, 1444, between the Turks under Amurath II. and the Hungarians under their king Ladislaus and John Hunniades. The latter were defeated with great slaughter: the king was killed, and Hunniades made prisoner. The Christians had previously broken a recent truce.—The Emperor Nicholas, of Russia, arrived before Varna, the head-quarters of his army, then besieging the place, Aug. 5, 1828. The Turkish garrison made a vigorous attack on the besiegers, Aug. 7; and another on the 21st, but were repulsed. Varna surrendered, after a sanguinary conflict, to the Russian arms, Oct. 11, 1828. It was restored at the peace in 1829; its fortifications were dismantled, but have since been restored.—The allied armies disembarked at Varna, May 29, 1854, and remained there till they sailed for the Crimea, September 3 following. While at Varna they suffered severely from cholera.

VASSY (N.E. France). The massacre of the Protestants at this place by the Duke of Guise on March 1, 1562, led to the civil wars which desolated France to the end of the century.

VASSALAGE. See Feudal Laws and Slavery.

VATICAN HILL (Rome) became the seat of the papal government about 800. The pope's palace is said to contain 7000 rooms, rich in works of art, ancient and modern. The library, founded by Pope Nicholas V., 1448, is exceedingly rich in printed books and MSS.—Pistolesi's description of the Vatican, with numerous plates, was published 1829-38.—The phrase "Thunders of the Vatican" was first used by Voltaire, 1748.—The ancient Vatican Codex of the Old and New Testament in Greek was published at Rome in 1857.

VAUDOIS. See Waldenses.

VEDAS, the sacred books of the Hindoos, in Sanskrit, were probably written about 1000 B.C. Veda means knowledge. These books comprise hymns, prayers, and liturgical formulæ. The edition by Professor Max Müller, printed under the patronage of the East India Company, appeared in 1849-62.

VEGETABLES for the table were brought from Flanders about 1520. See Gardening.

VEGETARIAN SOCIETY, whose members restrict themselves to a vegetable diet, held their fifteenth anniversary in London on Sept. 4, 1862.

VEHMIC TRIBUNAL (Fehmgerichte or Fehmgerichte), secret tribunals established in Westphalia to maintain religion and the public peace, had their origin in the time of Charlemagne, and rose to importance about 1182, when Westphalia became subject to the Archbishop of Cologne. Persons of the most exalted rank were subjected to their decisions, being frequently seized, tried, and executed. The emperors endeavored to suppress them, but did not succeed till the 16th century. Sir Walter Scott has described them in "Anne of Geierstein." A remnant of this tribunal was abolished by Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, in 1811.

VEII, an independent Latin city near Rome. Between the Romans and Veientes frequent wars occurred, till Veii was utterly destroyed, 388 B.C. The Roman family, the Fabii, who had seceded from Rome for political reasons, were surprised and destroyed at the River Cremera by the Veientes, 477 B.C. A siege of Veii by the Romans lasted from 405 to 396 B.C.

VELLORE (S.E. India) became the residence of the family of the dethroned Sultan of Mysore, and was strongly garrisoned by English troops. The revolt of the Sepoys, in which the family of the late Tippoo took an active part, took place July 10, 1806. The insurgents were subdued by Colonel Gillespie, and mostly put to the sword: 800 Sepoys were killed.

VELOCIPEDES. Introduced into England in 1818; the invention of a German baron, Charles de Dras, after whom they were for some time styled Drasina. They soon fell into desuetude, but were revived on an improved French model in 1867, and in France and England acquired considerable popularity among the youth of both sexes. Velocipedes were brought into the United States in 1819, attracting much attention in the city of New York, but after a time they were forgotten, until reintroduced as a French novelty in 1868, when they speedily became the rage. The American velocipede is thus described: "The reach, or frame, is made of hydraulic tubing. It is made by gauge, just as sewing-machines, Waltham watches, and Springfield muskets are made, so that when any part wears out or is broken it may be replaced at an hour's notice. Its bearings are of composition or gun-metal, and the reach or frame is tubular, giving both lightness and strength. The hub of the hind wheel is bushed with metal, and the axle constitutes its own oil-box. It differs from the French veloce in the arrangement of the tiller, which is brought well back, and is sufficiently high to allow of a perfectly upright position in riding. The stirrups or crank pedals are three-sided, with circular flanges at each end; and as they are fitted to turn on the crank-pins, the pressure of the foot will always bring one of the three sides into proper position. They are so shaped as to allow of the use of the fore part of the foot, bringing the ankle-joint in play, relieving the knee, and rendering propulsion much easier than when the shank of the foot alone is used, as in propelling the French vehicle. The connecting apparatus differs from that of the French bicycle in that the saddle-bar serves only as a seat and a brake, and is not attached to the rear wheel. By a simple pressure forward against the tiller, and a backward pressure against the tail of the saddle, the saddle-spring is compressed and the brake attached to it brought firmly down upon the wheel." A velocipede has been made in the United States for running on ice. The frame is similar to that of the machine used in the streets; it has, however, but one wheel, steered with a bar, but armed on the tire with short points to prevent its slipping. Instead of the two wheels behind are two sharp steel runners, like those attached to the ice-boats.

VENDEE. See La Vendée.

VENEZUELA, the seat of a South American republic. When the Spaniards landed here in 1499, they observed some huts built upon piles, in an Indian village named Cora, in order to raise them above the stagnated water that covered the plain; and this induced them to give it the name of Venezuela, or Little Venice. This state in July, 1814, declared in Congressional Assembly the sovereignty of its people, which was recognized in 1818. It formed part of the republic of Colombia till 1831, when it separated from the Federal Union, and declared itself sole and independent. Gen. D. T. Monagas was elected in 1855 president, and continued so till March, 1858, when a revolution broke out, and Don José Castro became President, who also was compelled to resign in Aug., 1859, and Dr. Pedro Gual assumed the government. A new Constitution was promulgated in Dec., 1858. General José Páez was elected President Sept. 8, 1861. He resigned on June 17, 1863, and Juan E. Falcon succeeded him, June 17. General Febres Cordero protested and set up a rival government at Porto Cabello, which broke up in October following. Marshal J. E. Falcon was sworn as President, June 8, 1865. The population in 1859 was about one million and a half. See Colombia.

VENTILATORS were invented by the Rev. Dr. Hales, and described to the Royal Society of London, May, 1741; and the ventilator for the use of ships was announced by Mr. Triewald in November, same year. The Marquess of Chabanne's plan for warming and ventilating theatres and houses for audiences was applied to those of London in 1819. The systems of Dr. Reid (about 1830) and others followed. Dr. Arnott's work on this subject was published in 1838. A commission on warming and ventilation issued a report in 1859.

VENTRILOQUISM (speaking from the belly). The phenomena are evidently described in Isaiah xxix., 4. Among eminent ventriloquists were Baron Menges and M. St. Gille, about 1772 (whose experiments were examined by a commission of the French Academy); Thomas King (about 1716); Charles Matthews (1824); and M. Alexandre (1822).

VENUS. Her transit over the sun on Nov. 24, 1639, was first ascertained by Horrox in 1633. The astronomer-royal Maskelyne observed her transit at St. Helena, June 6, 1761. Captain Cook made his first voyage in the Endeavor, to Otaheite, to observe a transit of Venus, June 3, 1769. See Cook's Voyages. The diurnal rotation of Venus was discovered by Cassini in 1667. The transit on Dec. 9, 1874, may be observed in Eastern Europe and in Asia.

VERA CRUZ, BOMBARDMENT AND SURRENDER OF. The Mexican authorities having scorned every overture for peace, in the autumn of 1846 General Scott, the commander-in-chief of the American armies, was sent to conquer all Mexico. He landed at Vera Cruz on the 9th of March, 1847, with about 13,000 men, and, with the fleet of Commodore Connor, invested the city and its fortifications. He opened a cannonade and bombardment upon it on the 18th of June. The attack continued until the 27th, when the fort and town, with 6000 prisoners, were surrendered to Scott, with 500 pieces of artillery. Scott then marched toward the Mexican capital. See Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, El Molino del Rey, Chapultepec.

VERMONT, a Northern State in North America, was settled by the French 1734-51, and ceded to Great Britain in 1763; and freed from the authority of New York, and admitted as a state of the Union in 1791.

VERNEUIL (N.W. France), the site of a battle fought Aug. 17, 1424, between the Burgundians and English under the regent Duke of Bedford, and the French, assisted by the Scots, commanded by the Count de Narbonne, the Earls of Douglas and Buchan, etc. The French at first were successful; but some Lombard auxiliaries, who had taken the English camp, commenced pillaging. Two thousand English archers came then fresh to the attack; and the French and Scots were totally defeated, and their leaders killed.

VERNON GALLERY. The inadequate manner in which modern British art was represented in the National Gallery was somewhat remedied in 1847 by the munificent present to the nation by Mr. Robert Vernon of a collection of 157 pictures, all but two being by first-rate British artists. They were first exhibited at Mr. Vernon's house in Pall Mall, next in the vaults beneath the National Gallery, afterward at Marlborough House, and are now (1865) at the South Kensington Museum. In 1857, Mr. John Sheepshanks followed Mr. Vernon's example.

VERONA (N. Italy) was founded by the Gauls or Etruscans. The amphitheatre was built by Titus, A.D. 82. Verona has been the site of many conflicts. On Sept. 27, 489, Theodoric defeated Odoacer, king of Italy. About 1259 Mastino della Scala was elected podestà; and his descendants (the Scaligeri) ruled, till subdued by the Visconti, dukes of Milan. Verona was conquered by the Venetians, 1405, and held by them with some intermissions till its capture by the French General Massena, June 19, 1796. Near to it Charles Albert of Sardinia defeated the Austrians, May 4, 1848. Verona is one of the four strong Austrian fortresses termed the Quadrangle, or Quadrilateral, and here the Emperor Francis Joseph, on July 12, 1859, in an order of the day announced to his army that he must yield to circumstances unfavorable to his policy, and thanked his people and army for their support.

VERSAILLES, PALACE OF (near Paris). In the reign of Louis XIII. Versailles was only a small village, in a forest thirty miles in circuit; and here this prince built a hunting-seat about 1632. Louis XIV. between 1661 and 1687 enlarged it into a magnificent palace, which became the usual residence of the kings of France. Here was held the military festival of the royal guards, Oct. 1, 1789, which was immediately followed (on the 5th and 6th) by the attack of the mob, who massacred the guards and brought the king back to Paris. It was afterward the residence of Louis Philippe, and is still a royal palace. The historical gallery was opened in 1837. By the treaty of peace between Great Britain and British North America, signed at Paris, the latter power was admitted to be a sovereign and independent state, Sept. 3, 1783. On the same day a treaty was signed at Versailles between Great Britain, France, and Spain, by which Pondicherry and Carikal, with other possessions in Bengal, were restored to France, and Trincomalee restored to the Dutch.

VERSE. See Poetry. Surrey's translation of part of Virgil's Æneid into blank verse is the first English composition of the kind, omitting tragedy, extant in the English language (published in 1547). The verse previously used in our grave compositions was the stanza of eight lines, the ottava rima (as adopted with the addition of one line by Spenser in his Faerie Queen), who probably borrowed it from Ariosto and Tasso. Boccaccio introduced it into Italy in his Teseide, having copied it from the old French chansons. Trissino is said to have been the first introducer of blank verse among the moderns, about 1508.—Vossius.

VESPIERS. See Sicilian Vespers. In the house of the French ambassador at Blackfriars, in London, a Jesuit was preaching to upward of three hundred persons in an upper room, the floor of which gave way with the weight, when the whole congregation was precipitated to the street, and the preacher and more than a hundred of his auditory, chiefly persons of rank, were killed. This catastrophe, termed the Fatal Vespers, occurred Oct. 26, 1623.—Stow.

VESTA. The planet Vesta (the ninth) was discovered by Dr. Olbers, of Bremen, on March 29, 1807. She appears like a star of the sixth magnitude.

VESTALS were priestesses of Vesta, who took care of the perpetual fire consecrated to her worship. The mother of Romulus was a vestal. Numa, in 710 B.C., appointed four, and Tarquin added two. After the expulsion of the Tarquins, the high-priest was intrusted with the care of them. Minutia was buried alive for breaking her virgin vow, 337 B.C.; Sextilia, 274 B.C.; and Cornelia Maximilla, A.D. 92.

VESEVIUS. By an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum (which see) were overwhelmed A.D. 79, and more than 250,000 persons perished, among them Pliny the naturalist. Numerous other disastrous eruptions have occurred. In 1631 the town of Torre del Greco, with 4000 persons, and a great part of the surrounding country, were destroyed. One of the most dreadful eruptions ever known took place suddenly, Nov. 24, 1759. The violent burst in 1767 was the 34th from the time of Titus. One in 1794 was most destructive: the lava flowed over 5000 acres of rich vineyards and cultivated land, and the town of Torre del Greco was a second time burned; the top of the mountain fell in, and the crater is now nearly two miles in circumference. Eruptions in May, 1855; May and June, 1858; and June, 1859, caused great destruction, and in the spring and summer of 1860. A series of violent eruptions, causing much damage, occurred in Dec., 1861, and in Feb., 1865. Torre del Greco was again destroyed in 1861.

VETERINARY COLLEGE, London, was established at Camden-town, 1791; and Albert Veterinary College was opened in 1865.

VICE, THE. An instrument of which Archytas of Tarentum, disciple of Pythagoras, is said to have been the inventor, along with the pulley and other implements, 420 B.C.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND, an equity judge, appointed by Parliament, first took his seat May 5, 1513. A new court was erected about 1516, contiguous to Lincoln's Inn Hall. Two additional vice-chancellors were appointed under act 5 Vict., Oct., 1841. The office of vice-chancellor of England ceased in Aug., 1850, and a third vice-chancellor was appointed in 1851, when two more equity judges, styled lords justices, were appointed.

VICE-CHANCELLORS OF ENGLAND.

1813. Sir Thomas Plumer, April 13.
1818. Sir John Leach, Jan. 13.
1827. Sir Anthony Hart, May 4.
1827-50. Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Nov. 1, THE LAST.

VICKSBURG (Mississippi), CAMPAIGN FOR THE POSSESSION OF, May 18, 1862-July 4, 1863. Vicksburg lies on the east bank of the Mississippi, 400 miles above New Orleans, and about the same distance from Cairo. It is connected with Jackson, the state capital, by railroad; and from De Soto, on the opposite bank, a railroad running to Monroe drains the land commerce of Northern Louisiana. It was the most important and the most defensible military position on the Mississippi. The town, before the war, had a population of about 5000; it is situated on the shelving declivity of high hills, and, with its dwellings scattered in groups on the terraces, presents a very picturesque appearance. The high bluffs upon which the town stands extend southward along the river to Warrenton, and northward till they touch the Yazoo, about 15 miles from Haines's Bluff. Between these bluffs—which were in time strongly fortified by the Confederates—and the Yazoo is a low country, full of swamps, lagoons, sloughs, and bayous. It was in this sort of country that Sherman landed his troops (Dec., 1862), and sustained a repulse. The country in the rear of Vicksburg is very rough, and broken by abrupt ravines. The following are the remarkable incidents of the Vicksburg campaign in their chronological order:

S. P. Lee, commanding the advanced naval division of Farragut's squadron, demanded the surrender of Vicksburg, and was refused. M. L. Smith at this time commanded the military defenses of Vicksburg with 10,000 men.... May 18, 1862
General Thomas Williams, with 4 regiments and 8 guns, occupies the peninsula opposite Vicksburg..... June 24, " Farragut runs the Vicksburg blockade to join Davis, and bombards Vicksburg..... June 28, "
Van Dorn takes command at Vicksburg..... July 28, " Expedition up the Yazoo to destroy the ram Arkansas, meets the ram coming down, and retires; the ram passes out into the Mississippi, and takes refuge under the guns of Vicksburg, July 15, "
Ellet and W. D. Porter, with the Queen of the West and Essex, attack the ram, are repulsed, and with difficulty escape..... July 22, "
Williams's canal, begun upon his arrival on the peninsula, proves a failure..... July 22, " Williams's force leaves for Baton Rouge..... July 24, " Destruction of the ram Arkansas, after Breckinridge's defeat at Baton Rouge..... Aug. 6, "

Vicksburg defenses strengthened, and a line of works thrown up on the bluffs south of the Yazoo..... Aug.-Dec., 1862
Gen. J. C. Pemberton supersedes Van Dorn..... Oct., "
Grant, moving upon Jackson and the rear of Vicksburg, is compelled to retreat by the surrender of Holly Springs..... Dec. 20, "
Sherman embarks from Memphis with 30,000 men (Dec. 20); is re-enforced by 12,000 men at Helena; conveyed up the Yazoo by Porter's fleet (Dec. 26); lands near Chickasaw Bayou (Dec. 27); advances against the northern defenses of Vicksburg (Dec. 28); assaults, and is repulsed with a loss of 2000 men..... Dec. 29, "
Withdrawal of Sherman's expedition from the Yazoo..... Jan. 2, 1863
Grant meets Sherman, McClelland, and Porter at the mouth of White River, and consults with them as to further operations against Vicksburg..... Jan. 18, " Occupation of Young's Point, 9 miles above Vicksburg, on the opposite bank..... Jan. 21, "
The Queen of the West captured in the Red River by the Confederates..... Feb. 13, " Confederates destroy the Indianola below Vicksburg..... Feb. 24, " Porter sends his "Dummy" past Vicksburg; in the panic which follows the Confederates destroy the Queen of the West, and annihilate the Indianola, which they had raised..... Feb. 24, " Grant arrives at Young's Point (Feb. 2); reopens the work on Williams's canal; the levee breaks, and the project is abandoned..... March 8, "
The Lake Providence route (for getting below Vicksburg on the west bank) opened, but immediately abandoned..... March 16, "
The Yazoo Pass route (for obtaining a foothold on the high land above Haines's Bluff) abandoned..... March 23, "
The Steele's Bayou route (for turning Fort Pemberton via Cypress Bayou, Steele's Bayou, Big Sunflower River, and Deer Creek, thus reaching the rear of Vicksburg) tried and abandoned, Feb., "
After the failure of these experiments, Grant advances to New Carthage (March 29), and sends transports past the Vicksburg batteries,

April 16-22, "
Grierson's raid from Le Grange, Tennessee, to Baton Rouge, Louisiana..... April 17-May 2, " Porter attacks Grand Gulf, but the troops fail to make a landing..... April 29, "
McClelland lands at Bruinsburg, below Vicksburg (April 30), followed by M'Pherson, and defeats two Confederate brigades under Bowen at Port Gibson..... May 2, " Confederate evacuation of Grand Gulf..... May 3, " Sherman reaches Hard Times, and joins Grant's army..... May 6-8, " Battle of Raymond; M'Pherson defeats Gregg and Walker. National loss, 410; Confederate, 823..... May 12, " Capture of Jackson, after a brief conflict, by Sherman and M'Pherson. National loss, 265; Confederate, 845..... May 14, " Battle of Champion's Hill, or Baker's Creek. Pemberton crossed the Big Black, and took position on Baker's Creek, about 25 miles west of Jackson; here he was defeated by Grant..... May 16, " Battle of the Big Black; on the banks of this river Pemberton made a brief stand, and was defeated by McClelland..... May 17, "
Pemberton enters the fortifications of Vicksburg, May 17, "
Grant invests Vicksburg; Sherman establishes himself on the Yazoo; Porter opens communications for Grant's army by the Yazoo..... May 18, "
First assault on Vicksburg repulsed..... May 19, "
Second assault on Vicksburg repulsed..... May 22, "
Grant's army re-enforced to nearly 70,000 men, June, "
Surrender of Vicksburg, with 27,000 men, 128 pieces of artillery, and 80 siege guns..... July 4, "

In the battles around Vicksburg before its surrender, the Confederate loss in killed, wounded, and captured was about 10,000; Grant estimates his loss as 8775. After the capture of Vicksburg, Sherman, with the bulk of Grant's army, advanced against Johnston, and compelled the latter to evacuate Jackson, July 16, 1863. Johnston, after the first battle of Jackson (May 14), had in vain endeavored to induce Pemberton to join him and fight a decisive battle outside of Vicksburg.

VICTORIA, formerly PORT PHILLIP (Australia), situated between New South Wales and South Australia, the most successful colony in that region. In 1798, Bass, in his whale-boat expedition, visited Western Port, one of its harbors; and in 1802, Flinders sailed into Port Phillip Bay.

Colonel Collins lands with a party of convicts with the intention of founding a settlement at Port Phillip, but afterward removed to Van Diemen's Land.....1804

TREATIES OF VIENNA.

The treaty between the Emperor of Germany and the King of Spain, by which they confirmed to each other such parts of the Spanish dominions as they were respectively possessed of; and by a private treaty the emperor engaged to employ a force to procure the restoration of Gibraltar to Spain, and to use means for placing the Pretender on the throne of Great Britain. Spain guaranteed the Pragmatic Sanction. April 30, 1725.

Treaty of alliance between the Emperor of Germany, Charles VI., George II., king of Great Britain, and the States of Holland, by which the Pragmatic Sanction was guaranteed, and the disputes as to the Spanish succession terminated. (Spain acceded to the treaty on the 22d of July.) Signed March 16, 1731.

Treaty of Peace between the Emperor Charles VI. of Germany and the King of France, Louis XV., by which the latter power agreed to guarantee the Pragmatic Sanction, and Lorraine was ceded to France. Signed Nov. 13, 1738. See Pragmatic Sanction.

Treaty between Napoleon I. of France and Francis (II. of Germany) I. of Austria, by which Austria ceded to France the Tyrol, Dalmatia, and other territories, which were shortly afterward declared to be united to France under the title of the Illyrian Provinces, and engaged to adhere to the prohibitory system adopted toward England by France and Russia. Oct. 14, 1809.

Treaty between Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, confirming the principles on which they had acted by the treaty of Chaumont, March 1, 1814. Signed March 23, 1815.

Treaty between the King of the Netherlands on the one part, and Great Britain, Russia, Austria, and Prussia on the other, agreeing to the enlargement of the Dutch territories, and vesting the sovereignty in the house of Orange. May 31, 1815.

Treaty by which Denmark ceded Swedish Pomerania and Rugen to Prussia in exchange for Lauenburg. June 4, 1815.

Commercial treaty for twelve years between Austria and Prussia. Signed at Vienna, Feb. 19, 1853.

Treaty for the maintenance of Turkey signed by the

* A conference of the four great powers, England, France, Austria, and Prussia, was held July 24, when a note was agreed on and transmitted for acceptance to St. Petersburg and Constantinople, July 31. This note was accepted by the czar, Aug. 10, but the sultan required modifications, which were rejected by Russia, Sept. 7. The sultan's note (Dec. 31) contained four points: 1. The promptest possible evacuation of the principalities. 2. Revision of the treaties. 3. Maintenance of religious privileges to the communities of all confessions. 4. A definite settlement of the convention respecting the holy places. It was approved by the four powers, and the conferences closed on Jan. 16, 1854.—A new conference of plenipotentiaries from Great Britain (Lord John Russell), France (M. Drouyn de L'Huys), Austria (Count Buol), Turkey (Arif Effendi), and Russia (Count Gortschakoff), took place March, 1854. Two points, the protectorate of the principalities and the free navigation of the Danube, were agreed to; but the proposals of the powers as to the reduction of the Russian power in the Black Sea were rejected by the czar, and the conference closed, June 5, 1855. The English and French envoys' assent to the Austrian propositions was not approved of by their governments, and they both resigned their official positions.

representatives of Great Britain, France, Austria, and Russia, April 9, 1854.

Treaty between Austria and Prussia, and Denmark, by which Denmark ceded the duchies, Oct. 30, 1864.

VIGO (N.W. Spain) was attacked and burned by the English in 1589. Sir George Rooke, with the combined English and Dutch fleets, attacked the French fleet and the Spanish galleons in the port of Vigo, when several men of war and galleons were taken, and many destroyed, and abundance of plate and other valuable effects fell into the hands of the conquerors, Oct. 12, 1702. Vigo was taken by Lord Cobham in 1719, but relinquished after raising contributions. It was again taken by the British, March 27, 1809.

VILLA FRANCA (Portugal). Here the British cavalry, under Sir Stapleton Cotton, defeated the French cavalry of Marshal Soult (April 10, 1812) and freed Estremadura.—VILLA FRANCA, a small port on the Mediterranean, near Genoa, was bought for a steam-packet station by a Russian company about August, 1858, which caused some political excitement.—At VILLA FRANCA, in Lombardy, the Emperors of France and Austria met on July 11, 1859 (after the battle of Solferino), and on July 12 signed the preliminaries of peace, the basis of the treaty of Zurich (which see).

VILLAIN. See Slavery in England.

VIMIERA (in Portugal), where the British, under Sir Arthur Wellesley, defeated the French and Spanish forces under Marshal Junot, duke of Abrantes, Aug. 21, 1808. The attack, made with great bravery, was gallantly repulsed; it was repeated by Kellerman at the head of the French reserve, which was also repulsed; and the French, being charged with the bayonet, withdrew on all points in confusion, leaving many prisoners.

VINCENT, CAPE ST. (S.W. Portugal). Admiral Rooke, with twenty men-of-war, and the Turkish fleet under his convoy, was attacked by Admiral Tourville, with a force vastly superior to his own, off Cape St. Vincent, when twelve English and Dutch men-of-war, and eighty merchantmen, were taken or destroyed by the French, June 16, 1793. Near here Admiral Rodney destroyed several Spanish ships, January 16, 1780. (See Rodney's Victories.) The celebrated battle was fought Feb. 14, 1797, between the Spanish and British fleets, off the Cape; the latter commanded by Admiral Sir John Jervis, who took (after a well-fought battle) four line-of-battle ships, and considerably damaged the rest of the Spanish fleet. Two of the captured ships were of 100 guns each, and the other two each of 74. From this Cape the earl had his title.

VINCENT DE PAUL, ST., CHARITABLE SOCIETY, founded in 1833, in France, by twelve young men. It extends its extremely beneficial operations even into Britain. Its power excited the jealousy of the French government, which suppressed its central committee at Paris in Oct., 1861.

VINCENT'S, St. (West Indies), long a neutral island; but at the peace of 1763, the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English. The latter soon after engaged in a war against the Caribs, on the windward side of the island, who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a large tract of land to the British crown. In 1779 the Caribs greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the French, who, however, restored it in 1783. In 1795 the French landed some troops, and again instigated the Caribs to an insurrection, which was not subdued for several months. The great eruption of the Sconfrier Mountain, after the lapse of nearly a century, occurred in 1812. Population in 1861, 31,755.

VINE.* The vine was planted by Noah, 2347 B.C. Gen. ix., 20. A colony of vine-dressers from Phocæa, in Ionia, settled at Marseilles, and instructed the South Gauls in tillage, vine-dressing, and commerce, about 600 B.C. Some think the vines are the aborigines of Languedoc, Provence, and Sicily, and that they grew spontaneously on the Mediterranean shores of Italy,

* Vine Disease.—In the spring of 1845, Mr. E. Tucker, of Margate, observed a fungus (since named Oidium Tuckeri) on grapes in the hot-houses of Mr. Slater, of Margate. It is a whitish mildew, and totally destroys the fruit. The spores of this oidium were found in the vineyards of Versailles in 1847. The disease soon reached the trellised vines, and in 1850 many lost all their produce. In 1852, it spread over France, Italy, Spain, Syria, and in Zante and Cephalonia attacked the currants, reducing the crop to one twelfth of the usual amount. Through its ravages the wine manufacture in Madeira ceased for several years. Many attempts have been made to arrest the progress of the disease, but without much effect. Sulphur dust is the most efficacious remedy. The disease had much abated in France, Portugal, and Madeira (which, in 1862 Californian vines were introduced into the two latter countries).

France, and Spain. The vine was carried into Champagne, and part of Germany, by the Emperor Probus, about A.D. 279. The vine and sugar-cane were planted in Madeira in 1420. The vine was planted in England in 1552; and in the gardens of Hampton Court Palace is an old and celebrated vine, said to surpass any known vine in Europe. See Grapes and Wine. The Tokay vines were planted in 1350.

VINEGAR. Known nearly as early as wine. The ancients had several kinds of vinegar, which they used for drink. The Roman soldiers were accustomed to take it in their marches. The Bible represents Boaz, a rich citizen of Bethlehem, as providing vinegar for his reapers (1312 B.C.), a custom still prevalent in Spain and Italy.

VINEGAR HILL (near Enniscorthy, in Wexford, S. E. Ireland). Here a sanguinary conflict took place between the British troops, commanded by Lake, and the Irish insurgent forces, June 21, 1798. The rebels suffered a severe defeat, though they claimed the victory from their having killed so many of the king's troops.

VINTNERS. See Victualers.

VIOL AND VIOLIN. The lyre of the Greeks became our harp, and the viol of the Middle Ages became the violin. The violin is mentioned as early as 1200, in the legendary life of St. Christopher. It was introduced into England, some say, by Charles II. Stradivarius (or Stradivarius) of Cremona was a renowned violin-maker (1700 to 1722).

VIRGIN MARY. The Assumption of the Virgin is a festival in the Greek and Latin Churches, in honor of the miraculous ascent of Mary into heaven, according to their belief, Aug. 15, A.D. 45.—The Presentation of the Virgin is a feast celebrated Nov. 21, said to have been instituted among the Greeks in the 11th century; its institution in the West is ascribed to Pope Gregory XI., 1372.* See Annunciation and Conception, Immaculate.

VIRGINIA. See Rome, 449 B.C.

VIRGINIA, the first British settlement in North America, was discovered by John Cabot in 1497, and was taken possession of and named by Raleigh, after the virgin-queen Elizabeth, July 13, 1584. Vain attempts were made to settle it in 1585. Two expeditions were formed by patent in 1606, and others in 1610. In 1626 it reverted to the crown, and a more permanent colony was established soon afterward. George Washington was delegate for Virginia in the Congress of 1774. Eastern Virginia seceded from the Union, April 25, 1861, but Western Virginia declared for the Union, Feb. 13, and elected a governor, Feb. 20, 1861. Virginia was the chief seat of the war. See United States and Richmond.

VISCONTI, the name of a noble Italian family, which ruled in Milan from 1287 to 1447; the heiress of the family was married to Francesco Sforza, afterward Duke of Milan.

VISCOUNT (Vice Comes), anciently the name of an officer under an earl, who, being oftentimes required at court, was his deputy, to look after the affairs of the county. The first viscount in England created by patent was John, lord Beaumont, whom Henry VI. created Viscount Beaumont, giving him precedence above all barons, Feb. 10, 1440.—Ashmole. This title, however, is of older date in Ireland and France. John Barry, lord Barry, was made Viscount Buttevant, in Ireland, 9 Rich. II., 1385.—Beatson.

VISIGOTHS, separated from the Ostrogoths about 330. See Goths. The Emperor Valens, about 369, admitted them into the Roman territories upon the condition of their serving when wanted in the Roman armies; and Theodosius the Great permitted them to form distinct corps commanded by their own officers. In 400, under Alaric, they invaded Italy, and in 410 took Rome. They founded their kingdom of Toulouse, 414; conquered the Alani, and extended their rule into Spain, 414; expelled the Romans in 468, and finally were themselves conquered by the Saracens, under Muza, in 711, when their last king, Roderick, was defeated and slain. See Spain for a list of the Visigothic kings. Their rule in France ended with their defeat by Clovis at Voulogé in 507.

* "The Indian incarnate god Krishna, the Hindoos believe, had a virgin-mother of the royal race, and was sought to be destroyed in his infancy, about 900 years B.C. It appears that he passed his life in working miracles and preaching, and was so humble as to wash his friends' feet: at length dying, but rising from the dead, he ascended into heaven in the presence of a multitude. The Chinese relate nearly the same things of their Buddha."—Sir William Jones.

VITTORIA (N. Spain), the site of a brilliant victory obtained by Wellington over the French army commanded by Joseph Bonaparte, king of Spain, and Marshal Jourdan, June 21, 1813. The hostile armies were nearly equal, from 70,000 to 75,000 each. After a long and fearful battle, the French were driven, toward evening, through the town of Vittoria, and in their retreat were thrown into irretrievable confusion. The British loss was 22 officers and 479 men killed; 167 officers and 2640 men wounded. Marshal Jourdan lost 151 pieces of cannon, 451 wagons of ammunition, all his baggage, provisions, cattle, and treasure, with his bâton as a marshal of France. Continuing the pursuit on the 25th, Wellington took Jourdan's only remaining gun.

VIVARIUM. See Aquavivarium.

VIVISECTION, physiological experiments upon living animals having much increased, the Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Dresden and Paris in 1859 requested the opinion of a committee of eminent scientific men on the merits of the knowledge thus acquired. Their judgment was not unanimous. The London Society took up the question in 1860, and printed a pamphlet by Mr. G. Macilwain against vivisection. In Aug., 1862, an international conference to discuss the question was held at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham.*

VIZIER, GRAND, an officer of the Ottoman Porte, first appointed about 1326. The office was abolished in 1838.

VOLCANOES. In different parts of the earth there are above 200 volcanoes which have been active in modern times. See Etna, Vesuvius, and Iceland. In Mexico a plain was filled up into a mountain more than a thousand feet in height by the burning lava from a volcano in 1759. A volcano in the isle of Ferro broke out Sept. 13, 1777, which threw out an immense quantity of red water that discolored the sea for several leagues. A new volcano appeared in one of the Azore Islands, May 1, 1808.

VOLSCI, an ancient Latin people, frequently at war with the Romans. From their capital, Corioli, Caius Martius (who defeated them about 490 B.C.) derived his name Coriolanus. The story of his banishment by his ungrateful countrymen; of his revenge on them by bringing the Volsci to the gates of Rome, yet afterward sparing the city at the entreaties of his mother, Volumnia (487 B.C.), is considered by many as a poetical legend. The Volsci were finally subdued and incorporated into the Roman people about 338 B.C.

VOLTAIC PILE, OR BATTERY, was constructed in consequence of the discoveries of Galvani (see Galvanism in article Electricity). The principle was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como (born 1745), for thirty years professor of natural philosophy at Pavia, and announced by him to the Royal Society of London in 1793. The battery was first set up in 1800. Volta was made an Italian count and senator by Napoleon Bonaparte, and was otherwise greatly honored. While young he invented the electrophorus, electric pistol, and hydrogen lamp. He died in 1826, aged 81. The form of the Voltaic battery has been greatly improved by the researches of modern philosophers. The nitric acid battery of Mr. W. R. Grove was constructed in 1839; the carbon battery of Professor Robert Bunsen in 1842. The former is very much used in this country, that of Bunsen on the Continent.

VOLTURNO, a river in S. Italy, near Capua, near to which Garibaldi and his followers held a strong position. This was furiously assailed by the royal troops on Oct. 1, 1860, who were finally repulsed after a desperate struggle, the fiercest in which Garibaldi had yet been engaged. He was aided greatly by a band of Piedmontese from Naples. On Oct. 2 General Bixio completed the victory by capturing 2500 fresh Neapolitan troops and dispersing others.

VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS. Public contributions for the support of the British government against the policy and designs of France amounted to two millions and a half sterling in 1798. About £200,000 were transmitted to England from India in 1799. Sir Robert Peel, of Bury, among other contributions of equal amount, subscribed £10,000.—Annual Register. See Patriotic Fund. In 1862 nearly a million pounds were subscribed in the British Empire for the relief of the Lancashire cotton-spinners. See Cotton.

* Sir Charles Bell's opinion of vivisection was, that it either obscured the subject it was meant to illustrate, or misled men into practical errors of the most serious character.

VOLUNTEERS. This species of force was formed in England in consequence of the threatened invasion of revolutionary France, March, 1794. Besides the large army, and 85,000 men voted for the sea, they subsidized 40,000 Germans, raised the militia to 100,000 men, and armed the citizens as volunteers. Between the years 1798 and 1804, when this force was of greatest amount, it numbered 410,000, of which 70,000 were Irish.* On Oct. 26, 1803, King George III. reviewed in Hyde Park 12,401 London volunteers, and on Oct. 28, 14,676 more. The English volunteers were, according to official accounts, 341,600 on Jan. 1, 1804. See Naval Volunteers. In May, 1859, in consequence of the prevalence of the fear of a French invasion, the formation of volunteer corps of riflemen commenced under the auspices of the government, and by the end of the year many thousands were enrolled in all parts of the kingdom.

[The first Middlesex volunteers were formed in 1803 as the Duke of Cumberland's sharpshooters. They retained their organization as a rifle club when other volunteers were disbanded. In 1835 they were permitted by the Duchess of Kent to take the name of the Royal Victoria Rifle Club.]

National Volunteer Association for promoting the practice of rifle-shooting was established in London, under the patronage of the queen and prince consort, Mr. Sidney (afterward Lord) Herbert, secretary at war, president, and the Earl of Derby and other noblemen vice-presidents (annual subscription one guinea, or a composition for life of ten guineas).....Nov. 16, 1859

* The first regiment of Irish volunteers was formed at Dublin, under command of the Duke of Leinster, Oct. 12, 1779. They armed generally to the amount of 20,000 men, and received the unanimous thanks of the houses of Lords and Commons in Ireland for their patriotism and spirit for coming forward and defending their country. At the period when the force appeared, Irish affairs bore a serious aspect; manufactures had decreased, and foreign trade had been hurt by a prohibition of the export of salted provisions and butter. No notice of the complaints of the people had been taken in the English Parliament, when, owing to the alarm of an invasion, ministers allowed the nation to arm, and an immense force was soon raised. The Irish took this occasion to demand a free trade, and government saw there was no trifling with a country with arms in its hands. The Irish Parliament unanimously addressed the king for a free trade, and it was granted, 1779.

VOUGLÉ, or VOUILLE, S.W. France (near Poitiers), where Alaric II., king of the Visigoths, was defeated and slain by Clovis, king of France, 507. Clovis immediately after subdued the whole country from the Loire to the Pyrenees, and thus his kingdom became firmly established. A peace followed between the Franks and Visigoths, who had been settled above one hundred years in that part of Gaul called Septimania. Clovis soon afterward made Paris the capital of his kingdom.—Henault.

VOYAGES. By order of Pharaoh-necho, of Egypt, some Phœnician pilots sailed from Egypt down the Arabian Gulf, round what is now called the Cape of Good Hope, entered the Mediterranean by the Straits of Gibraltar, coasted along the north of Africa, and at length arrived in Egypt, after a navigation of about three years, 604 B.C.—Herodotus. The first voyage round the world was made by a ship, part of a Spanish squadron which had been under the command of Magellan (who was killed at the Philippine Islands in a skirmish), in 1519-20. See Circumnavigators and Northwest Passage.

VULGATE (from Vulgatus, published), a term applied to the Latin version of the Scriptures, which is authorized by the Council of Trent (1546), and which is attributed to St. Jerome, about 384. The older version, called the Italic, is said to have been made in the beginning of the 2d century. Critical editions of the Vulgate were printed by order of Pope Sixtus V. in 1590, and of Pope Clement V. in 1592 and 1593. (The former was suppressed as imperfect.) The Latin Bible, called the Mentz Bible, was printed in 1460.

WAGES IN ENGLAND. The wages of sundry workmen were first fixed by act of Parliament 25 Edw. III., 1350. Haymakers had but one penny a day. Master carpenters, masons, tilers, and other coverers of houses, had not more than 3d. per day (about 9d. of our money), and their servants 1½d.—Viner's Statutes.

By the 23d Hen. VI., the wages of a bailiff of husbandry was 23s. 4d. per annum, and clothing of the price of 5s., with meat and drink; chief hind, carter, or shepherd, 20s., clothing, 4s.; common servant of husbandry, 15s., clothing, 40d.; woman-servant, 10s., clothing, 4s.....1444
By the 11th Hen. VII. a like rate of wages, with a little advance; as, for instance, a free mason, master carpenter, rough mason, bricklayer, master tiler, plumber, glazier, carver or joiner, was allowed from Easter to Michaelmas to take 6d. a day without meat and drink; or, with meat and drink, 4d.; from Michaelmas to Easter, to abate 1d. A master having under him six men was allowed 1d. a day extra.....1495

WAGHORN'S NEW OVERLAND ROUTE to INDIA. Lieutenant Waghorn devoted a large portion of his life to connect India with England. On Oct. 31, 1845, he arrived in London, by a new route, with the Bombay mail of the 1st of that month. His dispatches reached Suez on the 19th, and Alexandria on the 20th, whence he proceeded by steam-boat to a place twelve miles nearer London than Trieste. He hurried through Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Prussia, and Belgium, and reached London at half-past four on the morning of the first-mentioned day. The authorities of the different countries through which he passed eagerly facilitated his movements. The ordinary express, via Marseilles, reached London Nov. 2 following.* Mr. Waghorn subsequently addressed a letter to The Times newspaper, in which he stated that in a couple of years he would bring the Bombay mail to London in 21 days. He died January 8, 1850.

WAGONS were rare in the last century. They, with carts, etc., not excepting those used in agriculture, were taxed in 1783. The carriers' wagons are now nearly superseded by the railways.

WAGRAM, a village near Vienna, the site of a battle fought July 5-6, 1809, between the Austrian and French armies, in which the latter was completely victorious. The slaughter on both sides was dreadful: 20,000 Austrians were taken by the French, and the defeated army retired to Moravia. An armistice was signed on the 12th; and on Oct. 24, by a treaty of peace, Austria ceded all her sea-coast to France; the kingdoms of Saxony and Bavaria were enlarged at her expense; part of Poland in Galicia was ceded to Russia; and Joseph Bonaparte was recognized as king of Spain.

WAHABEES, or WAHABITES, a warlike Mohammedan reforming sect, considering themselves the only true followers of the Prophet, arose in Arabia about 1750, under the rule of Abd-el-Wahab. His grandson, Saoud, in 1801, defeated an expedition headed by the Caliph of Bagdad. In 1803 this sect seized Mecca and Medina, and continued their conquests, although their chief was assassinated in the midst of his victories. His son, Abdallah, long resisted Mohammed Ali, pacha of Egypt, but in 1818 he was defeated and taken prisoner by Ibrahim Pacha, who sent him to Constantinople, where he was put to death. The sect, now flourishing, is well described by Mr. W. Gifford Palgrave in his Journey and Residence in Arabia in 1862-3, published in 1865.

WAITS, the night minstrels who perform shortly before Christmas. The name was given to the musicians attached to the king's court. We find that a company of waits was established at Exeter in 1400 to "pipe the watch." The waits in London and Westminster were long officially recognized by the corporation.

WAKEFIELD (W. Yorkshire), the site of a battle between Margaret, the queen of Henry VI., and the Duke of York, in which the latter was slain, and 3000 Yorkists fell upon the field, Dec. 31, 1460. The death of the duke, who aspired to the crown, seemed to fix the good fortune of Margaret; but the Earl of Warwick espoused the cause of the duke's son, the Earl of March, afterward Edward IV., and the civil war was continued. An art and industrial expedition was opened at Wakefield, Aug. 30, 1865.

WALBROOK CHURCH (London), reputed the masterpiece of Sir Christopher Wren, completed in 1679. There was a church erected here in 1135, and a new church was erected in 1429.

WALCHEREN EXPEDITION. This unfortunate expedition of the British to the island of Walcheren, at the mouth of the Scheldt, in Holland, in 1809, consisted of 35 ships of the line and 200 smaller vessels, principally transports, and 40,000 land forces, the latter under the command of the Earl of Chatham, and the fleet under Sir Richard Strachan. For a long time the destination of this expedition remained secret; but before July 28, 1809, when it set sail, the French journals had announced that Walcheren was the point of attack. Perhaps a more powerful and better appointed armament had never previously left the British ports, or ever more completely disappointed public expectation. Flushing was invested in August; a dreadful bombardment followed, and the place was taken Aug. 15; but no suggestion on the part of the naval commander, nor urging on the part of the officers, could induce the earl to vigorous action, until the period of probable success was gone, and necessity obliged him to return with as many of the troops as disease and an unhealthy climate had spared. The place was evacuated Dec. 23, 1809. The House of Commons instituted an inquiry, and Lord Chatham resigned his post of master general of the ordnance to prevent greater disgrace; but the policy of ministers in planning the expedition was nevertheless approved. The following epigram appeared at the time:

* The Overland Mail, which had left Bombay on Dec. 1, 1845, arrived early on the 30th in London, by way of Marseilles and Paris. This speedy arrival was owing to the great exertions made by the French government to show that the route through France was shorter and better.

"Lord Chatham, with his sword undrawn,
Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strachan;
Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em,
Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham."

WALDECK, a German principality, established in 1652. The reigning family claim descent from the Saxon hero Witkind, who flourished about 772. The reigning prince, George Victor (born Jan. 14, 1831), succeeded his father, George, on May 15, 1845. Population in Dec., 1861, 53,604.

WALDENSES, a sect (also called Valdenses and Vaudois) inhabiting the Cottian Alps, derives its name, according to some authors, from Peter de Waldo, of Lyons (1170). They had a translation of the Bible, and allied themselves to the Albigenses, and were much vilified and persecuted, which led to the establishment of the Holy Office or Inquisition. Pope Innocent III. commissioned some monks to preach against the heresies of the Waldenses in Narbonne and Provence; but the French bishops were at first jealous of this mission, armed as it was with great power, and the feudal chiefs refused to obey the orders of the legates, 1203-4. One of the monks, the first inquisitor, Peter Chateaufort, having been assassinated, the aspiring pontiff called on all the neighboring powers to march into the heretical district. All obstinate heretics were placed at the disposal of Simon de Montfort, commander of this crusade, and the whole race of the Waldenses and Albigenses were ordered to be pursued with fire and sword. See Albigenses. They settled in the valleys of Piedmont about 1375, but were frequently dreadfully persecuted, especially in the 17th century, when Charles I. of England interceded for them (1627-9), and Oliver Cromwell (1655-6) obtained them some degree of toleration. They were permitted to have a church at Turin, Dec., 1853.

WALES, called by the Romans Britannia Secunda. After the Roman Emperor Honorius quitted Britain, Vortigern was elected King of South Britain. He invited over the Saxons to defend his country against the Picts and Scots; but the Saxons perfidiously sent for re-enforcements, consisting of Saxons, Danes, and Angles, by which they made themselves masters of South Britain. Many of the Britons retired to Wales, and defended themselves against the Saxons in their inaccessible mountains, about 447. In this state Wales remained unconquered till Henry II. subdued South Wales in 1157; and in 1282 Edward I. entirely reduced the whole country, putting an end to its independence by the death of Llewelyn, the last prince.* The Welsh, however, were not entirely reconciled to this revolution till the queen gave birth to a son at Caernarvon in 1284, whom Edward styled Prince of Wales, which title the heir to the crown of Great Britain has borne almost ever since. Wales was united and incorporated with England by act of Parliament, 1536. See Britain. The supreme authority in Britannia Secunda intrusted to Suetonius Paulinus..... 58

* At the commencement of the Civil War, Pembroke Castle was the only Welsh fortress in the possession of the Parliament, and it was intrusted to the command of Col. Langhorne. In 1647, he, and Colonels Powel and Poyer, embraced the cause of the king, and made Pembroke their head-quarters, after the defeat at St. Fagan's, retired to the castle, followed by an army led by Cromwell. They capitulated, after having endured great sufferings from want of water. Langhorne, Powel, and Poyer were tried by a court-martial, and condemned to death; but Cromwell having been induced to spare the lives of two of them, it was ordered that they should draw lots for the favor, and three papers were folded up, on two of which were written the words "Life given by God;" the third was left blank. The latter was drawn by Colonel Poyer, who was shot accordingly on the above-mentioned day.—Pennant.

ENGLISH PRINCES OF WALES.*

1301. Edward Plantagenet (afterward King Edward II.), son of Edward I., born in Caernarvon Castle on the 25th April, 1284. It is asserted that immediately after his birth he was presented by his father to the Welsh chieftains as their future sovereign, the king holding up the royal infant in his arms, and saying, in the Welsh language, "Eich Dyn," literally, in English, "This is your man," but signifying "This is your countryman and king." See, however, "Ich Dien."
1343. Edward the Black Prince.
1376. Richard, his son (afterward Richard II.).
1399. Henry (afterward Henry V.), son of Henry IV.
1454. Edward, son of Henry VI.; slain at Tewkesbury, May 4, 1471.
1471. Edward (afterward Edward V.), son of Edward IV.
1483. Edward, son of Richard III.; died in 1484.
1489. Arthur, son of Henry VII.; died in 1502.
1503. Henry, his brother (afterward Henry VIII.).
1537. Edward, his son (afterward Edward VI.), was Duke of Cornwall, and not Prince of Wales.
1610. Henry Frederick, son of James I.; died Nov. 6, 1612.
1616. Charles, his brother (afterward Charles I.).
1630. Charles, his son (afterward Charles II.), never created prince of Wales.
1714. George Augustus (afterward George II.).
1729. Frederick Lewis, his son; died March 20, 1751.
1751. George, his son (afterward George III.).
1762. George, his son (afterward George IV.).

* WALES, PRINCESS OF. This title was held, some authors say, during the early period of her life, by the Princess Mary of England, eldest daughter of Henry VIII., and afterward Queen Mary I. She was created, they state, by her father Prince of Wales, in order to conciliate the Welsh people and keep alive the name; and was, they add, the first and only Princess of Wales in her own right, a rank she enjoyed until the birth of a son to Henry, who was afterward Edward VI., born in 1537. This is, however, denied by Banks.

1841. Albert-Edward, son of Queen Victoria. Traveled on the Continent, and studied at Oxford and Edinburgh in 1859. Visited Canada with the dignity of a viceroy, and the United States, 1860. Entered the University of Cambridge in Jan.; attended the camp at Dublin, July to September; opened New Middle Temple Library, Oct. 31, 1861. Ordered to be prayed for as Albert-Edward instead of Albert, Jan. 8; visited the Continent, Syria, and Egypt, March-June; Germany and Italy, Aug.-Dec., 1862. Admitted to the House of Peers, Feb. 5; a privy councillor, Dec. 8, 1863. Married to Princess Alexandra of Denmark, March 10, 1863. Visited Denmark and Sweden, Sept.-Oct., 1864. [Issue: Albert-Victor, born Jan., 1864; George-Frederick, born June 3, 1865; Louisa Victoria Alexandra Dagmar, born Feb. 20, 1867; Victoria Olga Alexandra Mary, born July 6, 1868.]

WALHALLA (the Hall of Glory), a temple near Ratibon, erected by Louis, king of Bavaria, to receive the statues and memorials of the great men of Germany, commenced Oct. 18, 1830, and inaugurated Oct. 18, 1842. The name is derived from the fabled meeting-place of Scandinavian heroes after death.

WALKING. See Pedestrianism.

WALLACHIA. See Danubian Principalities. On Dec. 23, 1861, the union of Wallachia and Moldavia, under the name of Roumania, was proclaimed at Jassy and Bucharest.

WALLIS'S VOYAGE. Captain Wallis sailed from England on his voyage round the world, July 26, 1766, and returned to England May 19, 1768.

WALLOONS, a people who fled to England from the persecution of the cruel Duke of Alva, the governor of the Low Countries for Philip II. of Spain, 1566. A church was given to them by Queen Elizabeth. The first permanent settlements in New York were made by Walloons (the descendants of French Protestants who had fled to Holland). Thirty-five families arrived in 1623. Eight families went up the Hudson, and settled at Albany; the remainder crossed the East River, and settled upon lands now covered by the eastern portion of Brooklyn, around the navy-yard. There was born Sarah Rapelye, the first white child born within the limits of the State of New York.

WALLS. See Roman Walls.

WALNUT-TREE has long existed in England.* The black walnut-tree (Juglans nigra) was brought to these countries from North America before 1629.

WALPOLE'S ADMINISTRATIONS. Mr. Walpole (afterward Sir Robert, and Earl of Orford) was born in 1676; became secretary at war in 1708; was expelled the House of Commons on a charge of misappropriating the public money, 1711; committed to the Tower, Jan. 17, 1712; became first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the Exchequer in 1715. He resigned, on a disunion of the cabinet, in 1717, bringing in the Sink-fund Bill on the day of his resignation. On the Earl of Sunderland retiring in 1721, he resumed his office, and held it till 1742. He died March 18, 1745.

SECOND WALPOLE ADMINISTRATION (1721).

Sir Robert Walpole, First Lord of the Treasury. Thomas, lord Parker, created Earl of Macclesfield, Lord Chancellor.

Henry, lord Carleton (succeeded by William, duke of Devonshire), Lord President.

Evelyn, duke of Kingston (succeeded by Lord Trevor), Privy Seal.

James, earl of Berkeley, First Lord of the Admiralty. Charles (Viscount Townshend), and John, lord Carteret (the latter succeeded by the Duke of Newcastle), Secretaries of State.

Duke of Marlborough (succeeded by the Earl of Cadogan), Ordnance.

George Treby (succeeded by Henry Pelham), Secretary at War.

Viscount Torrington, etc.

WALTZ, the popular German national dance, was introduced into England by Baron Neuman and others in 1813.—Raikes.

* Near Welwyn, in Hertfordshire, there was the largest walnut-tree on record; it was felled in 1627, and from it were cut nineteen loads of plank; and as much was sold to a gunsmith in London as cost £10 carriage; besides which, there were thirty loads of roots and branches. When standing it covered 76 poles of ground, a space equal to 2299 square yards, statute measure.

WANDSWORTH, near London. Here was opened Wandsworth meeting-house, the first place of worship for Dissenters in England, Nov. 20, 1572. In Garrett Lane, near this place, a mock election of a mayor of Garratt was formerly held after every general election of Parliament, to which Foote's dramatic piece, The Mayor of Garratt (1763), gave no small celebrity.

WAR, called by Erasmus "the malady of princes." Osymandyas of Egypt, the first warlike king; he passed into Asia, and conquered Bactria, 2100 B.C.—Usher. He is supposed by some to be the Osiris of the priests. It is computed that, to the present time, no less than 6,860,000,000 of men have perished in the field of battle. See Battles.

WARBECK'S INSURRECTION. Perkin Warbeck, the son of a Florentine Jew, to whom Edward IV. had stood godfather, was persuaded by Margaret, duchess of Burgundy, sister to Richard III., to personate her nephew Richard, Edward V.'s brother, which he did first in Ireland, where he landed, 1492. The imposture was discovered by Henry VII., 1493. Some writers consider that Warbeck was not an impostor.

Made an attempt to land at Kent with 600 men, when 150 were taken prisoners and executed, 1495.

Recommended by the King of France to James IV. of Scotland, who gave him his kinswoman, Lord Huntley's daughter, in marriage, the same year. James IV. invaded England in his favor, 1496.

Left Scotland, and went to Bodmin, in Cornwall, where 3000 joined him, and he took the title of Richard IV., 1497.

Taken prisoner by Henry VII., 1498.

Set in the stocks at Westminster and Cheapside, and sent to the Tower, 1499.

Plotted with the Earl of Warwick to escape out of the Tower by murdering the lieutenant, for which he was hanged at Tyburn, Nov. 28, 1499.

WARDIAN CASES. In 1829, Mr. N. B. Ward observed a small fern and grass growing in a closed glass bottle, in which he had placed a chrysalis covered with moist earth. From this circumstance he was led to construct his well-known closely glazed cases, which afford to plants light, heat, and moisture, and exclude deleterious gases, smoke, etc. They are particularly adapted for ferns. In 1833 they were first employed for the transmission of plants to Sydney, etc., with great success; and Professor Faraday lectured on the subject in 1835.

WARDMOTES, meetings of the citizens of London in their wards, where they elect annually their common councillors. The practice is said to have begun in 1386. They had previously assembled in Guildhall.

WARSAW, the metropolis of Poland. The diet was transferred to this city from Cracow in 1566, and it became the seat of government in 1689. Population in 1859, 162,777. See Poland, 1861-5, for recent events.

WASHINGTON (in the District of Columbia, partly in Virginia and Maryland, on the bank of the Potomac, N.E. of Virginia), the capital of the United States, founded in 1791; and made the seat of government in 1800. The House of Representatives was opened for the first time, May 30, 1808. Washington was taken in the late war by the British forces under Gen. Ross, when all its superb national structures were consumed by a general conflagration, the troops not sparing even the national library, Aug. 24, 1814. Gen. Ross was soon afterward killed by some American riflemen, in a desperate engagement at Baltimore, Sept. 12, following. —Part of the Capitol and the whole of the library of the United States' Congress were destroyed by fire, Dec. 24, 1851. The Prince of Wales was entertained by the President here in Sept., 1860. See United States. Washington was fortified in April, 1861, against the Confederates. Slavery abolished in the district, April 4, 1861.

WASHINGTON, FORT, CAPTURE OF. This fort was upon the highest point of York or Manhattan Island, near its northern end, and was constructed in the spring and summer of 1776. When Washington withdrew to Westchester, just before the battle of White Plains, he placed 3000 men, under Colonel Morgan, in garrison at Fort Washington. These were attacked on the 16th of November by the combined British and Hessian forces, under the command of General Knyphausen, full 5000 strong. The fort was taken, but at an expense to the victors of 1000 men. The loss of the Americans in killed and wounded did not exceed 100. More than 2000 of them were made prisoners, and these, with those taken on Long Island, filled the loathsome prisons and prison-ship at New York.

WASUUM (named from the royal house of Wasa or Vasa), a supposed new metal, discovered by F. Bahr, of Stockholm, in 1862. In Nov., 1863, Nickles declared it to be a compound of didymium, yttrium, and terbium.

WASTE LANDS. The inclosure of waste lands and commons, in order to promote agriculture, first began in England about the year 1547, and gave rise to Ket's rebellion, 1549. Inclosures were again promoted by the authority of Parliament, 1785. The waste lands in England were estimated in 1794 to amount to 14 millions of acres, of which there were taken into cultivation 2,837,476 acres before June, 1801. In 1841 there were about 6,700,000 acres of waste land, of which more than half was thought to be capable of improvement. See Agriculture.

WATCHES are said to have been first invented at Nuremberg, 1477, although it is affirmed that Robert, king of Scotland, had a watch about 1310.

Watches first used in astronomical observations by Purbach..... 1500

Authors assert that the Emperor Charles V. was the first who had any thing that might be called a watch, though some call it a small table-clock, 1530

Watches first brought to England from Germany in..... 1577

A watch which belonged to Queen Elizabeth is preserved in the library of the Royal Institution, London.

Spring pocket-watches (watches properly so called) have had their invention ascribed to Dr. Hooke by the English, and to M. Huyghens by the Dutch. Dr. Derham, in his Artificial Clock-maker, says that Dr. Hooke was the inventor; and he appears certainly to have produced what is called the pendulum-watch about 1658; manifest, among other evidences, from an inscription on one of the double-balance watches presented to Charles II., "Rob. Hooke, inven. 1658; T. Tompion, fecit, 1675."

Repeating watches invented by Barlowe..... 1676

Harrison's first time-piece produced..... 1735

Watches and clocks were taxed in..... 1797

The tax was repealed in 1798. See Clocks.

WATER. Thales of Miletus, founder of the Ionic sect, considered water to be the original principle of every thing, about 594 B.C.—Stanley. In the Roman Church, water was first mixed with the sacramental wine, A.D. 122.—Lenglet. Cavendish and Watt, in 1781, demonstrated that water is composed of eight parts of oxygen and one part of hydrogen. In freezing, water contracts till it is reduced to 42° or 40° Fahr.; it then begins to expand till it becomes ice at 32°.—Water was first conveyed to London by leaden pipes, 21 Hen. III., 1237.—Ston. It took nearly fifty years to complete it; the whole being finished, and Cheapside conduit erected, only in 1285. The New River water was brought to London from Amwell, in Hertfordshire, at an immense expense, by Sir Hugh Myddelton, in 1613. The city was supplied with its water by conveyances of wooden pipes in the streets and small leaden ones to the houses, and the New River Company was incorporated, 1620. So late as Queen Anne's time there were water-carriers at Aldgate pump. London is now supplied by eight companies: The New River, East London, Chelsea, Grand Junction, Southwark and Vauxhall, Kent, Lambeth, and West Middlesex. The water-works at Chelsea were completed and the company incorporated, 1722. London Bridge ancient water-works were destroyed by fire, Oct. 29, 1779. An act to supply the metropolis with water, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 84, was passed July 1, 1852. The supply is now considered to be much improved in quality and quantity. In Jan., 1857, a company was formed to carry out Dr. Normandy's patent for converting salt water into fresh. See Artesian Wells.

WATER-CLOCKS. See Clocks.

WATER-COLOR PAINTING was gradually raised from the hard, dry style of the last century, to its present brilliancy, by the efforts of Nicholson, Copley, Fielding, Varley, the great Turner, Pyne, Cattermole, Prout, etc., within the present century. The exhibition was founded in 1805.

WATER-GLASS, a name given to a liquid mixture of sand (silic) and one of the alkalies (potash or soda). Glauber (De Lithiase) mentions a similar mixture in 1644. Dr. Von Fuchs, the modern inventor, gave an account of his process in 1825; and Mr. Frederick Ransom, of Ipswich, ignorant of Von Fuchs's discovery, patented a mode of preparing water-glass in 1845, which he has since greatly improved upon. In 1857, M. Kuhlmann, of Lille, published a pamphlet setting forth the advantageous employment of water-glass in hardening porous stone and in stereochromy (which see). It has been applied to the exterior of many buildings in France and England. The memoirs of Von Fuchs and Kuhlmann were translated and printed in England in 1859 by direction of the prince consort.

WATER-MILLS, used for grinding corn, are said to have been invented by Belisarius, the general of Justinian, while besieged in Rome by the Goths, 555. The ancients parched their corn, and pounded it in mortars. Afterward mills were invented, which were turned by men and beasts with great labor; yet Pliny mentions wheels turned by water.

WATERFORD (S. Ireland), built 879, was totally destroyed by fire in 981. Rebuilt and considerably enlarged by Strongbow in 1171, and still farther in the reign of Henry VII., who granted considerable privileges to the citizens. Richard II. landed and was crowned here in 1399; in 1690, James II. embarked from hence for France, after the battle of the Boyne; and William III. resided here twice, and confirmed its privileges. Memorable storm here, April 18, 1792. The cathedral of Waterford, dedicated to the blessed Trinity, was first built by the Osmen, and by Malchus, the first bishop of Waterford, after his return from England from his consecration, 1096. This see was united with that of Lismore in 1363. It was valued in the king's books, by an extent returned 29 Henry VIII., at 472 8s. 1d. Irish per annum. By stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV., the see of Waterford and Lismore was united by the Irish Church Temporalities Act with the see of Cashel and Emly, Aug. 14, 1833. The interior of the cathedral, organ, etc., were destroyed by fire, Oct. 25, 1815.

WATERLOO, in Belgium, the site of the great battle on the 18th of June, 1815, between the French army, of 71,947 men and 246 guns, under Napoleon, and the Allies, commanded by the Duke of Wellington; the latter, with 67,661 men and 156 guns, resisted the various attacks of the enemy from nine in the morning until five in the afternoon. About that time 16,000 Prussians reached the field of battle; and by seven, the force under Blücher amounted to above 50,000 men, with 104 guns. Wellington then moved forward his whole army. A total rout ensued, and the carnage was immense. Of the British (23,991), 93 officers and 1916 men were killed and missing, and 363 officers and 4560 men wounded—total 6932; and the total loss of the allied army amounted to 4206 killed, 14,539 wounded, and 4231 missing, making 22,976 hors de combat. Napoleon, quitting the wreck of his flying army, returned to Paris; and finding it impossible to raise another, abdicated the throne of France.—*P. Nicholas.

WATER-SPOUT. Two water-spouts fell on the Glatz Mountains, in Germany, and caused dreadful devastation to Hantenbach and many other villages; many persons perished, July 13, 1827. A water-spout at Glaniesk, near Killarney, in Ireland, passed over a farm of Mr. John Macarthy, destroying farm-houses and other buildings; seventeen persons perished, Aug. 4, 1831. The estimated length of one seen near Calcutta, Sept. 27, 1855, was 1000 feet. It lasted ten minutes, and was absorbed upward. One seen on Sept. 24, 1856, burst into heavy rain.

WATER TOFANA. See Poisoning.

WATLING STREET. See Roman Roads.

WAVE PRINCIPLE (in accordance with which the curves of the hull of a ship should be adapted to the curves of a wave of the sea) formed the subject of experiments begun by Mr. John Scott Russell in 1832, with the view of increasing the speed of ships. Col. Beaufoy is said to have spent £50,000 in researches upon this matter. It was also taken up by the British Association, who have published reports of the investigations. The principle has been adopted by naval architects.

WAVERLEY NOVELS. The publication of the series began with "Waverley; or, 'Tis Sixty Years Since," in 1814, and closed with "Tales of my Landlord," fourth series, in 1831. The authorship was acknowledged by Sir Walter Scott at a dinner, Feb. 23, 1827.

WAWZ, or WAWER (Poland). The Poles, under Skrzynecki, attacked the Russians at Wawz, and, after two days' hard fighting, all the Russians' positions were carried by storm, and they compelled to retreat,

* It is an historical fact, that the British forces have been twice signally successful over those of France on the same ground—Waterloo; and that by the side of the very chapel of Waterloo, which was remarked for being uninjured by shot or shell on the memorable 18th of June, 1815, did Marlborough cut off a large division of the French forces opposed to him on the 17th of August, 1705. It is no less a fact, that the conquerors of each of those days, on the same field, are the only commanders in the British service whose military career brought them to the summit of the peerage—to dukedoms.

with the loss of 12,000 men and 2000 prisoners, March 31, 1831. The loss of the Poles was small, but their triumph was followed by defeat and ruin.

WAX came into use for candles in the 12th century; and wax candles were esteemed a luxury in 1300, being but little used. In China candles of vegetable wax have been in use for centuries. See Candleberry. The wax-tree, Ligustrum lucidum, was brought from China before 1794.—SEALING-WAX was not brought into use in England until about 1556. Its use has been almost superseded by the introduction of adhesive envelopes, about 1844.

WE. Sovereigns generally use we for I, which style began with King John, 1199.—Coke. The German emperors and kings used the plural about 1200.

WEATHER. See Meteorology.

WEAVING appears to have been practiced in China more than a thousand years before it was known in Europe or Asia. The Egyptians ascribed the art to Isis; the Greeks to Minerva; and the Peruvians to the wife of Manco Capac. Our Savior's vest, or coat, had not any seam, being woven from the top throughout in one whole piece. The print of a frame for weaving such a vest may be seen in Cabinet's Dictionary under the word Vestments. Two weavers from Brabant settled at York, where they manufactured woollens, which, says King Edward, "may prove of great benefit to us and our subjects," 1331. Flemish dyers, cloth drapers, linen-makers, silk-throwsters, etc., settled at Canterbury, Norwich, Colchester, Southampton, and other places, on account of the Duke of Alva's persecution, 1567. See Loom and Electric Loom.

WEDGWOOD-WARE, pottery and porcelain, produced by Mr. Josiah Wedgwood, of Staffordshire, in 1762. His potteries, termed Etruria, were founded in 1771. Previously to 1763, much earthen-ware was imported from France and Holland.

WEDNESDAY, the fourth day of the week, so called from the Saxon idol Woden or Odin, worshipped on this day. "Woden was the reputed author of magic and the inventor of all the arts, and was thought to answer to the Mercury of the Greeks and Romans."—Butler.

WEEDON INQUIRY (Northamptonshire). Commissioners were appointed to inquire into the accounts of Mr. Elliot, superintendent of the great military clothing establishment at this place, in July, 1858, and commenced sitting in September. Many of the statements, afterward disputed, caused much dissatisfaction.

WEEK. The space of seven days, supposed to be first used among the Jews, who observed the Sabbath every seventh day. They had three sorts of weeks, the first the common one of seven days, the second of years, which was seven years, the third of seven times seven years, at the end of which was the jubilee. All the present English names are derived from the Saxon:

Latin.	Day of the Sun,	English.	Saxon.
Dies Solis,	Day of the Sun,	Sunday,	Sun's day.
Dies Lune,	Day of the Moon,	Monday,	Moon's day.
Dies Martis,	Day of Mars,	Tuesday,	Tiw's day.
Dies Mercurii,	Day of Mercury,	Wednesday,	Woden's day.
Dies Jovis,	Day of Jupiter,	Thursday,	Thor's day.
Dies Veneris,	Day of Venus,	Friday,	Friga's day.
Dies Saturni,	Day of Saturn,	Saturday,	Saterne's day.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. These, and the stamping of gold and silver money, were invented by Phidon, tyrant of Argos, 895 B.C. et seq.—Arundelian Marbles. Weights were originally taken from grains of wheat, the lowest being still called a grain.—Chalmers.

The standard measure was originally kept at Winchester by the law of King Edgar, 972.

Standards of weights and measures were provided for the whole kingdom of England by the sheriffs of London, 9 Rich. I., 1197.

A public weighing machine was set up in London, and all commodities ordered to be weighed by the city officer, called the weigh-master, who was to do justice between buyer and seller, stat. 3 Edw. II. (Stow), 1309.

Edward III. ordered that there should be "one weight, measure, and yard" throughout the kingdom, 1353.

First statute, directing the use of avoirdupois weight, of 24 Hen. VIII., 1532.

Weights and measures ordered to be examined by the justices at quarter-sessions, 35 Geo. III., 1794.

Again regulated, 1800.

Statute for establishing a uniformity of weights and measures, 1824, took place throughout the United Kingdom, Jan. 1, 1826.

bishops of the Episcopal Church resolved that they would welcome any practical attempt to effect a brotherly reconciliation between the Wesleyan body and the Church of England; but as the plan proposed treated the Wesleyans as an inferior body, the scheme failed in its object.

WEST INDIES, islands discovered by Columbus, St. Salvador being the first land he made in the New World, and first seen by him in the night between the 11th and 12th Oct., 1492. The largest are Cuba, Hayti (or St. Domingo), Jamaica, Porto Rico, Trinidad, and Guadeloupe. See the Islands respectively.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA, formerly SWAN RIVER SETTLEMENT, which was projected by Colonel Peel in 1828. Regulations issued from the Colonial Office, and Captain Stirling, appointed lieutenant governor, Jan. 17, 1829, arrived at the appointed site in August following. The three towns of Perth, Freemantle, and Guildford were founded same year. In March, 1830, fifty ships, with 2000 emigrants, with property amounting to £1,000,000, had arrived before hardly any dwellings had been erected or land surveyed. The more energetic settlers left for home or the neighboring colonies, and the colony languished for twenty years for want of suitable inhabitants—the first settlers, from their previous habits and rank in life, proving unable for the rough work of colonization. In 1848 the colonists requested that convicts might be sent out to them, and in 1849 a band arrived, who were kindly received and well treated. The best results ensued. By 1853, 2000 had arrived, and the inhabitants of Perth had requested that 1000 should be sent out annually. The reception of convicts is to cease in after years, in consequence of the energetic opposition of the other Australian colonies (1855).—The settlement at King George's Sound was founded in 1826 by the government of New South Wales. It was used as a military station for four years. In 1830 the home government ordered the settlement to be transferred to Swan River. Since the establishment of steam communication, the little town of Albany here, employed as a coaling station, has become a thriving sea-port. It possesses an excellent harbor, used by whalers. A journal, called the Freemantle Gazette, was published here in March, 1831. Population of West Australia in 1859, 14,837; Dec., 1861, 15,555. Governor, John Stephen Hampton, appointed 1861.

WESTERN CHURCH (called also the LATIN or ROMAN) broke off communion with the Greek or Eastern Church, 653. (See Greek Church.) The history of the Western Church is mainly comprised in that of the Popes and of the several European kingdoms. (See Popes.) This church was disturbed by the Arian heresy about 345 and 500; and by the Pelagian about 409; by the introduction of image-worship about 600; by the injunction of the celibacy of the clergy and the rise of the monastic orders about 649; by the contests between the emperors and the popes respecting ecclesiastical investitures between 1073 and 1173; by the rise and progress of the Reformation in the 15th and 16th centuries; by the contests between the Jesuits and Jansenists in the 17th and 18th centuries; and by the progress of modern philosophy and rationalism in the 19th. See Roman Catholics.

WESTERN EMPIRE. The Roman Empire was first divided into Eastern and Western by Diocletian in A.D. 296, but was reunited under Constans in 340. It was again divided into Eastern and Western by Valentinian and Valens, of whom the former had the Western portion, or Rome, properly so called, 364. See Eastern Empire, Italy, and Rome.

RULERS OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

364. Valentinian, son of Gratian, takes the Western, and his brother Valens the Eastern Empire.
367. Gratian, a youth, son of Valentinian, made a colleague in the government by his father.
375. Valentinian II., another son, also very young, is, on the death of his father, associated with his brother in the empire. Gratian is assassinated by his general, Andragathius, in 383. Valentinian murdered by one of his officers, Arbogastes, in 392.
392. Eugenius, a usurper, assumes the imperial dignity; he and Arbogastes are defeated by Theodosius the Great, who becomes sole emperor. [Andragathius throws himself into the sea, and Arbogastes dies by his own hand.]
395. Honorius, son of Theodosius, reigns, on his father's death, in the West, and his brother Arcadius in the East. Honorius dies in 423.

[Usurpation of John, the Notary, who is defeated and slain near Ravenna.]

425. Valentinian III., son of the Empress Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great; murdered at the instance of his successor, 455. Maximus; he marries Eudoxia, widow of Valentinian, who, to avenge the death of her first husband and the guilt of her second, invites the African Vandals into Italy, and Rome is sacked. Maximus stoned to death.
455. Marcus Aetilius Avitus; forced to resign, and dies in his flight toward the Alps.
457. Julius Valerius Majorianus; murdered at the instance of his minister, Ricimer, who raises 461. Libius Severus to the throne, but holds the supreme power. Severus is poisoned by Ricimer.
465. [Interregnum. Ricimer retains the authority, without assuming the title of emperor.]
467. Anthemius, chosen by the joint suffrages of the senate and army; murdered by Ricimer, who dies soon after.
472. Flavius Aetilius Olybrius; slain by the Goths soon after his accession.
473. Glycerius; forced to abdicate by his successor,
474. Julius Nepos; deposed by his general, Orestes, and retires to Salona.
475. Romulus (called Augustulus, or Little Augustus), son of Orestes. Orestes is slain, and the emperor deposed by
476. Odoacer, king of the Heruli; takes Rome, assumes the style of King of Italy, and completes the fall of the Western Empire.

(See Italy, Rome, and Germany.)

WESTMINSTER. A city so called on account of its western situation in respect to St. Paul's Cathedral, or from there being formerly a monastery named East Minster on the hill now called Great Tower Hill. This city joins London at Temple Bar. Formerly Westminster was called Thorney, or Thorney Island; and in ancient times Canute had a palace here, which was burnt in 1263. Westminster and London were one mile asunder so late as 1603, when the houses were thatched, and there were mud walls in the Strand. It is said that the great number of Scotsmen who came over after the accession of James I. occasioned the building of Westminster, and united it with London.—Hozel's Londinopolis. See Palace of Westminster and Parliament.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. The miraculous stories concerning this pile of buildings were questioned by Sir Christopher Wren, who was employed to survey the present edifice, and who, upon close examination, found nothing to countenance the belief that it was erected on the ruins of a pagan temple. Historians have fixed the era of the first abbey in the 6th century, and ascribed to Sebert the honor of erecting it.

WESTMINSTER BISHOPRIC AND DEANERY. At the dissolution of monasteries, Westminster Abbey was valued at £397 per annum; King Henry VIII., in 1538, erected it into a deanery; and in 1541 he erected it into a bishopric, and appointed John Thirleby prelate. But he, having wasted the patrimony allotted by the king for the support of the see, was translated to Norwich in 1550, and with him ended the bishopric of Westminster; Middlesex was the diocese, being restored to London. The dean continued to preside until the accession of Mary, who restored the abbot; but Elizabeth displaced the abbot, and erected the abbey into a collegiate church of a dean and twelve prebendaries, as it still continues. On the revival of the Order of the Bath in 1725, the Dean of Westminster was appointed dean of that order, which honor has been continued. Dr. Nicholas Wiseman was created Archbishop of Westminster by Pope Pius IX. on Sept. 30, 1850. See Papal Aggression.

WESTMINSTER BRIDGES. The old bridge was accounted one of the most beautiful bridges in the world. It was begun (after a design of M. Labelye), Sept. 13, 1738; the first stone was laid Jan. 29, 1738-9; and it was opened for passengers Nov. 17, 1750; cost £426,650. It was built of Portland stone, and crosses the river where the breadth is 1223 feet. Owing to the sinking of several of its piers, most of the balustrade on both sides was removed, to relieve the structure of its weight.—By 16 & 17 Vict., c. 46 (Aug. 4, 1853), the estates of its commissioners were transferred to her majesty's commissioners of works, who were empowered to remove the then existing bridge, and build a new bridge (near the old one), which was shortly after begun. The contract required the completion of the works by June 1, 1857. The driving of the first elm pile commenced on July 3, and the driving of the iron piles and plates in September. The works were suspended for a time, in consequence of the failure of Messrs. Mare, the contractors. The government eventually undertook the building, which they intrusted to Mr. Thomas Page, the engineer. One half of the new bridge was opened for use early in 1860; the whole on May 24, 1862.

WESTMINSTER CONFESSION OF FAITH AND CATECHISMS were drawn up by the "Assembly of Divines" (partly consisting of laymen), who sat by authority of Parliament in Henry VII.'s chapel, Westminster, from 1643 to 1647. These have ever since been the doctrinal standards of Scotch Presbyterians.

WESTMINSTER HALL, London. One of the most venerable remains of English architecture, first built by William Rufus in 1097, for a banqueting-hall; and here, in 1099, on his return from Normandy, "he kept his feast of Whitsuntide very royally." The hall became ruinous before the reign of Richard II., who repaired it in 1397, raised the walls, altered the windows, and added a new roof, as well as a stately porch and other buildings. In 1236, Henry III., on New-year's day, caused 6000 poor persons to be entertained in this hall, and in the other rooms of his palace, as a celebration of Queen Eleanor's coronation; and here Richard II. held his Christmas festival in 1397, when the number of the guests each day the feast lasted was 10,000.—Stow. The courts of law were established here by King John.—Idem. Westminster Hall was stated to be the largest room in Europe unsupported by pillars: it is 270 feet in length, 74 feet broad. The hall underwent a general repair in 1802. Concurrently with the erection of the palace of Westminster, many improvements and alterations have lately been made in this magnificent hall. The Volunteer Rifle Corps were drilled in the hall in the winter of 1859.

WESTMINSTER PALACE. See under Palace of Westminster and Parliament.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL, London, was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1560, for the education of forty boys, denominated the Queen's Scholars, who are prepared for the University. It is situated within the walls of the abbey, and is separated into two schools or divisions, comprising seven forms or classes. Besides the scholars on the foundation, many of the nobility and gentry send their sons to Westminster for instruction. A proposal in 1860 to remove the school was disapproved of in 1861.

WESTMORELAND. This county and Cumberland were granted as a fief to Malcolm of Scotland by Edward the Elder in 945, and resumed by Henry III. in 1257. Neville, earl of Westmoreland, revolted against Elizabeth in 1569, and was attainted in 1570.

WESTPHALIA (Germany). This duchy belonged in former times to the dukes of Saxony, and afterward became subject to the Archbishop of Cologne. On the secularization of 1802, it was made over to Hesse-Darmstadt; and in 1814 was ceded for an equivalent to Prussia. The kingdom of Westphalia, one of the temporary kingdoms of Bonaparte, composed of conquests from Prussia, Hesse-Cassel, Hanover, and the smaller states to the west of Elbe, was created Dec. 1, 1807, and Jerome Bonaparte appointed king. Hanover was annexed to it, March 1, 1810. The kingdom of Westphalia was abolished in 1813, and the countries restored to their former rulers.

WESTPHALIA, or MUNSTER, PEACE OF, signed at Munster and at Osnaburg, between France, the emperor, and Sweden, Spain continuing the war against France. By this peace the principle of a balance of power in Europe was first recognized; Alsace given to France, and part of Pomerania and some other districts to Sweden; the elector palatine restored to the lower palatinate; the religious and political rights of the German states established; and the independence of the Swiss Confederation recognized by Germany, Oct. 24, 1648.

WHALE FISHERY, it is said, was first carried on by the Norwegians so early as 837.—Lençlet. Whales were killed at Newfoundland and Iceland for their oil only, till 1578; the use of their fins and bones was not yet known, consequently (a writer quaintly adds) no stays were worn by the ladies. The English whale-fishing commenced at Spitzbergen in 1598; but the Dutch had been previously fishing there. The fishery was much promoted by an act of Parliament passed in 1749. From 1500 to 2000 whales have been killed annually on the coast of Greenland, etc. The quantity of whale-oil imported in 1814 was 33,567 tons. The quantity in 1826, when gas-light became general, was reduced to 25,000 tons; so that the consumption of oil had become, on this account, greatly diminished. In 1840 the quantity was about 22,000 tons; in 1850, 21,360 tons; in 1861, 19,176 tons; in 1864, 14,701 tons.

WHEAT. The Chinese ascribe to their emperor, Ching-Noung, who succeeded Fohi, the art of husbandry, and method of making bread from wheat, about 2000 years before the Christian era. Wheat was introduced into Britain in the 6th century, by Coll ap Coll Frewi.—Roberts. The first wheat imported into England of which we have a note was in 1347. Various statutes have regulated the sales of wheat, and restrained its importation, thereby to encourage its being raised at home. Imported into the United Kingdom in 1854, 2,656,455 qrs. of wheat, and 6,329,038 cwt. of flour; in 1861, 6,912,815 qrs. of wheat, and 6,152,938 cwt. of flour; in 1864, 23,196,714 cwt. of wheat, and 4,975,925 cwt. of flour. See Corn Laws and Bread. In 1862 attention was drawn to the probable utility of considering the pedigree of wheat.

WHEEL, BREAKING ON THE. A barbarous mode of death, of great antiquity, ordered by Francis I. for robbers, 1515. See Ravallac, etc.

WHEEL-WORK. See Spinning, Looms, Automata.

WHIGS. In the reign of Charles II. the name Whig was a term of reproach given by the court party to their antagonists for holding the principles of the "Whigs," or fanatical Covenanters in Scotland; and the name Tory was given to the court party, comparing them to the Tories, or Popish robbers in Ireland.—Baker. This distinction arose out of the discovery of the Meal-tub Plot (which see) in 1678. Upon bringing up the Meal Plot before Parliament, two parties were formed: the ones who doubted the plot styled those who believed in it Whigs; these styled their adversaries Tories. In time these names, given as marks of opprobrium, became honored distinctions.—Hume. The Whigs brought about the revolution of 1688-9, and established the Protestant succession. They were instrumental in obtaining the abolition of the slave-trade and slavery, the repeal of the Test and Corporation Act, Catholic Emancipation, parliamentary and municipal reform, and the repeal of the Corn laws. The Whig Club was established by Charles James Fox; one of its original members was the great Francis, duke of Bedford, who died in 1802. For the principal Whig ministries, see Godolphin, Halifax, Walpole, Rockingham, Grenville, Grey, Melbourne, Russell, Palmerston.

WHISKY, the distilled spirit produced from malt and other corn in Scotland and Ireland, of which about eight millions of gallons have been distilled annually in the former, and upward of nine millions of gallons in the latter. The duty upon this article has produced an annual revenue of about three millions. The distillation of whisky in these countries is referred to the 16th century; but some authors state it to have been earlier. See Distillation. In 1855 the duties on spirits distilled in Scotland and Ireland were equalized with those distilled in England.

WHISKY INSURRECTION, a popular outbreak in Western Pennsylvania, in the summer of 1794, on account of the imposition of duties on domestic distilled spirits. The people of Western Pennsylvania, where large quantities of whisky were manufactured, resisted the collection of the revenue by excise officers with force of arms. The insurrection became general in several counties. Many outrages were committed. Buildings were burned, the mails were rifled, and government officers were insulted and abused. At one time there were 6000 or 7000 insurgents under arms. The President of the United States (Washington) finally called out the military force of the country, to put down the insurgents, and was successful. Great leniency was shown to the offenders, and the excitement died away.

WHITE-BAIT DINNER, when the cabinet ministers meet at the end of each session, is said to have begun at the end of the last century, through Sir Robert Preston and Sir George Rose inviting Mr. Pitt and his colleagues to dine at Dagenham, and afterward at Greenwich. Another account dates the origin in 1721.

WHITEBOYS, a body of ruffians in Ireland, so called on account of their wearing linen frocks over their coats. They committed dreadful outrages in 1761, but were suppressed by a military force, and their ringleaders executed in 1762. They rose into insurrection again and were suppressed 1766-7. Whiteboys have appeared at various times since, committing the most frightful crimes. The Insurrection Act was passed on their account in 1822.

WHITEFIELD, GEORGE, the founder of the "Calvinistic Methodists," was the son of an innkeeper at Gloucester, where he received his first education. He was admitted a servitor at Oxford in 1732, and became a companion of the Wesleys there, and aided them in establishing Methodism. He parted from them in 1741, on account of their rejection of the doctrine of election. He was the most eloquent preacher of his day. His first sermon was preached in 1736; and he commenced field preaching in 1739. He is said to have delivered 18,000 sermons during his career of 34 years. His followers are termed "The Countess of Huntingdon's Connection," from his having become her chaplain in 1748. There were 109 chapels of this connection in 1851; but many of his followers have joined the Independents. He was born in 1714, and died in 1770. See Tabernacle.

WHITE FRIARS. See Carmelites.

WHITEHALL (London), built by Hubert de Burgh, earl of Kent, before the middle of the 15th century. It afterward devolved, by bequest, to the Black Friars of Holborn, who sold it to the Archbishop of York, whence it received the name of York Place, and continued to be the town residence of the archbishops till purchased by Henry VIII. of Cardinal Wolsey in 1530. At this period it became the residence of the court. Queen Elizabeth, who died at Richmond in 1603, was brought from thence to Whitehall, by water, in a grand procession. It was on this occasion, Camden informs us, that the following quaint panegyric on her majesty was written:

"The queen was brought by water to Whitehall,
At every stroke the oars did tears let fall,
More clung about the barge: fish under water
Wept out their eyes of pearl, and swam blind after.
I think the bargeman might, with easier thighs,
Have rowed her thither in her people's eyes;
For howsoever thus much my thoughts have scanned,
She had come by water, had she come by land."

In 1697, Whitehall was destroyed by an accidental fire, except the banqueting-house, which had been added to the palace of Whitehall by James I., according to a design of Inigo Jones, in 1619. In the front of Whitehall, Charles I. was beheaded, Jan. 30, 1649. George I. converted the hall into a chapel, 1723-4. The exterior of this edifice underwent repair between 1829 and 1833.

WHITE HATS, a party in the Low Countries formed about 1877, against Louis, count of Flanders. The struggle lasted till 1884, when it was settled by Philip, duke of Burgundy.

WHITE HOUSE (Washington), built of freestone, the official residence of the Presidents of the United States.

WHITE PLAINS, BATTLE OF, between the Americans under Washington, and the British under Howe, was fought, in a series of skirmishes, on the 28th of October, 1776. The Americans were driven from their position, and took post upon the hills a few miles farther north. The British general did not think it prudent to pursue. The loss of the belligerents was nearly equal—about 300 each.

WHITE SHEEP, a name given to the Turcomans who conquered Persia about 1468; and persecuted the Shiites, but were expelled by Ismail, who founded the Sophi dynasty in 1501.

WHITE TOWER, the keep or citadel in the Tower of London, a large square, irregular building, erected in 1070 by Gundulph, bishop of Rochester. It measures 116 feet by 96, and is 92 feet in height; the walls, which are 11 feet thick, having a winding staircase continued along two of the sides, like that in Dover Castle. It contains the sea armory and the volunteer army—the latter for 30,000 men. Within this tower is the ancient chapel of St. John, originally used by the English monarchs. The turret of the N.E. angle, the highest of the four by which the White Tower is surmounted, was used for astronomical purposes by Flamsteed previously to the erection of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

WHITSUNTIDE. The festival appointed to commemorate the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles: the newly-baptized persons or catechumens used to wear white garments on Whitsunday. This feast is movable, being always exactly seven weeks after Easter. Rogation Week (which see) is the week before Whitsunday. Whitsunday in 1866, May 20; in 1867, June 9; in 1868, May 31.

WHITTINGTON'S CHARITIES. Sir Richard Whittington, a citizen and mercer of London, served the office of lord mayor three times, the last time in 1419. Many stories connected with his name are destitute of truth. His munificent charities are little known and seldom praised. He founded his college, dedicated to the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, in 1424; and his almshouses in 1429: the latter stand on Highgate Hill, near the supposed site of the famous stone which commemorated the legend of his return to London, after leaving it in despair, the church bells chiming him back by the promise of his future greatness.

WICKLIFFITES, the followers of John Wickliffe (born 1324), a professor of divinity in the University of Oxford, and rector of Lutterworth in Leicestershire. He was the father of the Reformation of the English Church from popery, being among the first who opposed the authority of the pope, transubstantiation, the celibacy of the clergy, etc. Wickliffe was protected by John of Gaunt, Edward's son and Richard's uncle, yet virulently persecuted by the Church, and rescued from martyrdom by a paralytic attack, which caused his death, December 31, 1384, in his 60th year. The Council of Constance, in 1428, decreed his bones to be disinterred and burnt, which was done by the Bishop of Lincoln, and his dust was cast into the River Swift. Wickliffe's English version of the Bible was commenced in 1380: an edition of it was printed at Oxford in 1850.

WIDOWS. The Jewish law required a man's brother to marry his widow (1490 B.C.). For the burning of widows in India, see Suttees. Among the numerous associations in London for the relief of widows are, one for the widows of musicians, instituted in 1738; one for widows of naval men, founded in 1739; one for widows of medical men, 1788; a law society, for widows of professional gentlemen, 1817; and a society for artists' widows, 1827.—WIDOWERS were taxed in England as follows: a duke, £12 10s.; lower peers, smaller sums; a common person, 1s., 7 Will. III., 1695.

WIG. See Peruke.

WIGAN (Lancashire). In the Civil War, the king's troops, commanded by the Earl of Derby, were defeated and driven out of the town in 1643 by the Parliamentary forces, under Sir John Smeaton. The earl was again defeated by Colonel Ashton, who razed the fortifications of Wigan to the ground, same year; and once more by a greatly superior force, commanded by Colonel Lilburne, 1651. In this last engagement, Sir Thomas Tildersley, an ardent Royalist, was slain; a pillar was erected to his memory in 1679.

WIGHT, ISLE OF, the Roman Vecla or Vectis, was conquered by Vespasian in the reign of Claudius. It was conquered by the Saxons, under Cerdic, about 530; in 787 by the Danes; and in 1001, when they held it for several years. It was taken by the French, July 13, 1377, and has several times suffered from invasions by that people. In the year 1442, Henry VI. alienated the Isle of Wight to Henry de Beauchamp, first premier Earl of England and then Duke of Warwick, with a precedence of all other dukes but Norfolk, and lastly crowned him King of the Isle of Wight with his own hands; but this earl dying without heirs male, his regal title died with him, and the lordship of the isle returned to the crown. Charles I., after his flight from Hampton Court, was a prisoner in Carisbrook Castle in 1647. In the time of Charles II., timber was so plentiful that it is said a squirrel might have traveled on the tops of the trees for many leagues together; but it is now much reduced, through supplying the dock-yards for the British navy. The queen has a marine residence here called Osborne House.

WILKES'S NUMBER 45, from the 45th number of the North Briton, published by Mr. Wilkes, an alderman of London. He commenced a paper warfare against the Earl of Bute and his administration, and in this number, printed April 23, 1763, made so free a use of royalty itself that a general warrant was issued against him by the Earl of Halifax, then Secretary of State, and he was committed to the Tower, April 30. His warfare not only deprived him of liberty, but exposed him to two duels; yet he obtained £4000 damages and full costs of suit for the illegal seizure of his papers. He was afterward condemned for libel, but was, however, elected a fifth time M.P. for Middlesex in Oct., 1774, and served the office of lord mayor. He was elected chamberlain of London in 1779, and died in 1797. See North Briton, and also Warrants, General.

WILLS AND TESTAMENTS are of very high antiquity. See Genesis xviii. Solon introduced them at Athens, 575 B.C. There are many regulations respecting wills in the Koran. Trebatius Testa, the civilian, was the first person who introduced codicils to wills at Rome, 31 B.C. The power of bequeathing lands by the last will and testament of the owner was confirmed to English subjects 1 Henry I., 1100; but with great restrictions and limitations respecting the feudal system, which were taken off by the statute of 32 Henry VIII., 1541.—Blackstone's Commentaries. The first will of a sovereign on record is stated (but in error) to be that of Richard II., 1399; Edward the Confessor made a will, 1066. Various laws have regulated the wills and testaments of British subjects. All previous statutes were repealed by 1 Vict. c. 26, 1837, and the laws with relation to wills thereby amended.* The present PROBATE COURT (which see) was established in 1857. An office for the reception of the wills of living persons was opened in Jan., 1861. See Thellusson's Will.

EXTRACTS FROM THE LAST WILL OF NAPOLEON I., EMPEROR OF FRANCE.†

[He died May 5, 1821, eleven days after he had signed these documents. The original in French occupies about twenty-six pages in Peignot's "Testaments Remarquables," 1829.]

"This day, April 24, 1821, at Longwood, in the Island of St. Helena. This is my testament, or act of my last will: . . .

"I leave to the Count de Montholon 2,000,000 francs, as a proof of my satisfaction for the attentions he has paid to me for these six years, and to indemnify him for the losses which my residence in St. Helena has occasioned him. I leave to the Comte Bertrand 500,000 francs. I leave to Marchand, my first valet-de-chambre, 400,000 francs; the services he has performed for me are those of a friend. I desire that he may marry a widow, sister, or daughter of an officer or soldier of my old guard. To St. Denis, 100,000 francs. To Novarre, 100,000 francs. To Pijeron, 100,000 francs. To Archambaud, 50,000 francs. To Cuvier, 50,000 francs. To Chandelie, idem.

"To the Abbé Vignali, 100,000 francs. I desire that he may build his house near Ponte Novo de Rossino. To the Comte Las Casas, 100,000 francs. To Comte Lavalette, 100,000 francs. To the surgeon in chief, Larrey, 100,000 francs. He is the most virtuous man I have known. To General Brayer, 100,000 francs.

"To General Lefevre Desnouettes, 100,000 francs. To General Drouet, 100,000 francs. To General Cambronne, 100,000 francs. To the children of General Mouton Duvernais, 100,000 francs. To the children of the brave Labédoyère, 100,000 francs. To the children of General Girard, killed at Ligny, 100,000 francs. To the children of General Chartrant, 100,000 francs. To the children of the virtuous General Travost, 100,000 francs. To General Lallemand, the elder, 100,000 francs. To General Clausel, 100,000 francs. To Costa Bastilica, also 100,000 francs. To the Baron de Menevalle, 100,000 francs. To Arnault, author of Marius, 100,000 francs.

"To Colonel Marbot, 100,000 francs: I request him to continue to write for the defense and glory of the French armies, and to confound the calumniators and the apostates. To the Baron Bignon, 100,000 francs: I request him to write the history of French Diplomacy from 1792 to 1815. To Poggi de Talaro, 100,000 francs. To the Surgeon Emmery, 100,000 francs.

"These sums shall be taken from the six millions which I deposited on leaving Paris in 1815, and from the interest at the rate of 5 per cent. since July, 1815, the account of which shall be adjusted with the bankers by the Counts Montholon and Bertrand, and by Marchand.

"These legacies, in case of death, shall be paid to the widows and children, and in their default, shall revert to the capital. I institute the Counts Montholon, Bertrand, and Marchand my testamentary executors. This present testament, written entirely by my own hand, is signed and sealed with my arms.

"NAPOLEON.

"April 24, 1821, Longwood."

The following are part of the eight Codicils to the preceding will of the emperor:

"On the liquidation of my civil list of Italy—such as money, jewels, plate, linen, coffers, caskets of which the viceroy is the depositary, and which belong to me, I dispose of two millions, which I leave to my most faithful servants. I hope that without their showing any cause, my son Eugene Napoleon will discharge them faithfully. He can not forget the forty millions which I have given him in Italy, or by the right (parage) of his mother's inheritance.

"From the funds remitted in gold to the Empress Maria-Louisa, my very dear and well-beloved spouse, at Orleans, in 1814, there remain due to me two millions, which I dispose of by the present codicil, in order to recompense my most faithful servants, whom I beside recommend to the protection of my dear Maria-Louisa. I leave 200,000 francs to Count Montholon, 100,000 francs of which he shall pay into the chest of the treasurer (Las Casas) for the same purpose as the above, to be employed according to my depositions in legacies of conscience.

"10,000 francs to the sub-officer Cantillon, who has undergone a prosecution, being accused of a desire to assassinate Lord Wellington, of which he has been declared innocent. Cantillon had as much right to assassinate that oligarch as the latter had to send me to perish on the rock of St. Helena, etc., etc., etc.

"LETTER TO M. LAFITTE.

"MONSIEUR LAFITTE,—I remitted to you in 1815, at the moment of my departure from Paris, a sum of nearly six millions, for which you gave me a double receipt. I have canceled one of these receipts, and I have charged Comte de Montholon to present to you the other receipt, in order that you may, after my death, deliver to him the said sum, with interest at the rate of five per cent. from the 1st of July, 1815, deducting the payments with which you have been charged in virtue of my order. I have also remitted to you a box containing my medallion. I beg you will deliver it to Comte Montholon.

"This letter having no other object, I pray God, Monsieur Lafitte, that he may have you in his holy and worthy keeping. NAPOLEON.

"Longwood, in the Island of St. Helena, April 25, 1821."

WILMINGTON ADMINISTRATION. Feb., 1742.

Earl of Wilmington, First Lord of the Treasury.

Lord Hardwicke, Lord Chancellor.

Earl of Harrington, President of the Council.

Earl Gower, Lord Privy Seal.

Mr. Sandys, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Lord Carteret and the Duke of Newcastle, Secretaries of State.

Earl of Winchelsea, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Duke of Argyll, Commander of the Forces and Master General of the Ordnance.

Mr. Henry Pelham, Paymaster of the Forces.

With several of the household lords.

[On Lord Wilmington's death, July 26, 1743, Mr. Pelham became prime minister; and in Nov., 1744, he formed the "Broad-bottom" administration. See Pelham.]

* By this act the testator must be above 21; not a lunatic or idiot, not deaf and dumb, not drunk at the time of signing, not an outlawed or unparoled felon. All kinds of property may be devised. The will must be written legibly and intelligibly, and signed by the testator, or by his direction, in the presence of two or more witnesses, who also must sign. A married woman may bequeath only her pin-money or separate maintenance, without the consent of her husband.

† These documents, dated from April 15-24, which had been deposited since 1821 in England, have been, at the request of the French government, given up to the authorities at Paris, to be deposited among the archives of that capital.

WILSON'S CREEK (Missouri), BATTLE OF, fought August 10, 1861. Lyon, after his success at Booneville (June 17), advanced to Springfield; but with 5000 men he could not expect to hold his position against the enemy, who numbered about 20,000; and he could obtain no re-enforcements from Fremont at St. Louis. He determined, therefore, to retreat, but, before doing so, advanced to Wilson's Springs on the 9th of August. It was the intention of each army to attack the other on the morning of the 10th. Lyon anticipated the Confederate commanders, and a battle followed, which, next to that of Bull Run, was the severest engagement of 1861. Lyon and Sigel led the two main columns of attack. The Confederates, who had an overwhelming advantage in numbers, were commanded by Price and M'Culloch. Lyon was killed while leading a charge. Sturgis succeeded to the command of Lyon's column, and maintained the battle for six hours by means of his superior artillery, when he ordered a retreat. Sigel's column was routed. The battle secured the leisurely retreat of the National troops from Springfield.

WINCHESTER (Hampshire), a most ancient city, whose erection may reasonably be ascribed to the Celtic Britons, though the alleged date of its foundation, 892 B.C., is manifestly unworthy of attention. It became the capital of the West Saxon kingdom under Cerdic, 530 A.D., was the residence of Alfred, 879-901; and under the rule of Egbert was the metropolis of England. In the reign of William I., though Winchester was still a royal residence, London began to rival it, and acquire the pre-eminence; and the destruction of religious houses by Henry VIII. almost ruined it. Several kings resided at Winchester, and many Parliaments were held there. Memorials of its ancient superiority exist in the national denomination of measures of quantity, as Winchester ell, Winchester bushel, etc., the use of which has but recently been replaced by imperial measures. The bishopric is of great antiquity. The cathedral church was first founded and endowed by Kingin, or Keneigilus, the first Christian king of the West Saxons. The church first built becoming ruinous, the present fabric was begun by Walkin, the 34th bishop, 1073, but not finished till the time of William of Wykeham, who founded the college about 1373. The church was first dedicated to St. Amphibalus, then to St. Peter, and afterward to St. Swithin, once bishop here. St. Birine was the first bishop of the West Saxons, 635. The see is valued in the king's books at £2793 4s. 2d. annually. Present income, £10,500.

RECENT BISHOPS OF WINCHESTER, Prelates of the Order of the Garter.

1781. Brownlow North, died July 12, 1820.
1820. George Pretyman Tomline, died 1827.
1827. Charles Richard Sumner (PRESENT bishop, 1865).

WINCHESTER (Virginia). This town is situated in the Shenandoah Valley. During the American Civil War there were several conflicts here of greater or less importance. Here, on March 23, 1862, General Shields repulsed "Stonewall" Jackson. Jackson attacked General Banks at this place (May 25) and forced him to retreat. General Milroy held the town with 7000 men at the time of Lee's invasion (June, 1863). On the approach of the Confederates he retreated (June 15), and a column of the enemy gaining his rear, while another attacked in front, he was defeated, his whole force dispersed, and 2300 captured. In the autumn of 1864, General Sheridan, commanding the Army of the Upper Potomac, held a strong position near the railroad from Harper's Ferry toward Winchester. The Confederate General Early commanded a large force in the valley of the Shenandoah, and on the 18th of September was posted on the Opequan Creek near Winchester. Sheridan gained the rear of the Confederates, and on the 19th defeated them, capturing 4500 prisoners. On the Confederate side Generals Rodes and Gordon were killed; on the National, General D. A. Russell was killed, and Generals Upton, McIntosh, and Chapman were wounded. The National loss was over 3000. The Confederate loss in killed and wounded was 3500.

WINDING-UP ACTS (to facilitate the winding up the affairs of joint-stock companies which are unable to meet their engagements) were passed in 1848, 1857, and 1862.

WINDMILLS are of great antiquity, and some writers state them to be of Roman invention; but certainly we are indebted for the windmill to the Saracens. They are said to have been originally introduced into Europe by the Knights of St. John, who took the hint from what they had seen in the crusades.—Baker.

Windmills were first known in Spain, France, and Germany, in 1299.—Anderson. Wind sawmills were invented by a Dutchman in 1633, when one was erected near the Strand, in London.

WINDOWS. See Glass. There were windows in Pompeii, A.D. 79, as is evident from its ruins. It is certain that windows of some kind were glazed so early as the 3d century, if not before, though the fashion was not introduced until it was done by Bennet, 633. Windows of glass were used in private houses, but the glass was imported, 1177.—Anderson. In England, in 1851, about 6000 houses had fifty windows and upward; in each; about 275,000 had ten windows and upward; and 725,000 had seven windows, or less than seven.

Window-tax first enacted in order to defray the expense of and deficiency in the recoinage of gold.....1695
The tax increased, Feb. 5, 1746-7; again in 1778; and again on the commutation tax for tea, Oct. 1, 1784

The tax again increased in.....1797, 1802, and 1808
Reduced.....1823
The revenue derived from windows was in 1840 about a million and a quarter sterling; and in 1850 (to April 5), £1,832,684.
The tax repealed by act 14 & 15 Vict., c. 36 (which act imposed a duty upon inhabited houses in lieu thereof).....July 24, 1851

WINDSOR CASTLE (Berkshire),* a residence of the British sovereigns, begun by William the Conqueror, and enlarged by Henry I. about 1110. Edward III., who was born here, caused the old building, with the exception of three towers at the west end, to be taken down, and re-erected the whole castle, under the direction of William of Wykeham, 1356, and built St. George's Chapel. He assessed every county in England to send him workmen. James I. of Scotland was imprisoned here, 1406-23. Several additions were made by Henry VIII. Elizabeth made the grand north terrace; and Charles II. repaired and beautified it, 1680.—Camden; Mortimer. The chapel was repaired and opened, Oct., 1790. The castle was repaired and enlarged, 1824-8; and George IV. took possession of it, Dec. 8, 1828. Our sovereigns have here entertained many royal personages, as the Emperor and Empress of the French, in April, 1855. A serious fire occurred at the castle, in the Prince of Wales's tower, owing to some defect in the heating apparatus, March 19, 1853.

WINE. "Noah planted a vineyard, and drank of the wine," 2347 B.C. (Gen. ix., 20). See Vine. Ching-Noung, emperor of China, is said to have made rice wine, 1998 B.C. The art of making wine is said to have been brought from India by Bacchus. Christ changed water into wine at the marriage in Cana of Galilee, A.D. 30.—John ii., 3, 10. Wine was sold in England by apothecaries as a cordial in 1300, and so continued for some time after, although there is mention of "wine for the king" so early as 1249. In 1400 the price was twelve shillings the pipe. A hundred and fifty butts and pipes condemned, for being adulterated, to be staved and emptied into the channels of the streets, by Rainwell, mayor of London, 1427.—Stow's Chron. The first importation of claret wine into Ireland was on June 17, 1490. The first act for licensing sellers of wine in England passed April 25, 1661. Wine duties to be 2s. 9d. per gallon on Cape wine, and 5s. 6d. on all other wines, 1831. In 1856, the customs duties on wines produced £2,073,694; in 1858, £1,721,742; in 1859, £1,982,302; in 1865, £1,212,971. By the French treaty of commerce about 1860, the duty on wines was much reduced. Wine licenses are granted to refreshment houses by an act passed in 1860.

* Windsor Forest, situated to the south and west of the town of Windsor, was formerly 120 miles in circumference: in 1607 it was 77½ miles round, but it has since been reduced in its bounds to about 56 miles. It was surveyed in 1789, and found to contain 59,690 acres. Virginia Water and the plantations about it were taken out of the forest. The marshes were drained and the trees planted by William, duke of Cumberland, about 1746; and much was done by George IV., who often resided at the lodge. On the south side is Windsor Great Park, which was fourteen miles in circumference, but it has been much enlarged by the Inclosure Act; it contains about 3800 acres. The Little Park, on the north and east sides of the castle, contains about 500 acres. The gardens are elegant, and have been considerably improved by the addition of the house and gardens of the Duke of St. Alban's, purchased by the crown.

WINE IN THE UNITED STATES. Grape is extensively cultivated in New York, Ohio, and California, and less extensively in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kentucky, and North and South Carolina. The cultivation of native grapes began in Ohio as early as 1796. The value of the wine made from grapes grown in America was estimated for 1867 at about $12,000,000.

WINTER. See Frosts.

WIRE. The invention of drawing wire* is ascribed to Rodolph of Nuremberg, about 1410. Mills for this purpose were first set up at Nuremberg in 1563. The first wire-mill in England was erected at Mortlake in 1663.—Mortimer.

WIRTEMBERG. See Wärtenberg.

WISCONSIN, a N.W. state of N. America, was organized as a Territory in 1836, and received into the Union May 29, 1848.

WITCHCRAFT. The punishment of witchcraft was commanded in the Jewish law (Exodus xxii., 18) 1491 B.C., "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Saul, after banishing or condemning witchcraft, incurred the wrath of God by consulting the witch of Endor, 1056 B.C. (1 Sam. xxviii.). Bishop Hutchinson's important historical "Essay on Witchcraft" was published in 1718. The Church of Rome subjected persons suspected of the crime to the most cruel tortures; and Pope Innocent VIII. issued a bull against witchcraft in 1484. Thousands of victims, often innocent, were burned alive, while others were killed by the tests applied.

Joan of Arc was burnt at Rheims as a witch, May 30, 1431.

About five hundred witches were burnt in Geneva in three months, 1515.

One thousand were burnt in the diocese of Como in a year, about 1524.

An incredible number in France, about 1520, when one sorcerer confessed to having 1200 associates.

Nine hundred were burnt in Lorraine between 1550 and 1595.

One hundred and fifty-seven were burnt at Wurtzburg between 1627 and 1629, old and young, clerical, learned, and ignorant.

At Lindheim, thirty were burnt in four years out of a population of 600; and more than 100,000 perished, mostly by the flames, in Germany.

Grandier, the parish priest at London, was burnt on a charge of having bewitched a whole convent of nuns, 1634.

In Bretagne, twenty poor women were put to death as witches, 1654.

Disturbances commenced on charges of witchcraft in America, at Massachusetts, 1648-9; and persecutions raged dreadfully in Pennsylvania in 1683.

At Salem, in New England, nineteen persons were hanged (by the Puritans) for witchcraft, eight more were condemned, and fifty confessed themselves to be witches and were pardoned, 1692.

Maria Renata was burnt at Wurtzburg in 1749.

At Kalisk, in Poland, nine old women were charged with having bewitched and rendered unfruitful the lands belonging to that palatinate, and were burnt, Jan. 17, 1775.

Five women were condemned to death by the Brahmins, at Patna, for sorcery, and executed, Dec. 15, 1802.

WITCHCRAFT IN ENGLAND.

Severe laws were in force against them in these countries in former times, by which death was the punishment, and thousands of persons suffered both by the public executioner and the hands of the people.

A statute was enacted declaring all witchcraft and sorcery to be felony without benefit of clergy, 33 Hen. VIII., 1541. Again, 5 Eliz., 1562, and 1 James, 1603.

The 73d canon of the Church prohibits the clergy from casting out devils, 1603.

Barrington estimates the judicial murders for witchcraft in England in 200 years at 30,000.

Matthew Hopkins, the "witch-finder," causes the judicial murder of about 100 persons in Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk, 1645-7.

* The astonishing ductility, which is one of the distinguishing qualities of gold, is no way more conspicuous than in gilt wire. A cylinder of 48 ounces of silver, covered with a coat of gold weighing only one ounce, is usually drawn into a wire, two yards of which only weigh one grain; so that 96 yards of the wire weigh no more than 48 grains, and one single grain of gold covers the whole 96 yards; and the thousandth part of a grain is above one eighth of an inch long.—Halley. Eight grains of gold, covering a cylinder of silver, are commonly drawn into a wire 13,000 feet long; yet so perfectly does it cover the silver, that even a microscope does not discover any appearance of the silver underneath.—Boyle.

Sir Matthew Hale burnt two persons for witchcraft in 1664.

Northamptonshire and Huntingdon preserved the superstition about witchcraft later than any other counties.

Seventeen or eighteen persons burnt at St. Osyth's, in Essex, about 1676.

Two pretended witches were executed at Northampton in 1705, and five others seven years afterward.

In 1716, Mrs. Hicks, and her daughter, aged nine, were hanged at Huntingdon.

In Scotland, thousands of persons were burnt in the period of about a hundred years. Among the victims were persons of the highest rank, while all orders in the state concurred. James I. even caused a whole assize to be prosecuted for an acquittal. The king published his Dæmonologie in Edinburgh, 1597. The last sufferer in Scotland was at Dornach in 1722.

The laws against witchcraft had lain dormant for many years, when an ignorant person, attempting to revive them, by finding a bill against a poor old woman in Surrey for the practice of witchcraft, they were repealed, 16 Geo. II., 1736.

Credulity in witchcraft still abounds in the country districts of England. On Sept. 4, 1863, a poor old paralyzed Frenchman died in consequence of having been ducked as a wizard at Castle Hedingham, Essex.

WITCHCRAFT, SALEM. A curious chapter in the history of popular delusions is the record of that which is known in American history as Salem Witchcraft. The people of Massachusetts, from the rulers to the most humble, generally believed in witchcraft. It had taken strong hold upon their feelings, and in the early spring of 1692 excitement suddenly broke out at Danver (part of Salem), Massachusetts, and spread like an epidemic. It commenced in the family of the parish minister. His niece or daughter acted strangely, and an old Indian servant woman was accused of having bewitched her. Fasting and prayer were resorted to to break the "spell." The malady increased. The alarm spread over the whole community, and the idea seized the colonists that evil spirits, having ministering servants among them, overshadowed the land. Old and ill-favored women were suspected and accused of practicing sorcery. Even the lady of Governor Phipps did not escape suspicion. Many excellent persons, suspected, were imprisoned, and Mr. Burroughs, a minister, was executed. Men of strong minds and scholarly attainments, were thoroughly deluded. For six months the dreadful delusion prevailed, and during that time 20 persons suffered death, 55 were tortured or frightened into a confession of witchcraft, and when a special court was convened in October, 1692, no less than 150 accused persons were in prison. A sudden reaction took place, and many of the accusers shrunk abashed from the public gaze.

WITENA-MOT, or WITENA-GE-MOT, the assembling of the wise men, the great council of the Anglo-Saxons. A witena-mot was called in Winchester by Egbert, 800, and in London, 823, to consult on the proper means to repel the Danes. See Parliament.

WITEPSK (in Russia, where a battle was fought between the French under Marshal Victor, duke of Belluno, and the Russians, commanded by General Wittgenstein. The French were defeated after a desperate engagement, with the loss of 3000 men, Nov. 14, 1812).

WITNESSES. The evidence of two witnesses required to attain for high treason, 25 Edw. III., 1352. In civil actions between party and party, if a man be subpoenaed as a witness on a trial, he must appear in court on pain of £100 to be forfeited to the king, and £10, together with damages equivalent to the loss sustained by the want of his evidence to the party aggrieved. Lord Ellenborough ruled that no witness is obliged to answer questions which may tend to degrade himself, Dec. 10, 1802. New act relating to the examination of witnesses passed 13 Geo. III., 1773. Act to enable courts of law to order the examination of witnesses upon interrogations and otherwise, 1 Will. IV., March 30, 1831.

WIVES. See Marriage. By the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, passed in 1857, the condition of married women has been much benefited. When ill used they can obtain a divorce or judicial separation; and while in the latter state, any property they may acquire is secured to them personally, as if unmarried. By another act, passed in 1857, they are enabled to dispose of reversionary interests in personal property or estates.

WIVES' POISON, or WATER TOFANO. See Poisoning.

WOLVES were once very numerous in England. Their heads were demanded as a tribute, particularly 300 yearly from Wales, by King Edgar, 961, by which step they were said to be totally destroyed.—Carte. Edward I. issued his mandate for the destruction of wolves in several counties of England, 1289. Ireland was infested by wolves for many centuries after their extirpation in England; for there are accounts of some being found there so late as 1710, when the last presentment for killing wolves was made in the county of Cork. Wolves still infest France, in which kingdom 334 wolves and cubs were killed in 1828-9.

WONDERS OF THE WORLD. 1. The pyramids of Egypt. 2. The mausoleum or tomb built for Mausolus, king of Caria, by Artemisia, his queen. 3. The temple of Diana, at Ephesus. 4. The walls and hanging gardens of the city of Babylon. 5. The vast brazen image of the sun at Rhodes, called the Colossus. 6. The ivory and gold statue of Jupiter Olympus. 7. The pharos or watch-tower built by Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt. See separate articles.

WOOD-CUTS. See Engraving on Wood.

WOOD'S HALFPENCE, for circulation in Ireland and America, were coined by virtue of a patent passed 1722-3. Against this project, Dr. Jonathan Swift, by his Draper's Letters, raised such a spirit against Wood that he was effectually banished the kingdom. The halfpence were assayed in England by Sir Isaac Newton, and proved to be genuine, in 1724.

WOODEN PAVEMENT (expensive and perishable) seemed at one time likely to supersede stone in the principal thoroughfares of London. A wooden pavement was laid down at Whitehall in 1839, and in Oxford Street, the Strand, and other streets. It was soon taken up as inefficient.

WOODSTOCK (Oxfordshire) In Woodstock, now Blenheim Park, originally stood a royal palace, in which King Ethelred held a Parliament, and Alfred the Great translated Boetius de Consolatione Philosophiæ, 888. Henry I. beautified the palace; and here resided Rosamond, mistress of Henry II., 1191. In it were born Edmund, second son of Edward I., 1301, and Edward, eldest son of Edward III., 1330; and here the Princess Elizabeth was confined by her sister Mary, 1554. A splendid mansion, built at the expense of the nation for the Duke of Marlborough, was erected here, to commemorate the victory he obtained at Blenheim in 1704. At that time every trace of the ancient edifice was removed, and two elms were planted on its site.

WOOL. From the earliest times down to the reign of Queen Elizabeth the wool of Great Britain was not only superior to that of Spain, but accounted the finest in the universe; and even in the times of the Romans a manufacture of woolen cloths was established at Winchester for the use of the emperors.—Anderson. In later times, wool was manufactured in England, and is mentioned 1185, but not in any quantity until 1351, when the weaving of it was introduced by John Kempe and other artisans from Flanders. This was the real origin of the now unrivaled manufacture, 6 Edw. III., 1331.—Rymer's Fœdera.

WOOLEN CLOTH. Woollen cloths were made an article of commerce in the time of Julius Cæsar, and are familiarly alluded to by him.

WOOL-COMBERS in several parts of England have a procession on Feb. 3, in commemoration of Bishop Blaize, who is reported to have discovered their art. He is said to have visited England; and St. Blaize, a village in Cornwall, is celebrated for having been his landing-place. He was Bishop of Sebastia, in Armenia, and suffered martyrdom in the Diocletian persecution, 259.

WOOLSACK, the seat of the lord high chancellor of England in the House of Lords, is so called from its being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. Wool was the staple commodity of England in the reign of Edward III., when the woolsack first came into use.

WOOLWICH (Kent), the most ancient military and naval arsenal in England, and celebrated for its royal dock-yard, where men-of-war have been built as early as the reign of Henry VIII., 1512, when the Harry Grace de Dieu was constructed. Here she also was burnt in 1552. The royal arsenal was formed about 1720, on the site of a rabbit-warren; it contains vast magazines of great guns, mortars, bombs, powder, and other warlike stores; a foundry, with several furnaces, for casting ordnance; and a laboratory, where fire-works, cartridges, grenades, etc., are made for the public service. The Royal Military Academy was erected in the royal arsenal, but the institution was not completely formed until 19th Geo. II., 1745. The arsenal, store-houses, etc., burnt, to the value of £200,000, May 20, 1802. Another great fire occurred June 30, 1805. Fatal explosion of gunpowder, Jan. 20, 1813. The hemp-store burnt down, July 8, 1813. Another explosion by gunpowder, June 16, 1814. About 10,000 persons are now employed in Woolwich Arsenal.

WORCESTER was successively an important Welsh, Roman, and Saxon town. It was burnt by the Danes 1041, for resisting the tribute called Danegelt. William I. built a castle 1090. The city was frequently taken and retaken during the Civil Wars of the Middle Ages.—The BISHOPRIC was founded by Ethelred, king of the Mercians, 680, and taken from the see of Lichfield, of which it composed a part. The married priests of the cathedral were displaced, and monks settled in their stead, 964. The church was rebuilt by Wolstan, 25th bishop, 1030. The see has yielded to the Church of Rome four saints, and to the English nation five lord chancellors and three lord treasurers. It is valued in the king's books at £1049 16s. 3½d. per annum. Present income, £5000.

WORCESTER, BATTLE OF, Sept. 3, 1651, when the Scots army which came to England to reinstate Charles II. was defeated by Cromwell, who called it his crowning mercy. Charles with difficulty escaped to France. More than 2000 of the Royalists were slain, and of 8000 prisoners most were sold as slaves to the American colonists.

WORKING-MEN'S CLUBS may be considered to have begun with the Working Men's Mutual Improvement and Recreation Society, established in Lancaster by the instrumentality of the Rev. H. Solis, in 1860. The Westminster Working Men's Club, in Duck Lane, originated with Miss Adeline Cooper, and was opened in Dec., 1860. The Working Men's Club and Institute Union was established by Lord Brougham and others, June 4, 1862.

WORKING-MEN'S COLLEGES. The first was established in Sheffield by working men. The second in London, by the Rev. Professor Frederick D. Maurice, as principal, in Oct., 1854; a third in Cambridge, and, in 1855, a fourth at Oxford; all wholly for the working classes, and undertaking to impart such knowledge as each man feels he is most in want of. The colleges engage to find a teacher wherever 10 or 12 members agree to form a class, and also to have lectures given. There were eleven classes at the one in London in 1856; Mr. Ruskin gave lessons in drawing. These colleges have been found to be self supporting.

WORMS, a city on the Rhine, in Hesse-Darmstadt. Here Charlemagne resided in 806 B.C. Several imperial diets have been held at Worms, where was held the imperial diet before which Martin Luther was summoned, April 4, 1521, and by which he was proscribed. Luther was met by 2000 persons on foot and on horseback, at the distance of a league from Worms. Such was his conviction of the justice of his cause, that when Spalatin sent a messenger to warn him of his danger, he answered, "If there were as many devils in Worms as there are tiles upon the roofs of its houses, I would go on." Before the emperor, the Archduke Ferdinand, six electors, twenty-four dukes, seven margraves, thirty bishops and prelates, and many princes, counts, lords, and ambassadors, Luther appeared, April 17th, in the imperial diet, acknowledged all his writings and opinions, and left Worms in fact a conqueror. Yet, to save his life, he had to remain in seclusion, under the protection of the Elector of Saxony, for about a year.

WORSHIP. The first worship mentioned is that of Abel, 3872 B.C., Gen. iv. "Men began to call on the name of the Lord," 3769 B.C., Gen. iv. The Jewish order of worship was set up by Moses 1490 B.C. Solomon consecrated the Temple, 1004 B.C. To the corruptions of the simple worship of the patriarchs all the Egyptian and Greek idolatries owed their origin. Athotes, son of Menes, king of Upper Egypt, is supposed to be the Copt of the Egyptians, and the Tot, or Hermes, of the Greeks, the Mercury of the Latins, and the Teutates of the Celts or Gauls, 2112 B.C.—Usher.

WORSHIP IN ENGLAND. The Druids were the priests here at the invasion of the Romans (55 B.C.), who eventually introduced Christianity, which was almost extirpated by the victorious Saxons (455-820), who were pagans. The Roman Catholic form of Christianity was introduced by Augustine, 596, and continued till the Reformation, which see.

WORSTED, spun wool, obtained its name from having been first spun at a town called Worsted, in Norfolk, in which the inventor lived, and where manufactures of worsted are still extensively carried on, 14 Edw. III., 1340.—Anderson. "A Worsteds-stocking Knave" is a term of reproach or contempt used by Shakespeare.

WOUNDING. Malicious wounding of another was adjudged death by the English statutes. The Coventry Act was passed in 1671. See Coventry Act. By Lord Ellenborough's act, persons who stab or cut with intent to murder, maim, or disfigure another, were declared guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. Those guilty of maliciously shooting at another in any dwelling-house or other place are also punishable under the same statute in the same degree, 43 Geo. III., 1802. This offense is met by some later statutes, particularly the act for consolidating and amending the acts relating to offenses against the person, 9 Geo. IV., June, 1828. This last act is extended to Ireland by 10 Geo. IV., 1829. An act for the prevention of maliciously shooting, stabbing, etc., in Scotland, 6 Geo. IV., 1825; amended by 10 Geo. IV., June 4, 1829. 16 and 17 Vict., c. 30, 1853, was passed for the prevention and punishment of assaults on women and children.

WRECKS. The loss of merchant and other ships by wreck upon lee-shores, coasts, and disasters in the open sea, was estimated at Lloyd's, in 1800, to be about an average of 265 ships a year. In 1830, it appeared by Lloyd's Lists that 677 British vessels were totally lost, under various circumstances, in that year.

British vessels wrecked in 1848 were, sailing vessels, 501, steamers 13; tonnage, 96,920.

In 1851 there were wrecked 611 vessels, of which number 11 were steamers; the tonnage of the whole being 111,976 tons.

The year 1852-3, particularly the winter months (Dec. and Jan.), was very remarkable for the number of dreadful shipwrecks and fires at sea; but a few of them are recorded.

Many vessels were lost in the great storms Oct. 25, 26, 1859, May 28, 1861, Oct. 19, 20, 1861, and Nov. 13, 14, 1862.

WRITING. Pictures were undoubtedly the first essay toward writing. The most ancient remains of writing which have been transmitted to us are upon hard substances, such as stones and metals, used by the ancients for edicts and matters of public notoriety. Athotes, or Hermes, is said to have written a history of the Egyptians, and to have been the author of the hieroglyphics, 2112 B.C.—Usher. Writing is said to have been taught to the Latins by Europa, daughter of Agenor, king of Phœnicia, 1494 B.C.—Thucydides. Cadmus, the founder of Cadmea, 1493 B.C., brought the Phœnician letters into Greece.—Vossius. The commandments were written on two tables of stone, 1491 B.C.—Usher. The Greeks and Romans used waxed table-books, and continued the use of them long after papyrus was known.* See Papyrus, Parchment Paper. Astle's "History of Writing" was first published in 1784.

WROXETER, in Shropshire, the Roman city Uriconium. Roman inscriptions, ruins, seals, and coins were found here in 1752. Some new discoveries having been made, a committee for farther investigation met at Shrewsbury on Nov. 11, 1858. Excavations were commenced in Feb., 1859, which were continued till May. Large portions of the old town were discovered; also specimens of glass and pottery, personal ornaments and toys, household utensils and implements of trade, cinerary urns, and bones of man and of the smaller animals. A committee was formed in London in Aug., 1859, with a view of continuing these investigations, which were resumed in 1861, through the liberality of Beriah Botfield, M.P.

WÜRTEMBERG, originally part of Suabia, was made a county in 1297, and a duchy in 1495. The dukes were Protestants until 1772, when the reigning prince became a Roman Catholic. Würtemberg has been repeatedly traversed by hostile armies, particularly since the revolution of France. Moreau made his celebrated retreat, Oct. 23, 1796. The political constitution is dated Sept. 25, 1819. Population of Würtemberg in Dec., 1861, 1,720,708; of Stuttgart, the capital, 51,655.

DUKES.

1495. Eberhard I.
1496. Eberhard II.
1498. Ulrich; deprived of his states by the Emperor Charles V.; recovers them in 1534.
1550. Christopher the Pacific.
1563. Louis.
1593. Frederick I.
1608. John Frederick; joined the Protestants in the Thirty Years' War.
1628. Eberhard Louis.
1674. William Louis.
1677. Eberhard Louis; served under William III. in Ireland, and with the English armies on the Continent.
1733. Charles Alexander.
1737. Charles Eugene.
1793. Louis Eugene (joins in the war against France).
1795. Frederick Eugene makes peace with France, 1796.
1797. Frederick II. marries the princess royal of England, May 18; made Elector of Germany, 1803; acquired additional territories, and the title of king, in 1805.

KINGS.

1805. Frederick I. supplies a contingent to Napoleon's Russian army, yet joined the Allies at Leipsic in 1813. Died in 1816.
1816. William I., Oct. 30; son (born Sept. 27, 1781). He abolished serfdom in 1818; instituted representative government in 1819; entered into a concordat with Rome in 1857; was the oldest living sovereign, 1862; died June 25, 1864.
1864. Charles I., son; June 25; born March 6, 1823; married Princess Olga, of Russia.

WURTZBURG, in Bavaria, was formerly a bishopric, and its sovereign was one of the greatest ecclesiastic princes of the empire. It was given as a principality to the Elector of Bavaria in 1803; and by the treaty of Presburg in 1805 was ceded to the Archduke Ferdinand of Tuscany, whose electoral title was transferred from Salzburg to this place. In 1814 this duchy was again transferred to Bavaria in exchange for the Tyrol, and the Archduke Ferdinand was reinstated in his Tuscan dominions. Ministers from the second-rate German states met at Wurtzburg to promote union among them, Nov. 21-27, 1859.

WYATT'S INSURRECTION. See Rebellions, 1554.

WYOMING, MASSACRE OF. A Tory leader named John Butler, at the head of Loyalists and Indians, entered the beautiful Wyoming Valley, in Pennsylvania, at the beginning of July, 1778. Most of the able-bodied men were away with the army. Colonel Zebulon Butler was there, and he rallied what force he could to confront the invaders. They had an engagement a little above Wilkesbarre on the 4th of July. The Americans were driven back, and took refuge in a fort. They then surrendered, with promise of protection; but, before sunset, the Indians, thirsting for blood, spread over the valley, set fire to dwellings, and murdered many of the inhabitants. The valley was made a desolation before midnight.

XANTHICA, a military festival observed by the Macedonians in the month called Xanthicus (our April), instituted about 392 B.C.

XANTHUS, in Lycia, Asia Minor, was besieged by the Romans under Brutus, 42 B.C. After a great struggle, the inhabitants set fire to their city, destroyed their wives and children, and perished. The conqueror wished to spare them, and offered rewards to his soldiers if they brought any of the Xanthians into his presence, but only 150 were saved.—Plutarch.

XENOPHON. See Retreat of the Greeks.

* "I would check the petty vanity of those who slight good penmanship, as below the notice of a scholar, by reminding them that Mr. Fox was distinguished by the clearness and firmness, Mr. Professor Porson by the correctness and elegance, and Sir William Jones by the ease and beauty of the characters they respectively employed."—Dr. Parr.

XERES DE LA FRONTERA (S.W. Spain), the Asta Regia of the Romans, and the seat of the wine trade in Spain, of which the principal wine is that so well known in England as Sherry, an English corruption of Xeres. The British importations of this wine in 1850 reached to 3,826,785 gallons; and in the year ending Jan. 5, 1852, to 3,904,978 gallons. Xeres is a handsome and large town, of great antiquity. At the battle of Xeres, July 19-26, 711, Roderick, the last Gothic sovereign of Spain, was defeated and slain by the Saracens, commanded by Tarik and Muza.

XERXES'S CAMPAIGN. Xerxes crossed the Hellespont by a bridge of boats, and entered Greece in the spring of 480 B.C., with an army which, together with the numerous retinue of servants, eunuchs, and women that attended it, amounted (according to some historians) to 5,283,220 souls. Herodotus states the armament to have consisted of 3000 sail, conveying 1,700,000 foot, besides cavalry and the mariners and attendants of the camp. This multitude was stopped at Thermopylae (which see) by the valor of 300 Spartans under Leonidas, Aug. 7-9, 480 B.C. The fleet of Xerxes was defeated at Artemisium and Salamis, Oct. 20, 480 B.C.; and he hastened back to Persia, leaving behind Mardonius, the best of his generals, with an army of 300,000 men, who was defeated and slain at Plataea, Sept. 22, 479 B.C. Xerxes was assassinated by Artabanus, 465 B.C.

XIMENA (S. Spain), the site of a battle between the Spanish army under the command of General Balbastero, and the French corps commanded by General Regnier, Sept. 10, 1811. The Spaniards defeated their adversaries; the loss was great on both sides.

Y.

YARD. The precise origin of our yard is uncertain. It is, however, likely that the word is derived from the Saxon gyrd, a rod or shoot, or gyrdan, to inclose; being anciently the circumference of the body, until Henry I. decreed that it should be the length of his arm. See Standard Measures.

YARMOUTH, GREAT (Norfolk), was a royal demeuse in the reign of William I., as appears from Domesday Book. It obtained a charter from John, and one from Henry III. In 1348 a plague here carried off 7000 persons; and that terrible disease did much havoc again in 1579 and 1664. The theatre was built in 1778; and Nelson's Pillar, a fluted column 140 feet in height, was erected in 1817. The suspension chain bridge over the River Bure was built by Mr. R. Cory at an expense of about £4000. Owing to the weight of a vast number of persons who assembled on this bridge to witness an exhibition on the water, it suddenly gave way, and seventy-nine lives, mostly those of children, were lost, May 2, 1845. The railway from London to Norwich was opened in 1844.

YEAR. The Egyptians, it is said, were the first who fixed the length of the year.

The Roman year was introduced by Romulus, 753 B.C.; and it was corrected by Numa, 713 B.C., and again by Julius Cæsar, 45 B.C. See Calendar.

The solar or astronomical year was found to comprise 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 51 seconds, and 6 decimals, 265 B.C.

The lunar year, which comprehends twelve lunar months, or 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, was in use among the Chaldeans, Persians, and ancient Jews. Once in every three years was added another lunar month, so as to make the solar and the lunar year nearly agree. But, though the months were lunar, the year was solar; that is, the first month was of thirty days, and the second of twenty-nine, and so alternately; and the month added triennially was called the second Adar. The Jews afterward followed the Roman manner of computation.

The sidereal year, or return to the same star, is 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, 11 seconds.

The Jews dated the beginning of the sacred year in March; the Athenians in June; the Macedonians on Sept. 24; the Christians of Egypt and Ethiopia on Aug. 29 or 30; and the Persians and Armenians on Aug. 11. Nearly all Christian nations now commence the year on Jan. 1.

Charles IX. of France, in 1564, published an arrêt, the last article of which ordered the year for the time to come to be constantly and universally begun, and written on and from January 1.

(See New Style, Platonic Year, Sabbatical Year, French Revolutionary Calendar.)

The beginning of the year has been reckoned from the day celebrating the birth of Christ, Dec. 25th; his circumcision, Jan. 1; his conception, March 25; and his resurrection, Easter.

The English began their year on the 25th of December until the time of William the Conqueror. This prince having been crowned on Jan. 1, gave occasion to the English to begin their year at that time, to make it agree with the then most remarkable period of their history.—Stow. Until the act for altering the style in 1752 (see Style), the year did not legally and generally commence in England until March 25th. In Scotland, at that period, the year began on the 1st of January. This difference caused great practical inconveniences; and January, February, and part of March sometimes bore two dates, as we often find in old records, 1745-1746, or 1745-6, or 1745. Such a reckoning often led to chronological mistakes; for instance, we popularly say "the revolution of 1688," as that event happened in February, 1688, according to the then mode of computation; but if the year were held to begin, as it does now, on the 1st of January, it would be the revolution of 1689.

YEAR OF OUR LORD. See Anno Domini.

YEAR OF THE REIGN. From the time of William the Conqueror, 1066, the year of the sovereign's reign has been given to all public instruments. The king's patents, charters, proclamations, and all acts of Parliament have since then been generally so dated. The same manner of dating is used in most of the European states for all similar documents and records. See List of Kings under England, p. 187.

YEAR AND A DAY. A space of time in law, that in many cases establishes and fixes a right, as in an estray, on proclamation being made, if the owner does not claim it within the time it is forfeited. The term arose in the Norman law, which enacted that a beast found on another's land, if unclaimed for a year and a day, belonged to the lord of the soil. It is otherwise a legal space of time.

YEAR-BOOKS contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the courts of common law. The printed volumes extend from the beginning of the reign of Edward II. to nearly the end of the reign of Henry VIII., a period of about 220 years; but in this series there are many omissions. These books are the first in the long line of legal reports in which England is so rich, and may be considered as, to a great extent, the foundation of our unwritten law, "Lex non scripta." In 1863 et seq., the year-books of 30 & 31 Edward I., 1302-3, were edited by Mr. A. J. Horwood, for the series of the Chronicles and Memorials published at the expense of the British government.

YELLOW FEVER, a dreadful American pestilence, made its appearance at Philadelphia, where it committed great ravages, A.D. 1699. It appeared in several islands of the West Indies in 1732, 1739, and 1745. It raged with unparalleled violence at Philadelphia in Oct., 1762; and most awfully at New York in the beginning of August, 1791. This fever again spread great devastation at Philadelphia in July, 1793, carrying off several thousand persons.—Hardie. It again appeared in Oct., 1797, and spread its ravages over the northern coast of America, Sept., 1798. It reappeared at Philadelphia in the summer of 1802; and broke out in Spain in Sept., 1803. The yellow fever was very violent at Gibraltar in 1804 and 1814; in the Mauritius, July, 1815; at Antigua in Sept., 1816; and it raged with dreadful consequences at Cadiz, and the Isle of St. Leon, in Sept., 1819. A malignant fever raged at Gibraltar in Sept., 1828, and did not terminate until the following year.

YEOMAN OF THE GUARD, a peculiar body of foot guards to the king's person, instituted at the corona-

* The year in the northern regions of Siberia and Lapland is described in the following calendar, given by a traveler: "June 23. Snow melts. July 1. Snow gone. July 9. Fields quite green. July 17. Plants at full growth. July 25. Plants in flower. Aug. 2. Fruits ripe. Aug. 10. Plants shed their seed. Aug. 18. Snow." The snow then continues upon the ground for about ten months, from Aug. 18th of one year to June 23d of the year following, being 309 days out of 365; so that while the three seasons of spring, summer, and autumn are together only fifty-six days, or eight weeks, the winter is of forty-four weeks' duration in these countries.

tion of Henry VII., Oct. 30, 1485, which originally consisted of fifty men under a captain. They were of a larger stature than other guards, being required to be over six feet in height, and were armed with arquebuses and other arms. The band was increased by Henry's successors to one hundred men, and seventy supernumeraries; and when one of the hundred died, it was ordered that his place should be supplied out of the seventy. They were clad after the manner of King Henry VIII.—Ischamole's Instit. This is said to have been the first permanent military band instituted in England. John, Earl of Oxford, was the first captain in 1486.—Beaumont's Pol. Index.

YEW-TREE (Taxus). The origin of planting yew-trees in church-yards was (these latter being fenced) to secure the trees from cattle, and in this manner preserve them for the encouragement of archery. A general plantation of them for the use of archers was ordered by Richard III., 1483.—Stow's Chronicles. Near Fountains Abbey, Yorkshire, were lately seven yew-trees called the Seven Sisters, supposed to have been planted before 1088; the circumference of the largest was thirty-four feet seven inches round the trunk. In 1351, a yew-tree was said to be growing in the churchyard of Gresford, North Wales, whose circumference was nine yards nine inches, being the largest and oldest yew-tree in the British dominions; but it is affirmed on traditional evidence that there are some of these trees in England older than the introduction of Christianity. The old yew-tree mentioned in the survey taken of Richmond palace in 1649 is said to be still existing.

YEZDEGIRD, OR PERSIAN ERA, was formerly universally adopted in Persia, and is still used by the Parsees in India, and by the Arabs, in certain computations. This era began on the 26th of June, A.D. 632, when Yezdegird was elected King of Persia. The year consisted of 365 days only, and therefore its commencement, like that of the Old Egyptian and Armenian year, anticipated the Julian year by one day in every four years. This difference amounted to nearly 112 days in the year 1075, when it was reformed by Jeleleddin, who ordered that in future the Persian year should receive an additional day whenever it should appear necessary to postpone the commencement of the following year, that it might occur on the day of the sun's passing the same degree of the ecliptic.

YINGLINGS (youths, or offshoots), descendants of the Scandinavian hero Odin, ruled Sweden till 850, when the last of the pontiff kings, Olaf Tretella, being expelled, led to the foundation of the Norwegian monarchy.

YOKE. The yoke is spoken of as a type of servitude throughout Scripture. The ceremony of making prisoners pass under it was practised by the Samnites toward the Romans, 321 B.C. See Caudine Forks. This disgrace was afterward inflicted by the Romans upon their vanquished enemies.—Dufresnoy.

YORK. The Eboracum of the Romans, and one of the most ancient cities of England.

Here Severus (A.D. 207), and here also Constantine kept courts, and his son Constantine the Great was born in 274, and proclaimed emperor, DUKES OF YORK.

1385. Edmund Plantagenet (fifth son of King Edward III.), created duke, Aug. 6; died 1402.
1406. Edward (his son) was degraded by Henry IV. in 1399, but restored in 1414; killed at Agincourt, 1415; succeeded by his nephew.
1415. Richard (son of Richard, earl of Cambridge, who was beheaded for treason in 1415) became regent of France in 1435; quelled the rebellion in Ireland in 1449; claimed the throne, and was appointed protector in 1454; his office was annulled, and he began the civil war in 1455, and was slain after his defeat at Wakefield in 1460.

1460. Edward (his son), afterward King Edward IV.
1474. Richard (his second son), said to have been murdered in the Tower, 1483.
1494. Henry Tudor, afterward Henry VIII.
1605. Charles Stuart, afterward Charles I.
1643. James Stuart (his second son), afterward James II.
1716. Ernest (brother of George I.), died 1728.
1760. Edward (brother of George III.), died 1767.
1784. Frederick (son of George III.), born Aug. 16, 1762; marries Princess Frederica of Prussia, Sept. 29, 1791; commands the British forces at Antwerp, April 8, 1793; present at the siege of Valenciennes, May 23; defeated at Dunkirk, Sept. 7; at Bois-le-Duc, Sept. 14; and at Boxtel, Sept. 17; appointed commander-in-chief, 1798; defeated near Alkmaar, Sept. 19 and Oct. 6, 1799; accused by Colonel Wardle of abuse of his patronage, he resigns, Jan. 27, 1809; becomes again commander-in-chief, 1811; strongly opposes the Catholic claims, 1825; dies Jan. 3, 1827.

YORK, ARCHBISHOPRIC OF. The most ancient metropolitan see in England, being, it is said, so made by King Lucius about 180, when Christianity was first partially established in England. The Bishop Eborius was present at the Council of Arles, 314. The see was overturned by the Saxons, was revived by Pope Gregory on their conversion, and Paulinus was made archbishop about 625. York and Durham were long the only two sees in the north of England, until Henry I. erected a bishopric at Carlisle, and Henry VIII. another at Chester. York was the metropolitan see of the Scottish bishops; but during the time of Archbishop Nevil, 1464, they withdrew their obedience, and had archbishops of their own. Much dispute arose between the two English metropolitans about precedence, as by Pope Gregory's institutions it was thought he meant that whichever of them was first confirmed should be superior: appeal was made to the court of Rome by both parties, and it was determined in favor of Canterbury. The Archbishop of York was allowed to style himself primate of England, while the Archbishop of Canterbury styles himself primate of all England. The province of York now contains the dioceses of York, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Sodor and Man, Manchester, and Ripon (which see). York has yielded to the Church of Rome eight saints and three cardinals, and to England twelve lord chancellors, two lord treasurers, and two lord presidents of the North. It is rated in the king's books, 39 Henry VIII., 1546, at £1609 19s. 2d. per annum.—Beaumont. Present income £10,000.

ARCHBISHOPS OF YORK SINCE 1500.

 1862. William Thomson, translated from Gloucester, PRESENT archbishop.

YORK MINSTER was erected at different periods, and on the site of former buildings. The first Christian church erected here, which appears to have been preceded by a Roman temple, was built by Edwin, king of Northumbria, of wood, in 625, and of stone about 635. It was damaged by fire in 741, and was rebuilt by Archbishop Albert about 780. It was again destroyed by fire in the year 1069, and rebuilt by Archbishop Thomas. It was once more burnt down in 1137, with St. Mary's Abbey, and 39 parish churches in York. Archbishop Roger began to build the choir in 1171; Walter Gray added the south transept in 1227; John de Romayne, the treasurer of the cathedral, built the north transept in 1260. His son, the archbishop, laid the foundation of the nave in 1291. In 1330, William de Melton built the two western towers, which were finished by John de Birmingham in 1342. Archbishop Thoresby, in 1361, began to rebuild the choir, in accordance with the magnificence of the nave, and he also rebuilt the lantern tower. Thus by many hands, and many contributions of multitudes on the promise of indulgences, this magnificent fabric was completed. It was first set on fire by Jonathan Martin, a lunatic, and the roof of the choir and its internal fittings destroyed, Feb. 2, 1829; the damage, estimated at £60,000, was repaired in 1832. An accidental fire broke out, which in one hour reduced the belfry to a shell, destroyed the roof of the nave, and much damaged the edifice, May 20, 1840.

YORK AND LANCASTER, WARS OF. See Roses.

YORK (Toronto), in Upper Canada, was captured by an American expedition under General Pike on the 27th of April, 1813. The Americans were about 1700 strong; the British numbered about 850, including 100 Indians, under General Sheaffe. The American loss occurred chiefly from the explosion of the British magazine, which had been set on fire. There were 52 killed and 228 wounded. General Pike was killed. The British lost 110 killed, 300 wounded, and 36 military and 4 naval officers and 250 privates became prisoners.

YORKTOWN (Virginia, United States). Lord Cornwallis had taken possession of Yorktown in Aug., 1781; but, after sustaining a disastrous siege, he was obliged to surrender his army, consisting of about 7000 men, to the allied armies of France and America, under the command of General Washington and Count Rochambeau, Oct. 19, 1781. This mischance was attributed to Sir Henry Clinton, who had not given the garrison the necessary succor they expected; and it mainly led to the close of the war. It was strongly fortified by the Confederates in the American Civil War, but surrendered to M'Clellan, May, 1862. See Peninsular Campaign.

YTTRIUM, a rare metal. The earth yttria was discovered by Professor Gadolin in a mineral at Ytterby, in Sweden, 1794. The metal was first obtained by Wöhler in 1823. It is of a dark gray color, and brittle.

YVRES (now Ivry, N.W. France), where a battle was fought, March 14, 1590, between Henry IV. of France, aided by his chief nobility, and the generals of the Catholic league, over whom the king obtained a complete victory.

Z.

ZAMA (near Carthage, N. Africa), the scene of the battle between the two greatest commanders in the world at the time, Hannibal and Scipio Africanus. The victory was won by Scipio, and was decisive of the fate of Carthage; it led to an ignominious peace the year after, which closed the second Punic War. The Romans lost about 2000 killed and wounded, while the Carthaginians lost in killed and prisoners more than 40,000; some historians make the loss greater; 202 B.C.

ZANTE. One of the Ionian Islands, which see.

ZANZALEENS. This sect rose in Syria, under Zanzale, 535; he taught that water baptism was of no efficacy, and that it was necessary to be baptized with fire, by the application of a red-hot iron. The sect was at one time very numerous.

ZE, ZOW, ZIERES. For ye, you, and yours. The letter z was retained in Scotland, and was commonly written for the letter y so late as the reign of Queen Mary, up to which period many books in the Scottish language were printed in Edinburgh with these words, 1543.

ZELA (N.E. Asia Minor), where Julius Caesar defeated Pharnaces, king of Pontus, son of Mithridates. Caesar, in announcing this victory, sent his famous dispatch to the senate of Rome in these words: "Veni, vidi, vici"—"I came, I saw, I conquered" (perhaps the shortest dispatch on record). This battle ended the war: Pharnaces escaped into Bosphorus, where he was slain by his lieutenant, Asander; Pontus was made a Roman province, and Bosphorus given to Mithridates of Pergamus, 47 B.C.

ZELL, Hanover. See Denmark, 1772.

ZEND-AVESTA, ancient sacred books of the Parsees, of which 3 out of 21 are extant. The age of these books is much disputed. Professor Max Müller says that the MSS. had been preserved by the Parsee priests at Bombay, where a colony of fire-worshippers had fled in the 10th century. Anquetil Duperron's French translation, from a modern Persian version, was published in 1771.

ZENO, SECT OF. See Stoics.

ZENOBIÀ, Queen of the East. See Palmyra.

ZENTA, in Hungary, the scene of a battle, where the Germans under Prince Eugene defeated the Turks, Sept. 11, 1697. This victory led to the peace of Carlowitz, ratified January, 1699.

ZINC. The ore of zinc, calamine, was known to the Greeks, who used it in the manufacture of brass. It is said to have been known in China also, and is noticed by European writers as early as 1231, though the method of extracting it from the ore was unknown for nearly five hundred years after. The metal zinc is first mentioned by Paracelsus (who died in 1541). A mine of zinc was discovered on Lord Ribblesdale's estate, Craven, Yorkshire, in 1809. Zincography was introduced in London shortly after the invention of lithography became known in England, in 1817. See Lithography. Zinc is much used in Voltaic batteries, and its application in manufactures has greatly increased of late years. It is often called spelter. See Photozincography.

ZIRCONIUM, the metallic base of the earth Zirconia, which was discovered by Klaproth in 1789; from this Berzelius obtained the metal in 1824. Zirconia is found in the sand of the rivers of Ceylon. The metal exists in the form of a black powder.

ZIZYPHUS VULGARIS. A shrub brought from the south of Europe about 1640. The Zizypus Paliurus shrub (Christ's Thorn) was brought from Africa before 1596. See Flowers.

ZODIAC. Its obliquity was discovered, its twelve signs named, and their situations assigned them by Anaximander, about 560 B.C. The Greeks and Arabians borrowed the zodiac from the Hindoos.—Sir W. Jones.

ZOLLVEREIN (Customs' Union), the name given to the German Commercial Union, of which Prussia is at the head. It began in 1818, and was gradually joined by nearly all the German states except Austria, and a treaty was signed March 22, 1833, which became the basis of the association. On Feb. 19, 1853, an important treaty of commerce and navigation, between Austria and Prussia, to last from Jan. 1854, to Dec., 1865, was signed, to which the other states of the Zollverein gave in their adhesion on April 5, 1853. In Nov., 1861, Prussia threatened to withdraw unless certain changes were made.

ZOOLOGY (from zōon, Greek for animal) is the division of biology which treats of animals. Aristotle (322-284 B.C.) is the founder of the science. Systems of classification have been made by John Ray (1628-1705), Charles Linné (1707-78), G. Buffon (1707-88), and George Cuvier (1769-1832).*

The Zoological Society of London (originally the Zoological Club) was founded in 1826, and its gardens in the Regent's Park were opened in April, 1827; the society was chartered March 27, 1829.

Dr. James Murie was appointed by the society to be their first "anatomical prosector," May 3, 1865.

On the demolition of Exeter Change in 1829, the menagerie of Mr. Cross was temporarily lodged in the King's Mews, whence it was removed to the Surrey Zoological Gardens, 1832.

The Zoological Gardens of Dublin were opened 1832. (See Aquarium, Hippopotamus, Giraffe, and Acclimatization).

ZORN DORFF, in Prussia, where a battle was fought between the Prussian and Russian armies; the former, commanded by the King of Prussia, obtained a victory over the forces of the czarina, whose loss amounted to 21,529 men, while that of the Prussians did not exceed 11,000, Aug. 25 and 26, 1758.

ZOUAVES AND FOOT CHASSEURS. When the French established a regency at Algiers in 1830, they hoped to find the employment of native troops advantageous, and selected the Zouaouas, a congregation of Arab tribes, famous for daring and skillful courage. In time, numbers of Red Republicans, and other enthusiastic Frenchmen, joined the regiments, adopting the costume, etc.: eventually the Africans disappeared from the ranks, and no more were added, they having been frequently guilty of treachery. The French Zouaves formed an important part of the army in the Crimean War, 1854-5.†

* The animal kingdom was divided by Linnaeus into six classes, viz.: Mammalia, which includes all animals that suckle their young; Aves, birds; Amphibia, or amphibious animals; Pisces, fishes; Insecta, insects; Vermes, worms; 1741. Cuvier, who died in Paris May 13, 1832, in his great work, Règne Animal, published in 1816, distributed the animals into four great divisions, the Vertebrata (ribbed); the Mollusca (soft bodied); the Articulata (jointed); and the Radiata (the organs disposed round a centre). In 1859, Professor Owen made known a system of arranging the class Mammalia according to the nature of their brains.

† The Zouave organization and drill were introduced into the Federal army in the great Civil War in America by Ephraim E. Ellsworth ZUINGLIANS, the followers of the reformer Ulrich Zuinglius, who at Zurich declaimed against the Church of Rome, and effected the same separation for Switzerland from the papal dominion which Luther did for Saxony. He procured two assemblies to be called; by the first he was authorized to proceed, by the second the ceremonies of the Romish Church were abolished, 1519. Zuinglius died in arms as a soldier, being slain in a skirmish against his popish opponents in 1531. The Zuinglians were also called Sacramentarians.

ZULPICH. See Tolbiac.

ZURICH was admitted a member and made head of the Swiss confederacy, 1351, and was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the Church of Rome. See Zuinglians. A grave-digger at Zurich poisoned the sacramental wine, by which eight persons lost their lives and many others were grievously injured, Sept. 4, 1776. The French were defeated here, losing 4000 men, June 5, 1799. The Imperialists were defeated by Massena, the former losing 20,000 men killed and wounded, Sept. 25, 1799. See Switzerland. On June 24, 1859, the Austrians were defeated by the allied French and Sardinian army at Solferino. Preliminaries of peace were signed at Villa Franca by the Emperors of Austria and France on July 12 following. A conference between the representatives of the powers concerned having been appointed, the first meeting took place on Aug. 8. After many delays, a treaty was signed on Nov. 11, and ratified Nov. 12. Lombardy was ceded to Sardinia; the formation of an Italian Confederation, under the presidency of the pope, was determined on, and the rights of the ex-sovereigns of Tuscany, Modena, and Parma were reserved. The formation of the kingdom of Italy in 1861 annulled the treaty of Zurich.

ZUTPHEN, in Holland. At a battle here, Sept. 22, 1586, between the Spaniards and the Dutch, the amiable Sir Philip Sidney, author of "Arcadia," was killed. He was serving with the English auxiliaries, commanded by the Earl of Leicester.

early in 1861. He was assassinated on May 24, same year, at Alexandria, just after taking down a secession flag.
